4. Character World has been removed completely, and I'm kinda happy with that. Character world was interesting, but it was just another long time sync that Disgaea really didn't need. (personal opinion there). Evilities are still here but they are somewhat different. Each class has 3 evilities to chose from and all have wildly beneficial effects. I can't possibly go into them all but they do change how combat works significantly. You have to know what evilities your enemies have (It shows it in combat so don't worry) and how to plan around them. For instance Dragons could be immune to wind, or they could gain benefits from others using wind skills. Evilities can also be taken from other classes via the Dark Assembly (I believe) If the characters like each other enough.

5. Weapon skills and Fortes are back, each class has certain skill with weapon types and learn skills faster with weapons they are familiar with. For example a warrior will learn Sword skills much faster than learning say Bow skills. Skills can be leveled by using them instead of spending mana on them like in D3 and D4. Personally I like and dislike this system. It's great for combat skills and feels more balanced. but other skills suffer majorly from this. Skills like Espoir, Shield, Heal, etc... you have to use to level them up... well Espoir (Cures Status Ailments) doesn't get used that often, forcing you to cast it for no reason just to level it up. So it has it's ups and down.

6. Master/Apprentice is also back, a Master can have Multiple Apprentices, and can even be an apprentice to someone else. One unit can only belong to one master. Having an apprentice gives stat boosts and things to the Master, while the apprentices gain the ability to use the Master's skills and spells. If they use it enough they can learn it and even use it without being an apprentice. They also Gain weapon skills faster, as well A higher combo/support rate with their master. If your units AREN'T being used as either Master or Apprentice you are doing it wrong as there are 0 downsides. When a character is created it automatically becomes an apprentice to the character that created it. So if I call the assembly with Laharl and make a Warrior, that warrior will be Laharl's Apprentice (you can change this in the menu)

7. Item and item shops have changed, slightly, but for the better. You are no longer limited to a 30 item inventory, you have the entire 999 item warehouse at your disposal at ALL times. Item shops also no longer have limited inventory, if you have unlocked it, they sell it and an infinite amount of it and you no longer have to leave the shop come back and hope they have it again. The shops and other item screens have also organized the items into Categories. Fist, Sword, Armor, Trinkets etc... all have their own tab. I LOVE that. and finally the armor and weapon shops have been combined into one shop, the Equipment shop.

Changes to the Dark Assembly. It has remained more or less the same in terms of what it's for, however the Character creation as well as A few other things have changed.

1. Each Meeting of the Assembly seems to have a "lead" senator, who appears behind you. These are the same as the Legendary senators from Previous games, but they always seem to be there this time.
2. The Senators vote faster (Just saves time)
3. Characters no longer need to be reincarnated to obtain their next rank. In previous games when you unlocked the next rank of a monster (There are usually 6 ranks) you had to reincarnate your character up to the next rank (Start at level 1 again) now this did give you great bonuses and things, but now you have to level it up again. NO MORE! You can pass a bill for a Promotion for a certain amount of mana, and become the next rank. Your Aptitudes increase and everything, the only bonus you don't get is the increase to base stats. Reincarnation is STILL there, but it doesn't feel required for the main game, only post game things or cross class things.
4. While it's not technically a Dark Assembly change, the fact that you have access to all your items helps. A lot.
5. When creating a new character you now get the choice of Alternative colors as well as their personality. Now the Personality isn't so much new as it's changed. Each personality has a different style of voice for the character as well as a different evility. At first I wasn't happy with that, I wanted Evility 3 but voice 1, but having them linked together I had to choose Voice 3 and evility 3. Turns out you can change their Evility or their voice seperately via the Dark Assembly for free, infinitely after the character is made. You can also change their name, and color for free and as many times as you wish, so have fun!

Changes to Overworld

Two new things have been added to the "hub" world that I wanted to mention. The first is the Dojo.

The Demon Dojo is the replacement for Character world. You can assign your units to train in various stats. Hp, Sp, Atk, Def, Int, res, Spd, hit. Each one will increase the amount of points that unit gains when it levels by a certain %. The started is 5 % as the training levels increase so to does the %, as well as the amount of units that can be training in it at the same time (At the start it's 1). There are others too but I haven't unlocked them so I don't quite know what they do.

The Cheat shop is the other thing that was added. This allows for the manipulation of certain things. From Item world routes to EXP gained. Now it's not like you can jsut increase the amount of EXP, HL(money), Mana, and Skill EXP gained... you have to sacrifice one to raise another. So I could set it to 80 % HL and 120 % EXP. or 90 % mana, 90 $ HL, 110 % EXP and 110 % Skill EXP. It's kinda nice because if I don't need money, I can just put it all in EXP etc... As you progress into the game you can remove more and more points from one and put it in another. At the moment I can only set HL to 80 % and EXP to a max of 120 % I believe. You can also disable EXP all together, disable support etc... Item world has also changed a bit. If you don't know what it is, then this section will probably not be useful since You will have little idea what I mean.

1. You start off in innocent town, you chose a boat to go in and depart. The boat determines how far down into the item you can go. 30, 60, or 100 floors etc... each boat has a different value. You will sail to a different island each floor, and you will always start on the boat. The Islands are still randomly generated.
2. There are less Enemy units, however THIS time around killing the enemy units actually adds to the items stats. The more you kill the higher % the stats increase, up to 15 % I believe
3. Secret rooms have been removed, well not so much removed as they are randomly encountered between floors, not as a separate exit from the current floor. After you finish a floor there is a chance the next floor will be a bonus room. The rooms vary just like they did in previous games.
4. the 10th floor once again is a boss floor. However this time you can't multi-kill the bosses. You only kill them once. And you are guaranteed to go to Innocent down afterwards (I believe) Innocent town now has a shop in it.
5. Item World Assembly has also changed, you no longer need to be in the item itself to call the assembly you do that from the item world person int he overworld. On top of that you don't use Mana to call for bills, you use HL.

6. Reverse Pirating has been replaced with Bonus Rooms... that I believe do the exact same thing as reverse pirating without the insanely ridiculously powerful enemies. Could be wrong though.

7. Last but not least! Getting to floor 30 of a common item will reset the item to floor 0, increase the items rarity to rare (Remember that whole bit about item sets? Winks) and lets you go back into the item. Clearing a Rare item to floor 60 will reset the floors back to 0, then increase the rarity to Legendary. Get to floor 100 of that and... well I'm not actually sure. Probably resets to 0 again. If not, well you certainly have a damn powerful item.

As a final point there are a few more things I wish to note, this is again for Disgaea fans.

There is no X-Dimension/Dark World in this game, and the Land Of Carnage is unlocked automatically at the games end. This is big. big. BIG... at least for me who has never managed to unlock the land of Carnage due to it being ridiculously complicated to unlock in previous games. And last, but certainly not least... THE GAME HAS AN AUTOSAVE!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!! WOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOO (I am a slave to Autosave... I love it so very VERY much.)

The Autosave will not overwrite your manual save, and if you don't want it you can leave it disabled.

I have played the game for 6 hours thus far, and I have enjoyed the gameplay a great deal. I think Given a little time to dive deeper into it, it will be my favorite Disgaea game, gameplay wise. Disgaea 2 still remains my favorite Character and Story wise, probably always will. but with Monster Mounting, The new Itme World, the new UI, the new... everything The game is just an amazing improvement all around for Disgaea fans. If you are new to the series, this is actually a GREAT title to start with as the features are less than thsoe of previous titles and are a lot easier to manage/understand while at the same time not being insanely simple. From the Crazy, mad attacks (I mean come on... The Prinny Attack is a replica of Bomberman from the old days just do damage...) to the silly Dialog and over the top characters and world... there isn't much negative to really say about the game. It is still a grindy grind grind GRIND game... but it's better at it than the previous entries thus far.

I give Disgaea D2: A Brighter Darkness 9 Pirouetting Prinnyes/10 Dood. And I can not WAIT to get home and play some more this evening. Gotta level up my Prinnyes dood!

Ghost in the Shell review (2000-12-13 05:42)

An existential action anime? That's what Ghost In The Shell, a.k.a. Kokakukidotai (Shell Mobile Force) is, with animation sporting top-of-the-line computer imagery in the Bladerunner-like metropolis of Newport, but that's secondary compared to the underlying intellectual theme.

Major Kusanagi Motoko is a skillfully trained cyborg assassin in Newport's Section 9, who's taking out a diplomat illegally trying to give immunity to a listed programmer, demonstrates her training, including an amazing moment when she dives off a building, picks off her target, and via a thermoptic camouflage (i.e. portable cloaking device), vanishes from sight.

She and the members of her team, consisting of the mostly human Togusa, Ichikawa, and Batou, a burly no-nonsense blond cyborg with electronic eye implants, are trying to track down the Puppet Master. The Puppet Master is a master hacker who hacks into people's brains and uses them for his dirty work, presumably to carry out espionage or terrorism, leaving his puppets no memory of their infiltration. One of his puppets keeps using a public computer to try to infiltrate the brain of his wife, who is divorcing him and wants custody of their child. When he's picked up, he is told by Section 9 that his wife, child, and divorce are all false memories imprinted by the Puppet Master, causing further distress to the man when he is told the fake memories can't be erased.

However, there are two conflicts going on. One is Kusanagi's mission to hunt down the Puppet Master. The other and the one with a deeper meaning is the search for her identity within the scheme of a whole, or rather, something beyond her individual self, highlighted by her words taken from the Book of Corinthians: "For now we through a glass, darkly." This reflects an earlier statement when she says in observation of a victim of the Puppet Master, "all data that exists is both fantasy and reality. Whichever it is, the data a person collects in a lifetime is a tiny bit compared to the whole." A postmodernist flair is introduced when the Puppet Master says "While memories may as well be the same as fantasy, it is by these memories that mankind exists."

The question thus is, is it possible for the soul to exist in a highly technological world, where special operatives have cyborg shells, metabolic control systems, ESP, and cyber-brains?

The search is also symbolized when she surfaces, and the animated image of her rising up to meet her reflection, representing her true self. She wonders if she has a ghost, an animating soul or spirit. In looking at the construction of her body in the opening credits, one sees that she's heavily mechanized, with an outer layer of flesh surrounding her.

Her attempt at defining the self begins with a unique face, voice, childhood memories, feelings for the future, and the set of mental processes producing a consciousness that is "me." However, upon a discovery involving the Puppet Master, she further worries that what if there wasn't a real "me," that "I believe I exist based only on what my environment tells me. ... What if a computer brain can generate a ghost and harbor a soul? On what basis then do I believe in myself?" In other words, what if there is no higher power to connect to, bringing into mind the word "religion," which means "to reconnect to."

The action sequences aren't extreme, ultraviolent, or gratuitous in the chase sequences, but are moderate, that is until the heavy artillery is brought out, at which point glass, metal, and rock starts to fly. A very intelligent, thought-provoking, one-of-a-kind existential, soul-searching anime, with Kusanagi despite its cyborg dominance showing some human traits.

Ghost in the Shell: Stand Alone Complex Solid State Society review | 8.5 (2000-12-13 14:53)

Stand Alone Complex- Solid State Society. It has been two years since "Major" Motoko Kusanagi left Section 9, a Special Forces unit assigned to cyber crime and answerable only to the Prime Minister of Japan in 2034. Family man Togusa is now leading a much larger force. Chief Aramaki has visibly aged in the job, walking painfully with a cane and attended by Proto. Batou has become a brooding, depressed commander of the training school. All wonder if the Major will ever return.

This time around our heroes must deal with the seemingly unconnected rash of suicides, mass child abductions, conspiracy involving elderly healthcare, a "Wizard Class" hacker called the Puppeteer, and as always, corporate malfeasance and political wrangling. All tidied up with a terrific subtle "what if?" ending.

At $3.2 million SSS is one of the most expensive TV movie anime's yet, and all the money is up on the screen.

Increased detail in both background and foreground (missing in 2nd Gig). "Busy" scenes found only in big budget movies. Naturally smooth movement by people and machines. Small touches like the Nissan concept cars, wrinkled clothing, reflections and small lighting effects, raindrops, "Handheld" camera angles, etc. There are plenty of "remember this?" scenes and other touchstones from the series, including great music by Yoko Kanno, with Origa singing the opening and closing songs. Motoko's face is even cuter than ever and the rest of her- you just don't mess with perfection.

Ghost in the Shell:Solid State Society is an exciting,intelligent,complex and very interesting film.This movie is a real masterpiece.Director Kenji Kamiyama tells an excellent story in this movie.The animation is perfect.Solid State Society is a very intelligent entertainment,which makes us think at the same time it totally entertains us.This masterpiece is a pleasure to any lover of the cinema.

.In the first category,I would put almost all of the teen anime with melodramatic stories,girls using the school uniform,tragic heroes,giant robots,surrealistic humor and magic creatures.In the second category,I would put more serious movies made to adults where the narrative has a complexity and emotional impact: Cowboy Bebop and Ghost in the Shell.

Overall 4.5/5

Eureka 7 review (2000-12-14 05:45)

If you have never seen Eureka 7 you need to see it, period. If you are a fan of Evangelion, you need to see it, period. If you love crazy mecha action, you need to see it, period.

I'm not kidding. This show has me thinking . . . dare I even say it. . . that it is even better than my beloved Evangelion. I never thought there would be anything that could ever come along that would make me even suffer a fleeting thought like that but with Eureka 7, my mind has been flooded with that realization. . . Eureka 7 may be the greatest anime series of all-time.

Now it has to be said, there are a lot of similarities between Eva and Eureka 7, and you can tell that BONES was highly influenced when creating this story by the classic Angel series. How only the "chosen" can pilot the Nirvash (just like the 1st, 2nd and 3rd child in Eva) and there seems at least at the beginning to be another alien race that wants to destroy mankind (like the Angels in Eva) and that the subject of rebirth for mankind (the Third Impact). But Eureka 7 seems to run with these themes and tie them all together with one of the most heart-wrenching love stories I have ever seen. Pure brilliance.

And I have to say that I have watched the series both with the Eng subtitles and with the Eng dub and I have to say the English translation on the dub is great and perhaps delivers an even more moving performance from the voice actors. I have never teared up more at an anime. Weird. What always got to me was during the English dub at the end of every episode Renton and Eureka would both say in unison "To be continued. . ." but in a way and tone that reflects how the episode ends emotionally. At the end of many episodes they sounded happy, chipper, excited, relieved, worried. . . it really let you know how the characters were feeling.

But what really got to me was the end of episode 47 I think. They had such a sound of hopelessness in their voices like everything was done. . . and then at the end of episode 49 . . . there was only Renton uttering those words. I have never been more emotionally invested in the characters of an anime series in my life and it may be because they reel you in with 50 episodes!

Wolf's Rain review (2000-12-14 22:39)

This has a very unusual plot line without a doubt, however, I am of the opinion that if the plot had not been as unusual as it was (wolves appearing as humans, searching for paradise) that viewers wouldn't have gotten quite the same feeling from the show, it's sort of hard to describe. I went into this thinking I would be watching an unusual action flick that simply wanted to grab audiences by saying: "look we have wolves in our story!", thinking I would be forced to give up from the awkwardness of having "wolves," and that that the writers wouldn't be able to correctly compensate.

I was, to say the least, extraordinarily surprised.

Throughout the series the characters are truly easy to connect to. They all interlace and mesh, they fit together well and are somewhat of polar opposites, which makes for a great altogether feeling. In the beginning of the series I felt a little bored, but only for a little while. As soon as the second episode ended I was craving for more. The storyline is not for everyone, some would get bored with it. However, the fair amount of action coupled with the short (essentially 26 episode) series means that you won't be dealing with monotonous amounts of action. Overall the story is VERY original and definitely interesting, I thoroughly enjoyed it. If you like stories that can truly cause an emotional response, then this series is for you. It is extremely moving and deeply intense in its imagery.

The story manages to stay simple, while explicating something extremely different than the norm. All while doing so using characters that could not possibly be easy for a writer to accurately carve. I mean, what would a wolf be like in human form? really? You won't find any dull or pointless characters here-I think they nailed it personally.

About halfway through the series you really start feeling for the characters, it's then that you realize that the characters have really gotten to you-they actually mean something.

As the end draws closer, you really begin to feel the darkness and dreariness of the close. Then, as the end collapses, I can say that I for one shed a tear, and not because the series ended. I believe the series was a perfect length (30 episodes, a storyline lasting for 26 with 4 recap episodes-bleh). The storyline progresses well and there are not lulls where the characters are running around the country doing nothing useful, they are always going for their objective. As suddenly as you begin to become interested and pay attention, the action starts, and then all of a sudden you're at the end of the series-crying for each one of the characters. It's like a well written book, it's not too long, it's not too short, but just right, it tells the story and then ends.

A MAJOR contributor to the series was the audio/soundtrack, it truly made for a more than just wonderful experience, it made me feel the emotions of the story. I have only come across a few audio tracks that rival the ones in this series, those written by John Williams, (Star Wars, Harry Potter, and others), and the soundtrack from 3:10 to Yuma. The soundtrack from this was just simply staggering. I actually downloaded it right after hearing the "heavens not enough" song near the end of the series.

The art portrayed in this can be at times simple and yet beautiful. Overall the art throughout was very consistent and well made, I'm not going to say that it was unbelievable, but it was rather good. Although, the picture of the arctic wolf laying in the snow with its eyes half opened was simply amazing, and I wish I could get hold of a high quality version for use as a wallpaper. (edit: I actually got a hold of a high quality version, google images!)

I would like to note: if you watch this series, the original series was 26 episodes, then the studio released 4 extra episodes on DVD. These extra episodes were to make up for 4 episodes that were put into the series which were simply recaps of the past events in the series-a complete waste of time. If you watch this series, you MUST watch the 4 episodes released onto DVD, you will not have truly experienced this series until you have watched the last 4 episodes.

Thanks to the simple yet deep characters, the secrets kept about each up until the end, the few number of main characters (protagonists-8), the unbelievable mind-blowing soundtrack, and the rather good art, this series was an overall stunner and will be recommended by me to everyone I know. I'm giving it 9*, I was going to give it 8, but I have just realized that I haven't seen anything that quite matches up, so it gets a 9.

Funimation has taken one of its most well respected mecha franchises and decided to give it digital remastering treatment for an upcoming Complete Series box set release.

Coming in at a total runtime of 320 minutes, Full Metal Panic! The Second Raid (TSR) The Complete Series spans 3-discs packaged in a pair of thin packs within a nice cardboard outer slipcase. As with the previous release, the set comes complete with the TSR OVA, Episode 000, 7-part featurette (scouting in Hong Kong), textless songs and a crop of Funimation anime trailers.

Language options are quite thorough with English (Dolby Digital 5.1 Surround or original broadcast Stereo) and Japanese (Dolby Digital 5.1 Surround or original broadcast Stereo) with the option of running English subtitles below either language track choice.

The program wears an appropriate TV 14 rating due to some violent sequences, themes of conflict, and a bit of non-suggestive female (incestual) nudity.

In my opinion the mark of a solid piece of sequel anime is a show's ability to not only present new material but to also seamlessly intertwine it with the plot of the original. Enter Full Metal Panic! The Second Raid (TSR) from anime master workers, Funimation. This gorgeous set represents the proper formula for improving upon the season before it (which just so happens to be the first of the series) without pulling the story off onto an unrelated tangent.

The Second Raid follows the exploits of mercenary soldier Sousuke Sagara who, right from the beginning, does an adequate job of fulfilling his undercover mission as a regular high school student. Unlike the first season, which focused more on the importance of female-lead character Kaname Chidori, this time the viewer is treated to a bit more sympathetic take on the almost child-like innocence of Sousuke. While their hot and cold romance still forms the backbone of the tale, there is no shortage of political motivation or interesting characters to accompany the action. While Sousuke resumes his meteoric rise to the title of Sergeant for the paramilitary outfit called Mithril, the major struggle being presented finds Mithril locked in battle with the terrorist group Amalgam. In truth, and despite how well the good guys are presented here, it's tough not to find the bad guys terribly interesting. Among these is a lesbian pair of twin sister assassins, the enigmatic Leonard Testarossa (who just so happens to be the brother of Mithril's own cheery colonel, Teletha) and his extremely wicked robotic enforcers. Last but certainly not least is the lead villain Gates who, quite frankly, captures the concept of full on insanity in animated form like something American animators can only dream of achieving through The Joker.

And since Full Metal Panic! initially hooked me with its near-flawless use of mecha, it's only proper that I take a moment to recognize the simple truth that TSR not only picks up where the first season left off, it may even supercede the robotic combat at times. Notable here is the ongoing struggle for Sousuke to make full use of the full abilities of his unit, the Arbalest, and its emotion controlled Lambda Driver. In my opinion the FMP series succeeds where other robot shows fail in both the mobility of the robots (called Arm Slaves or AS' for short) is in their sheer speed and maneuverability. Right from the beginning of the very first episode viewers are treated to an incredible display of AS stealth, speed, and power. It's cinematic showmanship in the purest form and enough to give even diehard anime fans the chills.

Although not entirely essential to the overall plot progression, I should mention that another Arm Slave, the M9 Falke, makes a few appearances that just dazzle with eerie coolness.

The discs themselves contain no shortage of bonus entertainment. The complete 13-episode series is presented across three discs in uncut, digitally remastered glory with dialog coming in the selectable form of English, Japanese or in original broadcast format with English subtitles. While the series itself technically consisted of 13 episodes, Funimation packed both a mini-bonus episode (complete with a scene that had this reviewer actually laughing out loud) and a conclusion OVA full-length episode as well. There is a 7-part featurette entirely in Japanese with English subtitles that does a few interesting things whether they were intentional or not. The first of which is that this section provides an unrivaled look at the Hong Kong lifestyle complete with unlimited comparisons to how life differs there from life in a typical US city. Next it paints the show's creative staff in an entirely different light. I'm guilty of stereotyping anime writers, producers, artists, and directors as moody, withdrawn and slightly disturbed individuals but nothing could be further from the truth with the down-to-earth team responsible for FMP. Finally, anime may be known for an unsurpassed level of detail but never is this reality made clearer than when the viewer is offered a chance to look at the actual Hong Kong locations that inspired the backgrounds of the show. It's downright mind-boggling and a testament to the amount of work that goes into putting a series like this together!

Additionally the set contains a comical little segment in which our creative team takes a trip to a Japanese Self-Defense Force expo for inspiration on the military equipment that appears throughout the series. There are Japanese (English subtitled) commentary tracks across every single episode from several of the show's voice actors and finally the set offer textless versions of the show's theme songs.

The truth is that it is very difficult if not impossible to come away from this presentation without having taken something worth remembering. The anime itself is rich, deep, and oftentimes silly enough to warrant a chuckle but there's something here even for those who wouldn't consider themselves fans of the genre. The creative process and attention to detail is downright awe-inspiring.

Mobile Suit Gundam Wing 9 (2000-12-16 14:25)

While I understand that the point of a review is to inform, I am honestly disappointed in the ones posted by my peers. Most of the reviews are either blindly positive or blindly negative. I hope that this review proves to be informative and unbiased, so that it attracts the attention of interested parties.

The plot of Gundam Wing is standard fare for the epic Gundam saga: in the near future, orbiting space colonies are unfairly repressed by a greedy terrestrial government. On the anniversary of a great colonial leader's death, five young rebels go to Earth to wage guerilla warfare on the Earth Alliance. Their weapons: Gundams, giant humanoid battle machines of immense power. As the five boys fight for independence, the Alliance is overthrown by OZ, a secret society run by a powerful military-industrial complex that has been pulling the strings all along. Soon after, the Gundam pilots, their civilian allies, and like-minded members of OZ join forces to take down the warring factions and bring real peace.

With the characters, we have a group of young people who are highly misunderstood by the anime community. Heero Yuy, pilot of Wing Gundam, is a teenage soldier who's been trained to keep his emotions in check to the point where almost seems inhuman. On the civilian side is Relena Darlian, an introverted girl whose lonely upper-class childhood has left her seeking real friendship. The connection that begins with their chance encounter on a beach eventually leads to great emotional growth in them both, as Heero learns to live with his humanity - and his mistakes - and Relena becomes a more assertive, well-rounded person. Completing this classic triangle is ace pilot Zechs Marquise, Relena's long-lost brother, who entered the military so he could exact revenge for the slaying of their parents and the destruction of their homeland. Aiding Heero in his battles are the other four Gundam pilots: the cheerful Duo Maxwell, the somber Trowa Barton, the caring Quatre Winner, and the brash Zhang Wu Fei. On the side of OZ, we have the anachronistically noble Treize Khushrenada, his multi-faceted aide Lady Une, Zechs' old friend Lucrezia Noin, and Dorothy Catalonia, Relena's war-loving rival. Rounding out the main cast are the civilians: rebel soldier Sally Po, the Maganac Corps (a group of soldiers allied to Quatre, junk dealer Howard, and the "mad" scientists who built the Gundams.

The story is carried out pretty well. Most older Gundam series have the problem that they focus on the main character so much that it almost seems like the world revolves around him. With Wing, time is spent with a large number of varying characters, giving us a better picture of the After Colony world. The characters are well-written and exhibit a lot of growth, keeping with the central theme of communication between people. The mechanical designs are skillfully handled by three Gundam veterans: Kunio Okawara, Hajime Katoki, and Junya Ishigaki. The soundtrack features slick pop tunes by Two-Mix and a large number of well-orchestrated background tracks that underscore the action perfectly.

Admittedly, there are some pacing problems (such as two consecutive clip shows), but it all evens out in the end. A lot of people like to trash certain characters (Relena in particular), but as I've seen, most of this springs from their forming an opinion of the characters within their first five minutes on screen and never changing it. Some people complain that the Gundams are too powerful, ignoring the fact that they HAVE to be strong to fight entire armies by themselves. Also, while some say that Wing is "a complete rip-off of the original series", it's actually more original than Gundam Seed, a more recent addition to the family. And there is a bit much in the way of stock footage, but that can be expected with almost any anime.

There's another stumbling block, though: a disproportionate amount of people insist that the entire male cast is homosexual. Despite what the fangirls may say, this is not official. The actual series, and its sequels, show Heero and Relena as very close, with subtle hints at a deeper relationship than the princess and her knight in shining armor.

So, what's the final verdict? Personally, I love this series, so obviously I'm going to recommend it. But I will say this: if you decide to watch Gundam Wing based on my comments, ignore everything you read or hear about it. Watch the series with an open mind and no preconceptions. Don't listen to anyone else, because in the end, the opinion that matters the most is your own.

Full Metal Panic review (2000-12-17 05:55)

I just received this set and have watched through roughly 4 episodes and a little bit.

For those that don't know, Full Metal Panic (or FMP) is a show from early 2000 based on a series of short novels. The story involves a boy soldier (well, mercenary), sent by a secret organization to protect a girl who is known to be a "Whispered." Being a "Whispered" means that the person holds knowledge of "black technology" without really knowing they know it. Mostly it's about Sagara Sosuke, the boy soldier, being clumsy with people and having an obvious crush on the girl he is supposed to be protecting. The feeling is mutual and the girl he is protecting, Chidori Kaname, is just as awkward in dealing with Sosuke.

Giant robot action is also included as a sort of bonus. Think of the show as a romantic comedy with serious drama and military action thrown in.

In terms of the Blu Ray, this release is an upscale of a standard definition release as the studio that animated it, Gonzo, was only animating in SD at the time of its release. Either way, a proper software upscale done on a Blu Ray will always look better than an upscale done through hardware (watching a DVD via the PS3 upscaled to 1080p for instance). This release is no exception.

The nice thing here is that the opening sequence is unaffected by the upscale this time around, unlike Funimation's release of Full Metal Panic! The Second Raid Box Set [Blu-ray] where the opening was improperly encoded and skips frames.

Picture quality is nothing short of amazing. Crystal clear and from everything I can tell, there are no artifacts or other weirdness brought in from the upscale. If you had this on DVD and want an upgrade in picture quality, this is a worthy purchase as it looks perfect. If upscaled DVD looks good to you, well there may be no point in upgrading to Blu Ray. Something to keep in mind is that this show was originally done in the 4:3 aspect ratio (SD). The opening, while widescreen, isn't anamorphic and wasn't actually animated in HD, so it will always contain bars at the top and bottom of the picture. This is as it was originally animated and FUNimation has taken no liberties to try and stretch it to a widescreen format, which is appreciated.

The opening and endings are the same as the ADV DVD release so the opening/ending title cards are all in English. If you're looking for the Japanese title cards, you'll need to purchase the Japanese releases to have Japanese title cards as they are not included in any ADV or FUNimation release.

In terms of audio, you have 2 options. You can watch the show in Stereo Dolby True HD in spoken Japanese (the original show was 2.0 stereo in Japan, so you are getting the audio as originally intended by the Japanese producers for the Japanese market) and you are also given the option of Dolby True HD 5.1 in spoken English. When ADV released the series oh so many years ago, they upgraded the 2.0 audio to a 5.1 mix in the US. The result in English, for me, is a mixed result as much of the time it still feels like a stereo mix. I also generally watch Anime in Japanese, so I was really just swapping around during action sequences to see how the channel separation sounds and it's good, but nothing amazing.

Overall the audio sounds pretty good. There are no drop outs or other audio issues and the added bitrate afforded by Blu Ray and True HD, but then, there weren't really any issues with the original DVD mixes either.

Some nice extras are included, including one that wasn't in the original single release from ADV (nor was it included in previous ADV sets). The new extra is the interview with the show's producers and original author of the novels. This was recorded for the Japanese Blu Ray release (or possibly to air during the re-airing of the series on Japanese TV, I'm not sure), I believe, so it actually is encoded in HD, 1080i. It's a look back on the show's release and is really good.

There is something missing from the extras. The original DVD release included some production sketches in video form. These do not exist on this release, which means it isn't "complete," however they weren't amazing. It is disappointing they aren't here though.

You have 8 episodes per disc, on 3 discs. I was worried there would be audio or video issues trying to cram so many episodes on a disc, however the bit rates are high throughout and it really looks quite amazing.

If you love the series and want the release with the best video quality yet released, this is the one to pick up. If you need to have all the extras, you'll need this release (or the DVD equivalent) and the original ADV release for the production sketches.

If you've never seen the show and don't own a previous version, this is the one to get.

I tend not to drop a bunch of comments, but I read a few of the responses on "Full Metal Panic review".

I actually do have a few questions for you if you don't mind. Is it simply me or do some of these responses look like they are written by brain dead folks? :-P And, if you are posting at additional social sites, I would like to keep up with you. The Wire Review (2000-12-17 08:56)

Imagine a show that every critic on the planet loves. Imagine a show so deeply layered that it makes every other drama seem simple. Imagine a show where each character is equally important. Imagine a show that reinvented itself every season, yet still felt like it was part of the world it created from the outset. Imagine a show so complex that you will always discover something new the next time around.

Doesn't this sound like perfection to you? Trust me, it is, in more ways than you can fathom.

THE WIRE is a show so meticulously crafted and executed that it would take me a dozen reviews to scratch the surface of what makes it great. After catching the very first episode on HBO, I immediately bought the 1st season. The rest, as they say, is history.

I'm so afraid to ruin anything that I don't even want to give away characters' names. To even let you go in expecting certain traits from a character would spoil the fun. So instead, I'm deliberately being vague about what occurs. If you've never heard about this series, you deserve go in cold.

But I'll give you a few details, starting with the very first scene. THE WIRE begins when a detective is questioning a young hoodlum who witnessed a murder. The detective asks why the guy and his friends allowed the victim to continue rolling dice, after he'd been known to snatch the money & run. The scene closes when the kid says, "Got to, man. This America."

Then the show begins its title sequence, in which The Blind Boys of Alabama's cover of "Way Down In The Hole" plays over a montage of seemingly random clips of police activity & urban life. But as you'll learn the more you see this title sequence (and song), this montage is actually filled with clues, both literal and metaphorical. The greatest crime dramas throw clues in your face without telling you how important they are. Believe me, L.A. CONFIDENTIAL, one of the greatest films of all time with its labyrinthine plot, has nothing on THE WIRE. And we're only just getting started. What you'll also notice from the opening scene is the dialogue. It actually took me two viewings to find out what the detective and the dice-roller were saying. As if that wasn't enough, I eventually had to turn on the English subtitles just to find out what each character was saying. The dialogue flows so naturally that THE WIRE never feels like a TV drama. There are no scenes where the characters recap what happened in the previous episode, unless the characters would actually take a moment to remind each other. This sounds like a challenge, and indeed it is. THE WIRE requires (and deserves) your undivided attention. Pause if you have to. Rewind if you have to. Use the subtitles if you have to. Many have called THE WIRE "a visual novel", and they couldn't be more right. You see how much attention I've given to just the first few minutes? Guess what, the entire series clocks in at 63 hours.

So, what's the premise of the series? The first season's main story begins when a team of Baltimore police is assembled to take down one of the city's high-profile drug dealers. The investigators and surveillance teams endure what real cops would endure: long hours, cold trails, bad weather, tedious paperwork, crummy offices, and worse...smart criminals. THE WIRE gives the justice officers an equal amount of screen time as the targets they pursue. The dealers aren't delightfully vicious or glamorous in the least. Sort of like the Corleone Family or the protagonists in GOODFELLAS, THE WIRE portrays its criminals as guys who either can't do anything else for a living, or refuse to do anything else for a living. The series goes even deeper, as we're engaged in the lives of judges & lawyers, homicide detectives & their office-dwelling superiors, drug kingpins & their corner workers, and even the homeless. Calling this "epic" is an understatement. If you're as interested in the urban drama as you are in the police procedural, then you're on the right track. Don't worry, you will get to see the cops bust a few doors and arrest a few thugs, but just be aware each event is treated as ordinarily and naturally as anything else in THE WIRE. To the characters, these events are just another day.

Now bear in mind, I've only given a little info on the first season! I won't give away any details, but Season Two continues in the exact opposite way you'd expect a sequel to. The cops and criminals shared equal halves of TV time on Season One, but for the seasons that follow, they share equal parts with a completely new side of Baltimore. Just wait until THE WIRE continues through its next few seasons, it gets even more deliciously complex. If you think Season One sounds like a beastly Rubik's Cube, wait until you get a load of Season Two, not to mention the seasons afterwards. After all, you can't predict how a single story is going to proceed if you're too blindsided by how it begins. One of the most interesting aspects is that slowly over time, THE WIRE becomes more than a crime drama — the series evolves into a multi-layered epic, where crime is only part of the picture. Each of the five seasons feels like its own individual story, but naturally connects with the season that comes before and after it.

I don't want you to be discouraged by this onslaught of convoluted storytelling. There is a method to the madness. Audiences (including me) are too used to knowing where we are at every given point of the story. THE WIRE purposefully refrains from the kind of clarity we're used to. This challenge that will stimulate your mind in ways that no other TV show has. In so many ways, it's the kind of entertainment we've always wanted: Surprising yet Natural — isn't that always the goal?

THE WIRE is so great that everyone is going to take something different from it. This show can be interpreted in a million ways. Nobody is right, and nobody is wrong. How can that be? Well, creator David Simon is to be credited for this neutrality. Simon is as hands-on as any other TV series producer, writer, or creator. Every single aspect of the show is exactly what he wanted it to be. THE WIRE was never the victim of a writer's strike, or cancelled seasons, or poor broadcasting schedules, or any other excuse. If there is a character or story arc you don't care for, it isn't Simon's fault; your personal taste just doesn't mesh with it. Sure, I have one or two nitpicks about what THE WIRE should've been in my eyes, but not once did I believe it was for a lack of focus. For example, one particular season takes a more didactic approach to the series. We witness moral dilemmas with an ambitious mayor, unethical cops, and newspaper staff — all tackle the immortal question, "Do the ends justify the means?" This more black-and-white angle is exactly what David Simon wanted to use. I preferred a more gray-shaded tale, but Simon decided that this tale needed a more direct statement. Now, even though this isn't my preference, I overlooked my own criticisms because this season was built this way. There are a couple of other little things that might not sit well with some viewers, notably how the "star" of the show's cast disappears for most of one season (don't worry, you'll know it's coming before it happens). The point is that THE WIRE never once strayed from its intended path.

I think that's what I'm going to take away most from this show: It tells every story it wants to tell. It answers every question it poses, unless we're meant to ponder. It forces us to sympathize with those we'd normally condemn, and to relate to those we'd usually ignore. This television drama is a masterful work of art, from the page to the screen.

I'm so afraid to ruin anything that I don't even want to give away characters' names. To even let you go in expecting certain traits from a character would spoil the fun. So instead, I'm deliberately being vague about what occurs. If you've never heard about this series, you deserve go in cold.

But I'll give you a few details, starting with the very first scene. THE WIRE begins when a detective is questioning a young hoodlum who witnessed a murder. The detective asks why the guy and his friends allowed the victim to continue rolling dice, after he'd been known to snatch the money & run. The scene closes when the kid says, "Got to, man. This America."

Then the show begins its title sequence, in which The Blind Boys of Alabama's cover of "Way Down In The Hole" plays over a montage of seemingly random clips of police activity & urban life. But as you'll learn the more you see this title sequence (and song), this montage is actually filled with clues, both literal and metaphorical. The greatest crime dramas throw clues in your face without telling you how important they are. Believe me, L.A. CONFIDENTIAL, one of the greatest films of all time with its labyrinthine plot, has nothing on THE WIRE. And we're only just getting started. What you'll also notice from the opening scene is the dialogue. It actually took me two viewings to find out what the detective and the dice-roller were saying. As if that wasn't enough, I eventually had to turn on the English subtitles just to find out what each character was saying. The dialogue flows so naturally that THE WIRE never feels like a TV drama. There are no scenes where the characters recap what happened in the previous episode, unless the characters would actually take a moment to remind each other. This sounds like a challenge, and indeed it is. THE WIRE requires (and deserves) your undivided attention. Pause if you have to. Rewind if you have to. Use the subtitles if you have to. Many have called THE WIRE "a visual novel", and they couldn't be more right. You see how much attention I've given to just the first few minutes? Guess what, the entire series clocks in at 63 hours.

So, what's the premise of the series? The first season's main story begins when a team of Baltimore police is assembled to take down one of the city's high-profile drug dealers. The investigators and surveillance teams endure what real cops would endure: long hours, cold trails, bad weather, tedious paperwork, crummy offices, and worse...smart criminals. THE WIRE gives the justice officers an equal amount of screen time as the targets they pursue. The dealers aren't delightfully vicious or glamorous in the least. Sort of like the Corleone Family or the protagonists in GOODFELLAS, THE WIRE portrays its criminals as guys who either can't do anything else for a living, or refuse to do anything else for a living. The series goes even deeper, as we're engaged in the lives of judges & lawyers, homicide detectives & their office-dwelling superiors, drug kingpins & their corner workers, and even the homeless. Calling this "epic" is an understatement. If you're as interested in the urban drama as you are in the police procedural, then you're on the right track. Don't worry, you will get to see the cops bust a few doors and arrest a few thugs, but just be aware each event is treated as ordinarily and naturally as anything else in THE WIRE. To the characters, these events are just another day.

Now bear in mind, I've only given a little info on the first season! I won't give away any details, but Season Two continues in the exact opposite way you'd expect a sequel to. The cops and criminals shared equal halves of TV time on Season One, but for the seasons that follow, they share equal parts with a completely new side of Baltimore. Just wait until THE WIRE continues through its next few seasons, it gets even more deliciously complex. If you think Season One sounds like a beastly Rubik's Cube, wait until you get a load of Season Two, not to mention the seasons afterwards. After all, you can't predict how a single story is going to proceed if you're too blindsided by how it begins. One of the most interesting aspects is that slowly over time, THE WIRE becomes more than a crime drama — the series evolves into a multi-layered epic, where crime is only part of the picture. Each of the five seasons feels like its own individual story, but naturally connects with the season that comes before and after it.

I don't want you to be discouraged by this onslaught of convoluted storytelling. There is a method to the madness. Audiences (including me) are too used to knowing where we are at every given point of the story. THE WIRE purposefully refrains from the kind of clarity we're used to. This challenge that will stimulate your mind in ways that no other TV show has. In so many ways, it's the kind of entertainment we've always wanted: Surprising yet Natural — isn't that always the goal?

THE WIRE is so great that everyone is going to take something different from it. This show can be interpreted in a million ways. Nobody is right, and nobody is wrong. How can that be? Well, creator David Simon is to be credited for this neutrality. Simon is as hands-on as any other TV series producer, writer, or creator. Every single aspect of the show is exactly what he wanted it to be. THE WIRE was never the victim of a writer's strike, or cancelled seasons, or poor broadcasting schedules, or any other excuse. If there is a character or story arc you don't care for, it isn't Simon's fault; your personal taste just doesn't mesh with it. Sure, I have one or two nitpicks about what THE WIRE should've been in my eyes, but not once did I believe it was for a lack of focus. For example, one particular season takes a more didactic approach to the series. We witness moral dilemmas with an ambitious mayor, unethical cops, and newspaper staff — all tackle the immortal question, "Do the ends justify the means?" This more black-and-white angle is exactly what David Simon wanted to use. I preferred a more gray-shaded tale, but Simon decided that this tale needed a more direct statement. Now, even though this isn't my preference, I overlooked my own criticisms because this season was built this way. There are a couple of other little things that might not sit well with some viewers, notably how the "star" of the show's cast disappears for most of one season (don't worry, you'll know it's coming before it happens). The point is that THE WIRE never once strayed from its intended path.

I think that's what I'm going to take away most from this show: It tells every story it wants to tell. It answers every question it poses, unless we're meant to ponder. It forces us to sympathize with those we'd normally condemn, and to relate to those we'd usually ignore. This television drama is a masterful work of art, from the page to the screen.

When they cry 8.5 (2000-12-17 14:19)

Higurashi no Naku Koro ni starts off in a quiet, peaceful little village that looks quite ordinary and amiable to anyone. But, of course, there's always something horribly wrong.

Higurashi was first brought into the world in the form several PC games, with the covers designed to look quite disarming so any person would think that this series was harmless. But once you get into the meat of it, things aren't looking so rosy. You'll be pulled, dragged, and unwillingly shoved into a head-spinning mystery that you wished never surfaced in the first place, fighting for your life against people you trusted, and digging through graves and lies in order to survive.

There are four "question" arcs, consisting of four different viewpoints of the fateful Hinamizawa festival and two "answer" arcs (in the anime), which will reveal what went wrong in two of the question arcs.

What's best of all is the horror, both physical and psychological. If the blood won't get to you, the emotional tension will. With a cast of memorable and lively characters, you won't be able to watch this anime only once.

Higurashi no naku koro ni, based off very popular Japanese PC games, is a horror anime about a town named Hinamizawa, formerly known Onigafuchi, or 'Demon's Abyss'. There is a rumored curse, the curse of Lord Oyashiro, making people disappear every year. The story is told in 4 Question arcs and 4 Answer arcs (The last 2 aren't planned to come out in anime form as of yet).

Each question arc shows the story happening in different ways, with different victims each time, and the answer arcs fill in info missing from the question arcs.

The story starts out with Keiichi Maebara, a high school boy who's just moved to Hinamizawa. He soon starts learning about the strange happenings called Lord Oyashiro's curse, and gets very involved.

This show is the first horror anime I've ever actually enjoyed (granted, I haven't seen that many), It's fun trying to figure out what exactly is going on in the town. I don't think Sherlock Holmes could solve this case, for for you anime fans, Shinichi Kudou.

There are FOUR of them now. Yes, you'll have to deal with four creepy girls instead of one like a normal horror film would. They'll be cute and bouncy for one moment, then murderous and psychotic the next. Full of twists, turns, and unpleasant surprises, after watching this, you won't be able to close an eyelid for some time.

Mushishi review (2000-12-18 05:58)

Ginko is a Mushishi - an expert on Mushi, odd spirit-like creatures not everyone can see and that occasionally cause harm to unwary humans. Ginko travels Japan studying Mushi and helping solve problems related to them, such as a village paralyzed by rust mushi, or a bamboo mushi that traps travelers in its forest. Each episode stands on its own, telling of a different place with different mushi, with Ginko observing and assisting when needed.

This is a very languid, beautiful series. Ginko does have a backstory that is eventually revealed, but the series focus is individual episodes. The scenery and mushi combine to create a delightful viewing experience, and the stories are engaging, quickly drawing you in to the world they create. Watching this show made me feel relaxed and I came away from each episode with a contented, peaceful feeling. Not that the stories are boring - since Ginko is a healer like character, most of the stories involve people who are suffering from their contact with the mushi. But the resolutions are normally uplifting and satisfying.

If you are looking for an action show, this is not it. If you are looking for a show that has an continues storyline, this is also not it. But if you want a show that you can just watch and enjoy on an episodic basis, that has emotional stories and beautiful scenery, please give this show a try. So far everyone I've showed this series to has enjoyed it, and I hope you will too!

Tales of Xillia PS3 review 8.5 (2000-12-18 18:54)

Ever since I first played Tales of Destiny way back in 1999 I have been in love with the Tales franchise. While not as immediately recognizable in the mainstream gaming community as the Final Fantasy or Dragon Quest/Warrior RPG juggernauts, the "Tales of" series of games have always had a loyal fan base due to the great stories and combat that is the hallmark of the games. The question of whether or not to purchase the latest game in the franchise was a no-brainer for me, and I can say with 100 % certainty that I am so happy that I indulged myself.

Controls, Music, & Animation

Every Tales game is painstaking in its delivery of beautiful graphics and music, and Tales of Xillia (henceforth referred to as "ToX") continues in that tradition. Simply put, this game is gorgeous and takes every advantage of the PS3 hardware to simply amaze me. The world of Xillia is bright, colorful, and varied. Environments are dynamic; each exploration area is divided by little "breaks"; while this may seem annoying, the lack of lag when going through a doorway into the next room is practically non-existent. The screen flashes black for one moment and then you are free to control your character.

In addition to the beautiful backgrounds, the characters are 3D mirrors of their anime-inspired sprites used in the cut scenes. While you do notice the difference between the 2D drawing of Milla (the female protagonist) and her 3D avatar, the seamless transition negates any of the very minor aesthetic details. Finally, each character in the game is unique, sporting their own look, and enemies are just as varied and detailed as the "good guys".

Musically speaking, Tales of Xillia boasts an amazing orchestral arrangement with songs to suit every zone in the game. It is truly beautiful and lends itself well to the atmosphere of the story. When you are in an ominous, dark dungeon the music is creepy, with violins and woodwinds playing higher and slightly off-key, creating the ambiance of a thriller movie. Sound effects cover every aspect of movement, helping to bring the world of Xillia to life. If your character is moving through shallow water, swishing noises will occur with each step. The crackle of fire whispers through a zone, subtly lighting a path. Birds chirp. When the graphics and sound come together, you will find yourself immersed in a world of magic, mysteries, and more than a few baddies to kill.

The controls in ToX are spot-on. Combat is real-time, so players need to be aware of their characters and the baddies on the screen. At the beginning of the game you can alter whether you want harder enemies, a longer input time for combos, and your X- and Y-axis movement [meaning whether pressing upward with the control stick will move the camera up (normal) or down (inverted)]. I chose the hardest setting and kept the input time as "Normal". In the beginning enemies attack slower, which is good as it gives you time to acquaint yourself with the mechanics of combat. While pressing the "X" button will make your character charge forward and attack a target, you also have different magic/elemental-based attacks that can be accessed from the menu (the "Z" button) which vary based upon who you chose as your protagonist to control. Thus, combat sometimes needs a good strategy; just jumping in and whacking enemies with your weapon does not always work. In this way ToX enhances the gameplay by adding a level of strategy. Once you form a party, coming up with a plan of attack becomes critical; you will be able to combine attacks and setup AI strategies to maximize your combat proficiency (your cohorts will be controlled by AI; from the party menu you can adjust their combat focus, for instance: should that character conserve TP (mana) or go all out and cast the most powerful spells each battle? Do you want a character to heal exclusively or to heal AND attack?). Finally, in regard to the map and character control, Xillia has everything nailed. The camera rests comfortably in a 3rd person perspective of your character. The camera rotates freely, enabling you to see a complete map and minimizing the risk of an enemy sneaking up from behind. Since enemies are seen on the map and battles are not random encounters, this is a very important function.

ToX has an over-arching plot of determining why the elements are out of harmony and how to restore mana to the world. When one of the kingdoms in the world of Xillia experimented with powerful magic, they unwittingly caused widespread devastation by draining the world's mana. It is your job to figure out what happened and how to fix it before the other kingdoms start an all-out war.

While the story itself is your basic good-vs-evil RPG fare, the depth of the storyline, the complexity of the characters (their personalities and motives) and presented in a manner to both intrigue the player and to soldier onward to learn more. In addition, ToX gives you TWO games in one; at the beginning you choose either the male (Jude Mathis) or female (Milla Maxwell). In either case, the story will unfold from the perspective of THAT character. Thus, while you will travel with the other person regardless, you will only interpret events through the eyes and mind of your protagonist. This, of course, means that you will want to play through the game AGAIN to see another side to the story!

As the story progresses, you will find yourself watching numerous cut scenes and work to cultivate not only new abilities for combat but also the friendships of others in your party. Using a robust crafting system, ToX adds another level of depth by encouraging the player to explore and find items. All of this combined will suck you into the game and make you want to press onward (maybe to the detriment of your job... make sure that you don't miss work in your zeal to beat the game!).

Overall

To simplify this review, let's recap:

Pros:

- 1) Beautiful combat system that keeps enemy encounters fun and challenging,
- 2) No random encounters! Enemies are seen on the map and can be avoided, if desired,
- 3) Beautiful environment, unique characters, and an amazing soundtrack,
- 4) Game controls are easy to pick up and play,
- 5) LOTS of replay value: play through the character-specific storyline depending upon the hero,
- 6) Wonderful and often-humorous storytelling, encouraging dialogue with others,
- 7) Lots to explore and many items to find; exploring the world is visually rewarding!

Cons:

- 1) It costs money; but I guarantee that you will find this to be the best $60 spent on a game this year!
- 2) The cut scenes can be a little long at times, but this is a minor irritation at best,
- 3) That Tales of Xillia 2 won't be available in the U.S. for a while!

Thus, simply put, ToX is one of the best games that I have acquired and played in 2013. The story is entertaining, the gameplay is fun, combat isn't random and does require strategy (you can't just button-mash and expect to win), and you can replay the game a second time to see the story from another viewpoint. Oh, and did I forget to mention that the graphics are gorgeous and the soundtrack is amazing?

If you haven't already clicked that "Buy" button, you should really do so. This game is a must-have for PS3 owners, Tales franchise fans, or the RPG-lover in your life.

Melancholy of Haruhi Suzumiya review (2000-12-19 06:00)

The first season of "Haruhi Suzumiya" is guaranteed to cheer you up with cute sexual innuendos, scientific mumbo-jumbo and a symbolic religious message hidden underneath the fan service.

The show is based on an oddball story, focusing on a high school boy named Kyon, who meets an unusual high school girl named Haruhi Suzumiya. The girl is a strange firebrand, who is more interested in aliens, espers (psychics) and time travelers than in actual humans. Somehow, Kyon strikes up an unusual friendship with this girl.

However, Kyon never planned on getting involved with starting up Haruhi's own club, the S.O.S. Brigade. The club's mission is to spread happiness around the world, through all the fetishes that anime geeks would love. Aliens. Psychics. And an adorable time traveler girl with big breasts. The show pretty much covers all of Kyon's experiences with Haruhi, the bossy dominatrix who may have mysterious powers of her own.

Although it is hard to discuss this series without revealing some major spoilers, the show is a major hit with college anime clubs in America for many reasons. The first episode is a big home movie spoof, where the high school characters try to act like Haruhi's favorite anime characters in an embarrassing film project loaded with weird jokes. The ending credit sequence features the funniest and most infamous anime dance, performed by Haruhi and the other members of the S.O.S. Brigade. And the philosophical members of the S.O.S. Brigade always treat Haruhi like she's a supernatural being who has the willpower to change humanity as we know it.

Religious pundits will no doubt scoff at this off-kilter combination of sexual tension and philosophical dialogue. However, they will no doubt remember this series for all the jokes that seem to come out of nowhere. This is one of the few series that packs all the goofy anime-style fetishes that fans will love. You know, like girls in bunny suits, speedy fights with alien girls and philosophical jokes about the meaning of life. Even the broadcast of the show presented the episodes in an unconventional manner, like a anime-style version of "Pulp Fiction."

The show was also a milestone series which featured many new story-telling styles for an animated film. The narrative is told completely from the first-person perspective of Kyon. The first episode presents the animation from the lens of a shaky, indie-style camera. The tone of the series can switch drastically from light comedy to an apocalyptic thriller sequence. Unlike most anime shows with romantic comedy, "The Melancholy of Haruhi Suzumiya" features some frightening scenes in the fifth episode, with blood and gore.

The gutsy cinematography effects and genre bending stories all contribute to make this one of the most unusual anime series ever made. Although plenty of other romantic comedies delivered similar conservative themes of love and codependency, "The Melancholy of Haruhi Suzumiya" was the only one that flooded the love story with the best gut-busting pop culture references. And anime has only gotten better because of it.

Mobile Suit Gundam Seed (2000-12-19 14:28)

This has got to be one of the best Gundam shows out there today. The animation is everything modern technology can offer, amazing choreographed fighting sequence and perhaps, one of the most intriguing plots.

The basic plot to Gundam SEED is a war has broken out between the Earth Alliance (Naturals or normal human beings) and ZAFT (Coordinators or genetically enhanced human beings), and two friends, Kira Yamato and Athrun Zala are pitted against each other. Mobile Suits come into play when the Earth Alliance secretly begin to produce Gundam Mobile Suits, to which Zaft is intent on obtaining. The attack on Heliopolis not only allowed Zaft to capture four of the Alliance's mobile suits, but reunites Kira Yamato with his childhood friend, now enemy, Athrun Zala. Kira like Athrun is a Coordinator and his decision to help the Naturals deem him a traitor and pit him against his fellow Coordinators. Kira must now fight in the Strike Gundam against Duel, Buster, Blitz, and Aegis Gundams as the seemingly never-ending war continues. Casualties will amount on both sides, forcing both Athrun and Kira to battle relentlessly.

One of the first things that drew me into the show was the vibrant colors and the character development. You have the protagonist, Kira Yamato, who is a conflicted and emotional teenager. And though he is extremely skilled at piloting a Gundam, he rather live peacefully rather than fight. Every time a death occurs on or off the battlefield, he feels it's his responsibility, thus the toll of characters that die throughout the show, effect and burden him immensely. He is extremely sensitive to other people's feelings and does not like taking the life of an other. Some may accuse him of crying too often, but I view his breakdowns as human, which is a reason I like his character so much.

His relationship with his old childhood friend, Athrun Zala, is extremely heartfelt, because it is obvious the two don't want to fight each other and care immensely for each other, yet they're forced to fight against each other. Notably, the supporting characters in this show are extremely memorable. Athrun's teammates, Yzak, Dearka, and Nicol have interesting character developments, rare in a lot of anime shows. We see Nicol as an aspiring pianist with hope for a piano playing future. He looks upon Athrun as an older brother and is very kind and supportive of Athrun. Both Yzak and Dearka's personalities are further developed later on in the show when we see them both make surprising decisions and completely different sides to their characters. There are also characters on the Naturals side like Mwu La Flaga, Murrue Ramius, Sai Argyle, Flay Allster, that are memorable, especially in their relationship with Kira and how they affect him to fight.

For once, the main female leads are not annoying. Lacus Clyne and Cagalli Yula Attha actually have important roles in the series. Lacus as the emotional and physical healer and supporter for Kira, while Cagalli is the tie between Kira and Athrun. The awesome aspect of this show is that it has characters worth caring about and excellent voice overs. The only disappointing factor is, if you're watching the Cartoon Network version, a majority of the more violent and graphic scenes are completely edited out and makes the events happening in the show, lose it's full potential and true effect.

The music for Gundam SEED is extremely compelling and perfectly accompanies the show. In my opinion the best songs you hear are "Invoke" by T.M. Revolution, "Meteor" by T.M. Revolution, and "Anna ni Isshodatta no ni" by See-Saw.

Overall, Gundam SEED is an excellent anime show with compelling characters, and fantastic animation.

Vision of Escaflowne review (2000-12-20 06:03)

An astounding series brought to us by some of the top talents in anime, Escaflowne is in fact a story about the discovery of the lost city, Atlantis', secret and about the consequences of Isaac Newton's reactions to this discovery. On the somewhat atypical surface, however, Escaflowne is about a young Japanese girl's romantic involvements with the other main characters. A medieval setting allows for an all new and original interpretation on traditional mecha, as the behemoth battle armors, or "Guymelefs," are composed primarily of gears and use swords, as opposed the Gundam type servos and beams. Nevertheless, the animators found ample opportunity to include some flashy digital effects, stealth cloaking will impress you. Although I found Hitomi Kanzaki, our main character, difficult to relate to, Van Fanel and Allen Schezar, a descendant of Atlantis and a royal knight respectively, steal the show. Thier efforts against a powerful military regime known as Zaibach Empire, who seek not only control over the planet, but over the laws of casaulity (fate) itself, are truly a sight to behold. A seamless blend of science fiction and medieval fantasy produce some of the most memorable anime characters and scenes you'll ever set eyes on. A superb musical score and acceptable dubbing round out this awesome package. Unfairly labeled a "girl's cartoon" in some sects, Escaflowne is some of Japan's very best anime and is truly deserving of this fantastic box set edition (thanks bandai). Episodic anime just doesn't get any better than this!

Ghost in the Shell SAC review (2000-12-21 19:10)

First of all, I just want to mention that I was always interested in GITS SAC, but between the other expensive collection floating around and the fact that it only airs once a week at 4am, I've never really had the chance to take a closer look. That is, until this convenient, affordable set-up.

Well, anyway, GITS SAC revolves around the investigation of a cyber-terrorist known as the "laughing man." Throughout the series attempts are made to stop this heinous criminal only to reveal that the plot is much thicker and deeper than first imagined.

Along with the overlying plot, stand alone episodes act as avenues for character development, philosophical questioning as well as world building. Perhaps two of the better (or at least entertaining in my point of view) episodes consist of Batou's backstory while investigating a fighter and the tachikoma's consistent questioning of life and death.

Though these stand alone episodes offer much in the way of development, they have a habit of breaking the pace a little. If you are not intending to watch large chunks of the series at a time or in reasonable succession, important details can easily be forgotten.

All and all, GITS SAC offers espionage, action, philosophical debate and characters that you can't help to feel for. Just remember one thing while diving through the GITS SAC world: Nothing is at it seems. And one other thing: it doesn't hurt to keep the remote in hand to rewind to what you missed.

Clannad review (2000-12-22 19:20)

This series is an excellent buy. If you're unsure of it but watch a bunch of anime then I'd say to give it a try at least. I wasn't sure when I first saw it but it quickly grew on me as one of my favorites. From making you roll around laughing to inducing tears, this series is full of all kinds of emotional twists. Upon first glimpse, I thought it was just another Anime involving high school students, but the more I watched, the more I realized how much of a masterpiece this was. Definitely check it out. Tomoya Okazaki is a bitter, sarcastic, prankster in his senior year of high school, spending most of his time ridiculing his friend and fellow lethargist, Sunohara. However, it all seems to change when he meets Nagisa Furukawa, a kind-hearted, yet unsure, girl who wishes to revive the drama club. The journey the two go through together with the friends they make along the way, is one you shouldn't miss. The new English Dub was rather well made and interesting.

The Twelve Kingdoms review (2000-12-23 06:06)

I ALMOST passed on this spectacular anime series because I was initially put off by the main character at the beginning of the story. Boy am I glad I didn't and you shouldn't either!

At first, the set-up for Twelve Kingdoms is somewhat similar to Fushigi Yuugi: A rather annoying whiny schoolgirl and her friends get sucked into another world similar to ancient China. They can't get back home, they get separated, and undergo several harrowing encounters. But fortunately for us, the resemblance ends there.

The main protagonist Youko Nakajima develops from a very insecure and self conscious high school girl to a courageous and self-aware young monarch of the Kingdom of Kei. All the supporting characters including villains are complex and add to the multilayered storyline.

Twelve Kingdoms is a very detailed mythological fantasy that's like an Asian version of Lord of the Rings or Chronicles of Narnia without the religious undertones or allegory. The animation is gorgeous and the soundtrack specially the opening theme is epic in scope. It's just too bad the series is incomplete. Nevertheless this is one you should not to miss.

Shin Megami Tensei Devil Summoner 8.0 (2000-12-23 19:42)

While Shin Megami Tensei Devil Summoner: Raidou Kuzunoha vs the Soulless Army isn't actually an SMT game, it is a member of the franchise. It is actually part of a family of spin-off games in the MegaTen series that is just using the SMT name to establish connections between the different series in the franchise finally appearing in America. While not too many people are familiar with the games past, this one takes the series in a new direction.

Devil Summoner is the first game in the MegaTen franchise that has moved past the traditional or tactical RPG style combat and gone straight into the action/RPG genre. In this game you play as a young man who has just attained the title of Kuzunoha Raidou the 14th, the successor to a long line of Devil Summoners tasked with the protection of the capital city. With his ability to see and control demons, Raidou must solve a mystery that becomes increasingly more and more twisted as the game progresses.

The story begins with the player earning the Raidou name (essentially this is the tutorial) and being assigned to work at a detective agency in the capital. One day you get a mysterious phonecall from a girl pleading for help and wants to meet with you late at night. Reluctantly Raidou and his partner at the detective agency head out to meet her. They find out the girl who contacted them has an odd request; she asks them to kill her. Before anyone can respond, she is kidnapped by mysterious men in red and so sets forth a tale of demons, evil, and curses.

Essentially the game progresses much the way you would expect a MegaTen game to, you travel to different locations via world maps and explore the different locations on larger area maps. While wandering around the areas searching for clues and information, there will be several random encounters (the franchise is known for high encounter rates) that will allow you the opportunities to capture new demons for aid. More on that later though. While exploring the areas you are able to have a demon deployed to follow you around (keep in mind the normal people can't see it though). Every demon type has special skills that can be used in the areas such as flying to reach far items, scouting to find hidden items and enemy info, and even mind reading to get some extra information from people. These skills are essential to getting the information you need, so it is wise to keep a demon of every type as often as possible.

Now for the battles. This is where fans of the series will either love the game or hate it. Gone are the pressed turn systems used in Nocturne and Digital Devil Saga. Instead they are replaced with real time action battles. You directly control Raidou and can use combinations of sword strikes and gun shots to defeat your enemies. Raidou can't use magic, so the only way he can deal elemental damage is using special bullets. Luckily for him though, he is able to have a demon deployed with him in battle (but only one!). It will typically act on its own, but you are capable of assigning it specific orders or general strategies. By using your monsters in battle, they will grow in loyalty to you. When their loyalty is maxed out, they will often give you bonuses and can then be used in fusions to create new demons. Essentially the system can get a little bit repetitive and while it will takes a while to get used to, once you do it becomes a matter of knowing what enemies are weak to which attacks. Once you figure that out though, it's just a matter of keeping your levels high enough and capturing and fusing demons to keep gaining strength.

The style of capturing is brand new as well. Gone is the negotiation system used in Nocturne and the original SMT games. Instead it is replaced by a system that forces you to exploit enemy weaknesses. When you hit an enemy with an element it is weak too, it will become stunned and give you the chance to capture it by repeatedly pressing circle until a meter empties out. You must empty the meter before the creature revives or you will not capture it. The easiest way to do this is to wear down its health ahead of time before attempting a capture. One note though, you will automatically fail to capture if the enemy is a higher level than Raidou, the moon is full, or it is a boss battle.

The graphics and music in the game are a little different from what was seen in previous SMT releases here in North America. It still uses the same form of cel shading, but they are a little bit more defined and detailed. Nothing too major, but it is enough to really change the visuals overall appearance from the other games. Also, this game is not as dark and gritty as Nocturne or DDS. In fact it has several amusing scenes and is much brighter and more vibrant overall. This is greatly illustrated by the music which is often much more lighthearted and is comprised of a lot of horns and brass instruments. Not nearly as dark and brooding as the other two games. But since this game takes place in 1920's Japan and not a post-apocalyptic world this time, it fits in quite well.

Overall, Devil Summoner is a new spin on an old franchise. While it does display that full action battles aren't as well suited for the style of the game, Atlus was able to do it well enough that it still remains fun and keeps the game enjoyable. For a lot of people who found the turn based systems of Nocturne and DDS overbearing and cumbersome, this could be a nice way to ease into the world of the MegaTen franchise. While it is not nearly as epic as the previous games, it holds its own and the story alone is enough to keep a fan of the franchise sated long enough to finish the game off regardless of whether or not they like the change of style. Definately not the best game in the franchise, but a nice refreshing change that is fun none the less.

First off, a lot of people called this series slow and boring. DO NOT LISTEN. The first few episodes are building up the story for the later episodes, which will have you on the edge of your seat at the end of almost every episode! It especially picks up at the second season with some epic battle scenes and some tension-building political and economic dilemmas.

I did have a few problems with it though. For one, a few of the characters came across as whiny and annoying, namely Saji, Allelujah, and Feldt, although this might be because it was the dubbed version.

Also, although the last 10 or so episodes were incredible, it became increasingly hard to discern which Gundam was which, especially in the finale. I had hardly no idea who was still alive until the "epilogue" scenes. And, oh yeah, the animation? Absolutely astounding. Probably the best I've ever seen.

Moribito: Guardian of the Spirit review (2000-12-24 19:24)

If you're a fan of series like Shonen Onmyouji or Twelve Kingdoms here's another fantastic series worth your time. The basic story-plot of the series is that the second prince of the kingdom is feared cursed and will be about the destruction of his peoples lands but his mother forsakes this prophecy and enlists the aid of a wandering female warrior who rescued her son previously from drowning and feels she will be able to protect her son from the machinations of the royal courts decree. Along the way of the series we see the true reason of the royal courts fears as well as the true destiny of the young prince, the one thing that endears you to the series other than the fantastic story, animation, and characters is actually the prince himself. I thought that like previous series with this kind of story you would have the prince as a young pampered brat, but this prince turns out to be actually sincere in his desires to help the people and his own personality to do the work and interact with the people on a personal level not acting at all like a stuck up royal prince. The series won't be for everyone if you're expecting some hardcore supernatural fights or powerful demons to cause destruction that you'll be disappointed, but if you've seen the series mentioned above or another one called Princess Mononoke than this series will be just for you. The audio and video are done well with the added bonus extras being a nice touch, if there's any complaint it would be the box set itself like mentioned before the set is eight dvds put into a single dvd case with a center spindle to stack one dvd on top of another which I found annoying but hey for the price of $15.00 dollars instead of the $95.00 dollars for the other set I can look pass this. So for a great Edo era action anime with a great cast and story-line here's a wonderful choice for anyone.

Fullmetal Alchemist review (2000-12-25 06:10)

Fullmetal Alchemist is one of those stories that while you're watching, you wonder how anyone could have come up with such a complex and original plot. The anime is based on the manga "Fullmetal Alchemist" but the stories go two separate ways. They share a few similar plot twists, but ultimately the outcome for the two characters is completely different.

This DVD is a great buy for people who enjoy learning about the behind-the-scenes stuff from the show.

Death Note review (2000-12-26 06:14)

his show is a must see not just for anime fans but for anyone who enjoys well written and well thought out drama. The story follows the young and brilliant Light who happens upon a notebook with the power to kill people. With the best of intentions at heart he sets out to use this new power to create a better, safer world. Unfortunately for him not everyone agrees with his methods and Light soon finds himself under investigation lead by the world's premier super detective know only as "L".

The intellectual struggle between Light and L is nothing less than riveting. I was stuck helplessly watching episode after episode because I couldn't wait to see what these two boys were going to come up with next. I also found that Light's decent from good natured student to sociopathic mass murder was really well done and an interesting look at how power corrupts.

I'm always reading these reviews to see what people think before I buy stuff but this is the first time I've ever bothered writing one myself. I was just that impressed with this one. Warning though, it is pretty dark and somewhat depressing so if you're looking for happy, happy, feelgood this is probably not your cup of tea. But, if you're looking for a great original storyline that will keep you on the edge of your seat from start to finish then I highly recommend you give this one a try. It's one of the best shows I've seen.

Haibane Renmei review (2000-12-27 06:16)

hat a divine series this is - in every aspect of the word. I finished watching Haibane Renmei I began enthusiastically recommending it to my friends. When one asked "So what makes it good?", funny thing was, I couldn't really answer it. There's almost no conflict or action in the series. There's no traditional good guys VS bad guys, no spellbinding magic, no science fiction - not a trace of computers, aliens or mecha. There are fantasy elements, but they're kept to such a small, human level that you can't really call this series a fantasy in the traditional sense. So what is Haibane Renmei?

It tells the story of a group of angel-like beings called Haibane. They're born from cocoons, grow wings, given halos, and have no memories of their past other than the dream each has in the cocoon. They all live in a protected city called Glie, where nobody is allowed to go beyond the walls. The Haibane are watched over and protected by a group called the Haibane Renmei. Haibane must each work to support themselves, and do their best to be a "good Haibane". It tells the story of one such Haibane - Rakka - coming into the world, and learning how to live in it. The supporting cast of Old Home (where they live) is equally essential. Towards the finale, much of the focus shifts from Rakka to Reki - one of the elder Haibane, who is a mother figure to those in Old Home. Then there's Kuu, Kana, Hikari, and Nemu whom all have very different, but likable personalities.

Haibane Renmei moves at life's pace. Slow and deliberately it moves through its stages - dealing with many humanistic themes along the way. Moving through seasons and emotions with dignity and grace. It would be very easy for fans of traditional anime to consider this series "boring", as it's certainly not exciting in any traditional sense. You really have to be in a certain mood to appreciate Haibane Renmei's charm.

Yoshitoshi ABe (Original Story, Character Designs) said when he began Haibane Renmei that he had no set idea where he was going with it all, creating the story in the moment. In this light, Haibane Renmei becomes like a stream of conscious meditation on life. He also said that while Haibane Renmei has a religious feel, it is not about any particular religion. It is really a type of spiritual and emotional journey. There are anime series that that are very much allegorical. Haibane Renmei works more like CS Lewis's Chronicles of Narnia in that it deals more in allusions than strict allegory. This means its more open to personal interpretations - and all the better because of it.

In a way, this series reminds me of the anime equivalent of Yasujiro Ozu's films. Ozu is a director who focused on regular people in everyday life confronting life's small, but meaningful moments. His films, like Haibane Renmei, rarely have any big emotion or big drama. It's all about calm reflection as we move through life. The viewer is never forced into the story or the characters. Rather, we're given time to relate these characters to our own life. Their moments of sorrow and pain, as well as joy and triumph has been our own. Their search for meaning has been our own. It's through this very human level that we're able to connect with the Haibane and share in their emotions. This makes moments like Rakka's monologue inside Kuu's room profoundly moving.

The animation is superb. It's easy to miss in such a quiet setting, but almost every frame reveals subtleties of the Haibane's world. They use a wealth of Earth hues - wonderful greens and browns - that provide a very warm and inviting tone. The animation itself is beautifully fluid as well. But it's probably the town itself that's best rendered.

The world of Glie is so well conceived and drawn, giving a real sense of a heartwarming environment. The skies, for example, are almost always drawn like beautiful paintings - often reflecting the seasons. Beyond the animation, the direction and cinematography is superb as well. The ease at which the viewer can get lost in this beautiful world is astounding. ABe mentioned that previous to working on anime he was a Japanese style artist, and his works show it. I think more than anyone currently working in anime, ABe understands what a visually powerful medium anime can be. The music is equally as accomplished; consisting of mostly simple, elegant orchestral pieces. The infusion of music in the series is adeptly applied as well - entering at all the right times and evoking all the right moods.

If there are flaws in the series, they are almost too insignificant to mention. The voice acting is not the best (sub or dub), but the cringe worthy moments are kept to a minimum. The finale perhaps comes too suddenly, making it perhaps less dramatic than it should have been. I also felt some of the characters could've been better developed, and a bit more history and background given about them. I especially wish they would've slowly developed Reki's history, instead of saving it for the end. But all of these are minor grievances, and really not worth even subtracting a single star for.

I've seen Haibane Renmei three times, and each time I'm extremely saddened by the end. Not because the story is sad, but because theirs is a world I'd never want to leave. This series has a great, meditative "zen" like quality, and for those in the right frame of mind, you will become thoroughly engrossed in both the lives of its characters and the world in which they exist. You'll smile at their joys and triumphs, and you'll cry at their losses and sorrows. In the end you will be left with a wonderful feeling akin to a spiritual cleansing. The result is nothing short of divine.

Clanned After Story review (2000-12-28 10:52)

"Clannad" received an anime adaptation in 2007 with a total of 23-episodes and was released on DVD earlier this year in the US from Sentai Filmworks. The second season known "Clannad After Story" (which takes place after the first season of Clannad and then ten years later) is now being released in the US. The anime series is directed by Tatsuya Ishihara ("Air", "Kanon", "Melancholy of Haruhi Suzumiya") and a screenplay by Fumihiko Shimo ("Full Metal Panic!", "Air", "Burst Angel", "Gravion", "Melancholy of Haruhi Suzumiya"). The character design for the anime series is by Kazumi Ikeda ("Kanon") and is faithful to the original designs by Itaru Hinoue ("Air", "Kanon").

"Clannad" was an anime series that focused on high school students Tomoya Okazaki and a girl he meets his senior year named Nagisa Furukawa. Tomoya, who was a brash teenager who got into a lot of fights with his father and Nagisa, a frail teenager who has been out of school for periods of time due to an illness but somehow along the way, these two have found a special bond and love for one another.

As the first season of "Clannad" focuses on these two characters and their friends, the first part of "Clannad After Story" continued with storyline of high school life and focusing on a storyline for each of the main and supporting characters and life for Tomoya and Nagisa after he has graduated from high school.

But with "Clannad After Story - Collection 2", the final half of the series focuses primarily on the two as they now prepare for marriage and having a family life and the story moves forward ten years later. Needless to say, as the series has had its share of emotional episodes, the end of those story arc's have ended with happy endings. With this second collection, things grow much darker and tragic and if you thought the prior episodes were emotional, this final volume is much more deeper than ever.

VIDEO & AUDIO:

So far, each anime series that were based off a Key video game such as "Kanon" and "Air" have both been fantastic anime series featuring vibrant animation, colorful backgrounds and just many settings that really make the series stand out. The same can be said about "Clannad After Story!", the animation and production is absolutely fantastic. Kyoto Animation has done a wonderful job with the artistic backgrounds. Also, the animation is solid and character designs are also done very well. "Clannad After Story" is featured in 16:9 Anamorphic Widescreen and picture quality for the anime series on DVD is wonderful! The OVA "Another World: Kyou Chapter" wasn't aired in Japan as part of the TV series but because it's an OVA, has better production quality than the TV series with more detailed background art and more shading in the animation.

As for the audio, the audio of the series is in Japanese 2.0. Japanese voice acting is solid and a lot of well-known Seiyuu are involved in the series. Dialogue is understandable and clear. Personally, I chose to have my receiver play the series with "Stereo on All Channels" for a more improved soundscape. As for English dubs, there are no English dubbed dialogue available for "Clannad" or "Clannad After Story".

Subtitles are featured in English.

SPECIAL FEATURES:

"Clannad After Story - Collection 2" features the clean opening and closing animation and Sentai Filmworks trailers.

JUDGMENT CALL:

This is the part I have waited for and have heard so much about from fans of the series. "Clannad After Story Collection 2" becomes more real as Tomoya and Nagisa now live their adult lives as a married couple and eventually wanting to start a family. We have received hints from the opening of the anime series with a girl and a robot but the storylines were vague until you reach this final half of the season.

The final half of "Clannad After Story" is fantastic and emotional. I don't think I have cried this hard for an anime series since I have watched "Grave of the Fireflies", that is how depressing and emotional that "Clannad After Story" has gotten and episode after episode, I couldn't stop, it was that captivating and suffice to say, you are pulled in as you have watched many episodes of Tomoya and Nagisa grow from their high school years and now to their married years and you have two bombshells dropped on you that is so emotionally hard to take in.

Also, knowing that those emotions and what you see, mirrors reality in knowing that there are fathers who have had to deal with a similar situation that Tomoya had to go through. The series does have a happy ending and of course, the realism of the storyline can be lost but in the context of what we experienced throughout this series, especially with the Fuko and Yukine storyline, there are magical things that happen in the world of "Clannad". The balls of light that we have seen in several episodes and the discussion of alternate universes (especially with the two OVA's), the screenplay plays off possibly like its video game counterpart that this is not a an anime series based on reality, it's a series based on possibilities and anything is possible.

For the realists, one can feel that with episode 21, the tragedy that unfolds is their true conclusion. For those who want that magical, happy ending... episode 22 and the final episode summary gives you that other option. It's interesting because typically, you don't get a choice in the matter at the end of an anime series. Pretty much at the end of a series, what is done is done (unless there is a movie or OVA version reimagining the series). Not for "Clannad After Story ", the series has always had its enjoyable happy moments and its emotional moments. As a viewer, part of me felt that episode 21 is how things should be, to capture that realism of the storyline. But knowing how things happened during the Fuko, Misae and Yukine storyline in "Clannad" and "Clannad After Story ", magical things happen in the town where Tomoya and Nagisa live which can't be explained and thus episode 22 and the summary episode is an ending that makes sense.

In the end and now watching this series from beginning to end and almost like a marathon, so captivated that I couldn't stop, I realize why this acclaimed series is loved by many.

It's Always Sunny in Philadelphia | 9.4 (2001-01-02 12:58)

Dennis (Glenn Howerton), Mac (Rob McElhenney), and Charlie (Charlie Day) are all the owners of an Irish bar in Philadelphia, and "Sunny" essentially follows their awkward lives - each episode revolving around some type of political or social issue such as gun control, abortion, steroids, underage drinking, health care, and the handicapped (just to touch on a few issues already addressed in the show).

It begs comparison with "Arrested Development," "The Office," "Seinfeld" and "South Park" in its broad humor and wit, but it is completely original in its own right. The pilot was filmed on a low budget by a few friends and was picked up by FX after wards, so the show retains its low-budget feel - giving it a gritty, down-to-earth edge.

"Sunny" does border on the edge of bad taste sometimes (hell, what am I saying - it crosses the line every time) but it contains enough satire and wit to get away with it. For example: in one episode Mac and Dennis decide to pick up girls at an abortion rally. Mac pretends to be pro-life just so he can be around an attractive woman, whom he ends up sleeping with. Later, she tells him she's pregnant. "You need to get an abortion," he says. This type of irony runs throughout every episode.

The banter between the characters in the show is what tends to be particularly funny. The actors - although novices - are all great. Charlie Day in particular has me laughing like crazy every episode. And his interaction with Danny DeVito (who's been brought in for season two) is hilarious. Season two is more polished so far in terms of the mechanics of the show - the characters have all been setup now and they know what they're doing - and in that regard it is seeming to get better and better with every episode.

You do have to have a very sick sense of humor to like some of this - DeVito's character, Frank, is the father of Dennis and Dee, and his reason for being in the show is that he is getting a divorce and wants to relive his glory days as a youth. He tries to re-ignite a relationship with an old girlfriend of his from high school - but when he finds out she's a grandmother and not interested in doing anything wild, his attention instantly turns to the waitress and he tunes her out. It's cruel, sick and hilarious. DeVito is playing another ruthless character (same as in "Taxi" all those years ago) and it works splendidly.

Overall this was a delightful blast of fresh air - after seeing so many stale sitcoms, this proved to me that FX really is becoming the new lead in character-driven comedy-dramas (such as the equally superb "Rescue Me" which isn't quite as funny, however).

My only hope is that "Sunny" doesn't become so popular that it attracts controversy and sells out and dumbs down its humor. Right now it's on par with the early episodes of "South Park" and "SNL" in terms of how irreverent its humor is - and personally, in my opinion, its plots are better than most comedy films I've seen within the last few years.

Star Trek: The Next Generation (2001-01-03 12:36)

NOTE: This review is of the ORIGINAL, 2002-2004 collection of boxed sets of each of the show's 7 seasons, NOT the newer, "all-in-one-green-green-box" 2007-released set. That NEWER set is said to be of significantly INFERIOR quality, both in packaging and in dvd quality. Also - for technical reasons, THIS TELEVISION SERIES MAY NEVER BE RELEASED IN A GENUINELY HIGH-DEFINITION, BLU RAY FORMAT (although Paramount has been engaging a variety of companies' expertise to investigate if it can be accomplished in an affordable and technically achievable manner, SO far Paramount's answer is "NO").

As anyone considering buying this set (obviously) already knows that they enjoy watching Star Trek The Next Generation, I won't bother to review the show itself but rather this particular collection of DVD boxed sets. As far as the show itself goes, suffice it to say that even though the original airing of the last episode in the last (7th) season occurred in 1994, at least as of 2009 it was still rated as the most-watched science fiction television series even in RERUN syndication. Star Trek The Next Generation is arguably not only the best of all of the Star Trek television series, but is also considered by many to be the finest science fiction television series IN GENERAL produced to date.

First, the packaging of this set - it's absolutely FABULOUS! I cannot POSSIBLY overstate how GOOD the packaging is. Each season is packaged in its own box. Within each box is a well-crafted dvd "holding case" that FOLDS OUT to display all of that season's dvd's. Each dvd is held tightly in place, and when the set's folded up it fits PERFECTLY into the season's larger box. The boxes are of TREMENDOUSLY high quality, clearly manufactured to the highest standards. The boxes are made of VERY heavy-weight, well-fitting paper/cardboard but with some sort of polished and plasticized exterior finish to ensure exceptionally long life. The graphics and color scheme reflect the original design schemes of the tv series itself. Imprinted on the interior of each box's front cover is a listing of that season's/set's dvd's and the title of each episode on each dvd (including special/bonus features). Between the quality of each season's exterior box and the interior dvd holding case, the packaging will protect the dvd's - and the packaging's printing - pretty much FOREVER.

Also - Within EACH season's box is a fold-out brochure that lists each episode of that season's set by title, original air-date, "Stardate" (!), and disc/dvd number, as well as a brief description of that season's special/bonus features. The first season's brochure also includes an introduction to the collection by Executive Producer Rick Berman and a photo and brief description of the show's regular characters. Subsequent seasons' brochures include brief but interesting notes on that particular season, and a few little-known but interesting facts about the show and/or its characters. The final season's boxed set brochure includes a message from Mr. Berman thanking all fans for their continued loyalty to the series. Each season's fold-out disc case has a special sleeve for long-term safe storage of that season's brochure, and the sleeve can also accommodate that season's boxed set's external packaging information sheet if you wish to safely store it there.

The physical dvd's - Again, EXCELLENT manufacturing quality. The imprinted label of each dvd is graphically matched to the series' design, and color-matched to that season's dvd color scheme. Each has imprinted on it the season number, disc number, and the title and official episode number (!) of each episode on that disc. Each disc is held tightly in its place in the dvd holder and is appropriately thick so that it will not bend excessively when pulled off of its holder. Each disc's holder has a plastic push-button "spindle" that when pushed in makes releasing the disc very easy, and each spindle's "prongs" are thick enough that they will not break off upon repeated use.

The series' AUDIO quality - Each dvd has both a regular, 2-channel stereo track and a Dolby Digital 5.1 Surround track, selectable from each EPISODE'S main title screen OR your dvd player's audio control buttons/menus, whichever you prefer. The audio quality is EXCELLENT in EITHER format. If your a/v setup doesn't include Dolby Digital 5.1 Surround capability but your dvd player and/or tv has a "simulated" surround setting and/or an enhanced "stereo separation" setting (sometimes referred to as "SRS" or the like) you'll still get EXCELLENT audio quality out of the 2-channel audio track with no audible background "hiss" or distortion; the musical and audio effects' soundtracks consistently sound clear and distinct, with very good frequency distribution and dynamic range. There is no "audio commentary" track for any of the episodes.

The series' VIDEO quality - Is generally EXCELLENT, particularly given the manner in which the television series was filmed, composited and transferred from film to video to begin with. The episodes were apparently given a "lite" restoration. The episodes are presented in their original standard-definition "full-screen" aspect ratio. As such, picture quality is best when you have your dvd player set to "up-convert" to 420p and connected to a high-definition tv (preferably a plasma or an lcd that has full-array LED backlighting with local dimming, due to the importance of black level depth and retention in this particular television series). When you have such a tv set and dvd player, color balance from scene to scene and episode to episode is generally very good, as are the collection's inherent contrast and black levels. When your set's color, contrast, brightness and sharpness settings are set correctly, many of the scenes and shots actually look as if they're in high definition - no kidding! BUT - there are also many (brief) moments when the series' age and original manner of film-to-video transfer are evident with momentary shots that appear more blurred and slightly grainier. But overall, video quality is very good to excellent.

Overall, this particular set's video and audio quality is CONSIDERABLY better than anything you're likely to get from any OTA, cable or satellite channel for sure!

DVD program structure -

When you first load a dvd, once you get past Paramount Home Video's copyright screen you're presented with a brief but BEAUTIFULLY-presented video collage of the series' main characters set against a stunning starfield background, the Enterprise then dashes across the screen, while the series' musical theme plays. You're then taken directly to the dvd's main title ("root menu") screen while the musical theme continues (in a loop, of course). Each dvd's main title screen has colorful, animated graphics that are beautifully rendered and consistent with the series' general graphic design scheme; it also includes a rotating sequence or collage of brief scenes from each of the episodes on that dvd. Episode titles and their original episode numbers (!) are presented for playback selection, but there is no option to have all episodes on the disc automatically play sequentially. Once an episode is selected you can then choose from "Engage" (play), "Communications" (selection of which version of stereo audio you want, and whether or not you want subtitles - English is the only language available), "Chapter Log" (the episode's chapter markers), or "Return" (to the dvd's root menu).

Each season's set has its bonus features on its last disk; most are quite good, informative, and add value to the set.

And each episode on each and every disc plays back PERFECTLY, without ANY skips, stalls, freezes or breakups.

In summary, in spite of this being an older dvd set without a few of the more "advanced" features that most newer dvd's in general offer (such as multiple language subtitles and sequential autoplay of all episodes on a dvd), this particular, older studio release is an INCREDIBLE and the BEST collection of all 7 seasons of Star Trek The Next Generation, FAR superior to the newer single boxed set in virtually ALL respects. Given that the (albeit inferior) newer boxed set has been out now for awhile, in all likelihood this older yet SUPERIOR "boxed-by-season" set will continue to be available ONLY until distributor warehouse and retailer supplies are exhausted. Consequently, some retailers are offering this particular complete set for over $1,000!!! Here on Amazon you can get it, as of this writing, new for $249.99 - with free Super Saver shipping - via newbury _comics (a very reputable retailer) with "Fulfillment By Amazon" but as of this writing they have only 12 of these sets left available... Oops! Make the 10 now (although they may be able to get more that's not really likely, and other retailers have stock left but at significantly higher prices due to its declining availability).

This TRULY is a SPECTACULARLY BEAUTIFUL "Collector's Edition" set that NO STNG fan will want to be without. I have a number of "Collector's Edition" TV series dvd sets, but THIS one is BY FAR the most STRIKINGLY beautiful set of them all - if I had a locked vault to store it in, believe me I'd do so - it's THAT beautiful of a set.

Given the VERY real likelihood that a Blu Ray set will not be forthcoming in at least the foreseeable future if ever at all, and that this OLDER collection is a FAR superior set and package than the newer one, if you want the BEST STNG collection and DON'T order this one VERY soon you WILL regret it. So order it, and order it NOW!!!

5 STARS ALL THE WAY!!!

X-Files Complete Series review | 85% (2001-01-05 12:47)

The X Files Collection is a worthy hobby and next to Star Trek is certainly one of the largest of the television series DVD collections, running an extra two seasons longer than the maximum seven season Star Trek series. Although The X Files is not the longest running television media franchise, it can boast being one of the longest running SF series airing for nine seasons between 1993 and 2002. At around 1100 minutes per box, you are looking at approx. 9 boxes with 165 hours of viewing. That is nearly 1 full week of non-stop X Files. Very few DVD series can come even remotely close to that. Get going collecting right now and you could build up the series collection in no time. By the end you will have a television paranormal anthology that defines the word awe. This is the kind of item that requires 1 hour a day of your time over the course of a year. The X Files creator Chris Carter nails a powerful television series premise, setting up a fringe paranormal bureau of investigation that is at odds with its own department, the government, the military and just about everyone else, with the immortal tagline "The truth is out there". Fox "Spooky" Mulder (David Duchovny) is the workaholic basement-dwelling good-looking nerd with a heart of gold and a mind for the criminal macabre, all things supernatural and who runs the X Files department. He is teamed with Dana Scully (Gillian Anderson), the rational doctor turned FBI agent who is asked to write reports on the X Files cases by her cynical boss. Most episodes play along with the theme of Mulder witnessing a paranormal event while Dana gradually arrives on the scene only after it is over, missing it all, or discovering something odd at best. This kind of regular plot occurrence bonds the characters and is what makes The X Files so enjoyable. The inside DVD case is nothing special and even has some failings with some editions coming with a seventh bonus disc that is just sitting in a slot in a piece of card and falls out easily, bouncing around the box. However not all boxes have this bonus seventh disc item. The more important six discs with episodes are firmly in place in a plastic flip case inside a thick season box that slides into a wider cardboard presentation holder for the shelf and looks quite good. Although the inside is slightly flimsy, these DVDs are presented on the cheap and so economically The X Files seasons are sound value for money but the presentation is nothing to brag about and when we get around to seeing what is on the discs we will not be so blown away either. There are 4 episodes per disc, and 6 discs in total for a grand total of 24 episodes. Some discs have a few deleted scenes... and that is about it. On the episode discs there are sometimes commentaries and not much in the way of bonus material for most seasons except for some international clips with Mulder and Scully speaking in Japanese for a scene. Other seasons have more bonus material. The actual presentation is not short of shoddy work. They could have at least provided us with the X Files remastered in 5:1 Dolby Digital but have instead just presented the series as it was aired in 2:1 surround. Again, everything here is on the cheap... but it is still the X Files. The transfer quality however is very good for most of it. Since the show was shot in full frame, these dimensions are retained. It is not until season 5 that the X Files go Widescreen 1.78:1

(*  */5)

The Paranormal Anthology of a Lifetime starts right here

The X Files: Season one, delivers as a fine example of how such a simple premise can land like a bombshell on the international television scene. There are no real cheap budget restrictions evident either, as what is on display is mostly quality acting and storytelling using natural American environments. Most of the characters in the X Files series are found in the pilot episode 'pilot' on disc 1, however Assistant Director Walter S. Skinner (Mitch Pileggi) doesn't show up until near the end half of the Season in episode 20 - 'Tooms'. Deep Throat (Jerry Hardin) does not appear in the Pilot show, but is in the first episode. 'The Lone Gumen' John Fitzgerald Byers (Bruce Harwood), Melvin Frohike (Tom Braidwood) and Richard 'Ringo' Langly (Dean Haglund) appear in episode 16 - 'EBE'. The Cigarette-Smoking Man (William B. Davis) makes quite a few appearances. The series gels from the word go with some enthralling SF thought and implementation. Not since Star Trek had the world seen a series like it before. Apart from a lot of episodes borrowing from films like 'Wolfen' and 'The Thing' the X Files was doing wholly new stuff that even movies like 'Good Will Hunting' have borrowed from. Season one of the X Files is mostly about alien abductions, government conspiracies, shape shifters, wild men, poltergeists, artificial intelligence, body snatching parasites, the face on Mars, UFO crashes, eugenics, psychics, hermaphrodites, possession, aging, faith healing, werewolves, alien insects, alien bacteria, reincarnation and alien DNA. Although many of shows might not be completely logically and even have some serious plot holes, the general weirdness going on still makes the show one of the best ever. 'EBE' is the most popular show in Season One, next to the cliff-hanger last episode 'The Erlenmeyer Flask'. 'Fallen Angel' is a classic UFO crash X Files episode, 'Shapes' is scary and 'Darkness Falls' is a great original alien story. The bottom line for The X Files: season one is that it is a classic. It is not necessarily the most conspiracy orientated X Files season because it covers a lot of paranormal ground. The real bonus is seeing Mulder and Scully looking really young.

Season 2:

(/5)

The Critically Acclaimed Season II

Although X Files: Season one landed like a bombshell on the international television scene, it was Season two that sent it flying up the rankings with Mulder and Scully on every magazine cover from the bottom to the top shelf. Season two kicks off from the cliff-hanger ending of Season one where the X Files has been shutdown, Mulder and Scully have been reassigned to separate bureau departments and Deep throat has been murdered. Assistant Director Walter S. Skinner (Mitch Pileggi) is in from the start, this time with a more active role in the field along with the Cigarette-Smoking Man (William B. Davis) and 'The Lone Gumen' John Fitzgerald Byers (Bruce Harwood), Melvin Frohike (Tom Braidwood) and Richard 'Ringo' Langly (Dean Haglund), who are all reoccurring characters from Season one. Deep Throat has been replaced by a new Deep Throat character, the mysterious Mr X (Steven Williams) and Mulder has been teamed up with a new agent named Alex Krycek (Nicholas Lea) who may be working for the Cigarette-Smoking Man. There are also more revelations about Mulder's missing sister and some strange history about his dad. So the season starts very differently, upping the paranoia levels with a stronger focus on government conspiracy and developing this theme throughout most of the episodes. There is also much more hard-hitting action and gets very violent in parts with Scully even getting beaten-up badly in most episodes. Season one was more about delivering individual episodes covering a broad general range of paranormal topics whereas Season two links more episodes together by homing in on a unified underlying cause that the government is trying to protect. Still though there is plenty of room for the separate paranormal episodes that are just as good as the unified ones (known as "the mythology" or "mytharc" episodes). Season two has a greater mix with much more original ideas than Season one did. It also boasts a lot of recognizable supporting actors you have seen in the movies. Season two of the X Files is mostly about - SETI projects and the Wow Signal, mutants, toxins, military experiments, sleep deprivation, alien abductions, vampires, NDEs (near death experiences), ancient life forms, alien human hybridization, ghosts, fetishes, the devil, Wicca, voodoo, alien bounty hunters, alien abduction of animals, rapid aging, circus freaks, demonic possession, viruses, dark matter and cannibalism. In Season two the episodes are more logical than Season one, less general weirdness, and more explanation, but still has some rough edges, and questionable moves by the main characters at times, but that is only cribbing. 'The Anasazi' is the most popular show in Season Two and also the cliff-hanger last episode, but 'Duane Barry' 'Ascension' and 'One Breath' are all classic episodes about Scully's abduction. 'The Host' is a great monster story and 'The Calusari' is very freaky. 'Our Town' is downright horrific. In fact 'The Calusari' caused the BBFC (British Board of Film Classification) to give the whole Season box an 18 certificate (strictly for adults only) because of scenes involving children committing murder (the BBFC has banned these types of films before, so the UK was lucky to even get the 18 cert). The episode also had strong themes of child murder and violence towards children. There are a number of episodes that contain totally gross content that is hard to stomach. '3' could be the worst X-File episode of all time. It really stands out as a poor episode among the rest. The bottom line for The X Files: season two is that it is widely considered by fans to be the best season of them all. The last episode is a great way to finish off the season with lots of revelations and some more exposure of what the truth might be. There are quite a few 'to be continued' double episodes in this season also. This season has 25 episodes!, the most any X Files season has to offer but as a note, watch out for the last episode "The Anasazi" which may not be on the last episode disc but is on the seventh bonus disc (the only episode on that disc)!

Season 3:

(/5)

Alien Black Oil

X Files: Season two, widely considered the best X Files season by fans, sent the show flying up the rankings with the season finishing in a cliff-hanger 'to be continued' ending with the possibility that Mulder had been blown up by the Cigarette-Smoking Man (William B. Davis). The first episode of X Files season three is also another 'to be continued' which in the second episode results with Mulder and Scully back as a team with an X Files mandate directly instigated by Assistant Director Walter S. Skinner (Mitch Pileggi). 'The Lone Gumen' John Fitzgerald Byers (Bruce Harwood), Melvin Frohike (Tom Braidwood) and Richard 'Ringo' Langly (Dean Haglund), the mysterious Mr X (Steven Williams) are also back. The Well-Manicured Man (John Neville from "The Adventures of Baron Munchausen") is introduced. Alex Krycek (Nicholas Lea) also makes a return. Deep Throat (Jerry Hardin) appears in a dream sequence and in a special effect. A lot of characters in the previous seasons episodes almost make surprise appearances towards the end. Between Season Two and the start of Season Three there is a whopping three-part X Files episode. The X Files is firmly reinstated at the FBI. The Cigarette-Smoking Man is having a hard time pleasing his bosses. There is lots of double-crossing. There is more history and revelation about Mulder's dad. However instead of making every other episode conspiracy orientated, Season Three decides to bulk the conspiracy right at the start and middle, with a little at the end for a low-intensity cliff-hanger, but leaves room for lots of sequential individual episodes with some that may actually be better than the mythology episodes, which is a change from Season Two that has better mythology ones. Season Three is less violent than Season Two and the hard-hitting action has been toned down (Scully doesn't get beaten-up as much this time). Season Three writers go back across the same grounds as Season One covering a broad general range of paranormal topics. Still though there is plenty of room for dealing with the unified underlying causes that the government is trying to protect and there is a greater revelation about a 'date' for a threat that faces the Earth. Season Three also boasts a lot of recognizable supporting actors you have seen in the movies. It has also redone the opening theme. Season three of the X Files is mostly about - Majestic 12, human experiments, lightening, clairvoyance, reincarnation, fat-sucking vampires, phantom limbs, empathy, alien autopsies, stigmata, alien robots, astrology, gargoyles, alien black oil, willpower, shaman, organ theft, eye witness testimony, succubus, lake monsters, mind control and colonization. In Season three the episodes are much more logical, with very few episodes going for general weirdness, with more explanation and hardly any rough edges, with the characters doing more believable things. 'Piper Maru' is the most popular show in Season Three because it contains our first images of the mysterious Alien Black Oil that became synonymous with the X Files. However the individual shows 'Clyde Bruckman's Final Repose' about psychics, 'Jose Chung's 'From Outer Space'' about eye-witness testimony are great episodes and very memorable. So are 'Quagmire' about lake monsters, 'The Walk' about astral projecting serial killers, the 'Nisei' about alien autopsies and the 'Grotesque' about demons is scary. 'Talitha Cumiare', the low-intensity cliff-hanger episode is an interesting mythology episode. Although not as gross as Season Two, all of the episodes are highly enjoyable. There are a lot more murder orientated stories so it feels a little bit like the other 'Millennium' series that X Files creator Chris Carter produced. The X Files: Season Two it is widely considered by fans to be the best season of them all but Season Three can hold its own. There are quite a few 'to be continued' double or triple episodes in this season.

(/5)

Alien colonization or lies?

X Files: Season four follows in the steps of Season three, produces a virtually unstoppable series of great episodes, now that it has been firmly established as mainstream TV series viewing, finished with the 'to be continued ending' of Mulder getting caught between a shape-shifter alien and a miracle-working alien battling it out, revealed that there is a possibility that the truth he is searching for has something to do with hegemony and the alien colonization of planet Earth. The Cigarette-Smoking Man (William B. Davis) is back along with Assistant Director Walter S. Skinner (Mitch Pileggi). The mysterious Mr X (Steven Williams) is here, but also introduces us to the new mystery deep throat type contact, Marita Covarrubias (Laurie Holden). Back are 'The Lone Gumen' John Fitzgerald Byers (Bruce Harwood), Melvin Frohike (Tom Braidwood) and Richard 'Ringo' Langly (Dean Haglund). The Well-Manicured Man (John Neville from "The Adventures of Baron Munchausen") is here. Alex Krycek (Nicholas Lea) has a surprise. Deep Throat (Jerry Hardin) even turns up again even though he has been dead for over three seasons. The X Files season four goes for the formula of giving us the conclusion to the previous season's cliffhanger but immediately spins right back into the individual episodes about various supernatural things that is more like season one, however this only lasts for half the season and the remaining half has some of the best X Files the series has had to offer so far. There is more mythology however there is lots of revelation to suggest that the X Files is being misled to believe that Aliens exist. This season also boasts a lot of recognizable supporting actors you have seen in the movies. Season four of the X Files is mostly about - alien colonization, inbreeding, mutant albinos, past lives, demonic surgery, the cigarette smoking man's past, serial killers, deadly cargo, El Chupacabra, Jewish mysticism, deadly tattoos, resurrection, dying, stealth assassins, UFO crashes, time travel, reproducing shape shifters, Skinner's crime, mind control and aliens in the ice. Episodes "Tempus Fugit' Unrequited', 'Tunguska', 'Synchrony' stand out the most but the best episode is Skinner's cover-up of a crime in the episode 'Zero Sum'. Ending sets the scene for Season five.

(/5)

The Critically Acclaimed Season V (This season goes Widescreen)

X Files: Season five follows in the steps of Season two, produces a virtually unstoppable series of great episodes, now that it has been firmly established as mainstream TV series viewing. Although the 'to be continued ending' of Season four is not the best beginnings to a season, and the first few episodes are a bit dodgy, this is all forgiven when the screenwriters decide to go back and follow in the steps of Season 2's acclaim. There is a crazy role reversal. Mulder believes that the hegemony and the alien colonization of planet Earth is a con to detract from what is simply a series of government experiments on the citizens of planet Earth and the alien agenda just subterfuge. Scully however is absolutely convinced that Mulder was right all long and so takes the lead role as the paranormal investigator while Mulder turns sceptic. This character switch works wonders and kudos to the screenwriters for doing it. The Cigarette-Smoking Man (William B. Davis) is dead as is Mr X (Steven Williams), however packs of Morleys turn up from time to time. Assistant Director Walter S. Skinner (Mitch Pileggi) is more aware that something paranormal is going on and even sides with Scully when Mulder lambastes both for being delusional. Marita Covarrubias (Laurie Holden) has a secret. 'The Lone Gumen' John Fitzgerald Byers (Bruce Harwood), Melvin Frohike (Tom Braidwood) and Richard 'Ringo' Langly (Dean Haglund) are back and even have their own private episode of how they came to be together. The Well-Manicured Man (John Neville from "The Adventures of Baron Munchausen") is back and Alex Krycek (Nicholas Lea) has another surprise in store. Deep Throat (Jerry Hardin) is gone, long since dead, however Section Chief Scott Blevins (Charles Cioffi) from Season 1 (and a bit of Season 4) is back for a very important double episode. There is also the introduction of Special Agent Jeffrey Spender (Chris Owens) who also plays a significant role. Robert Modell (Robert Wisden) from Season Two's Pusher is back.

The X Files season five is some of the best X Files to date. More mythology and more major revelations, means that you will be hooked from disc 2 onwards, right to the staggering finale. There are also a few supporting actors you have seen in movies. And yes, thankfully after 3 seasons of Scully's overrun cancer suffering, this is about to come to an end. Season five of the X Files is mostly about - pre-X files back stories, Scully's cancer, mothman, mystery offspring, Frankenstein, Modell the pusher, psychotherapy, witchcraft, AI, vampires, extraterrestrial wars, hoasting alien experiments, blind psychics, Angels and Demons, government toxins, monsters and ESP. Episodes "Kitsunegari", "Kill Switch", "Bad Blood" and "All Souls" stand out as great non-conspiracy episodes, but the final episode is one of the best mythology episodes to date. The best episode is "Folie À Deux" which has a terrific monster story and some really mad special effects for a television episode. Season 5 is all top stuff.

NOTE: Remember before moving onto Season 6, you are supposed to watch X Files the movie first (sold separately to the box set).

Season 6:

(/5)

Picking up where the Movie left off... and this season has Bruce Campbell!

X Files: Season six has Mulder reconstructing a private X Files after the destruction of his affairs at the end of Season five. This is very much a mythological alien invasion packed season. Mulder is back and believing that the hegemony and the alien colonization of planet Earth is not a con but a real threat and no longer sees it as just being a government propaganda vehicle. Scully is back to her critical ways. The Cigarette-Smoking Man (William B. Davis) shows up again. Assistant Director Walter S. Skinner (Mitch Pileggi) is here for more of his director of FBI lecturing the bizarre duo. 'The Lone Gumen' John Fitzgerald Byers (Bruce Harwood), Melvin Frohike (Tom Braidwood) and Richard 'Ringo' Langly (Dean Haglund) are back. Alex Krycek (Nicholas Lea) makes a return. Special Agent Jeffrey Spender (Chris Owens) has more screentime who alongside Agent Diana Fowley (Mimi Rogers) have been assigned the X Files which they ignore and censor. Apart from the main theme of an alien conspiracy the single episodes stand out as some of the funniest of the X Files seasons. Season six of the X Files is mostly about - Alien hegemony, sonic death, time travel, altered states, demons, weather, ghosts, photography, poisons, astral projections, leviathans, killer dogs, fantasies, the lone gunmen, baseball playing aliens, hallucinogens and alien artefacts. The episodes are so good it is hard to pick out the best of the lot. The episode "Rain Man" is absolutely hilarious. "Terms of Endearment" features Bruce Campbell who is excellent in everything and it is a pity they didn't keep his character on for more. "Tithonus", about a crime scene photographer, is quite creepy. "SR 819" is like the movie DOA featuring Skinner dying from a mystery illness. "Arcadia" is about a strict neighbourhood that hides a secret monstrosity. "Agua Mala" is one of the best monster hunting episodes to date. "The Unnatural" is the classic episode where a baseball player is really an alien. Season 6 is worth every penny. If you thought the X Files couldn't get better then this one puts the X back in the files.

Season 7:

(*/5)

The Mulder Abduction (where David Duchovny leaves the show)

X Files: Season seven is full of Special Agent Mulder but effectively he leaves the X Files at the end of this season only to make guest star appearances in the next two seasons, so this is the last season to see Mulder full-time. Season seven begins with Mulder facing a problem of an extraterrestrial telepathy that threatens his life. Scully is off trying to discover the meaning of life in terms of new facts that have presented themselves in religion and biology. A whole pile of questions concerning the alien agenda are answered in the first few episodes and what happened to Mulder's sister. The Cigarette-Smoking Man (William B. Davis) is back along with Assistant Director Walter S. Skinner (Mitch Pileggi). 'The Lone Gumen' John Fitzgerald Byers (Bruce Harwood), Melvin Frohike (Tom Braidwood) and Richard 'Ringo' Langly (Dean Haglund) make a few shows. Alex Krycek (Nicholas Lea) makes a return. Special Agent Jeffrey Spender (Chris Owens) is dead as is Agent Diana Fowley (Mimi Rogers). Season six of the X Files is mostly about - Alien hegemony, telepathy, mutants, luck, Millennium's Frank Black, speed, demons, magicians, Christian snake handling, Mulder's sister, reality TV, computer games, celtic voodoo, a cure for cancer, wild women, love, Hollywood, tobacco, fighting, genies and Mulder's abduction. This Season changes to try and provide a new type of humour halfway through and so the style varies along with the X files / Cops hybrid show and the mixing in of Millennium (You may want to see all of Millennium before you watch this Season as it ended before Season 7). Season 7 has a lot to offer. Of course it really all hinges on the two episodes 'Closer' about Mulder's Sister and Mulder's finale in 'Requiem'. Season 7 is probably the oddest of the traditional Seasons (1-7) because of the pace changes and David Duchovny resigning himself for only guest star roles in the last two Seasons (apparently he wanted to do other things like film). It is sad to think that this is the end to Spooky and we have enjoyed being with him now for a run of 7 Seasons which lasted 7 years.

Note: effectively this season is the end of the X Files for many fans. Duchovny is practically gone and the producers reduce Scully's role. Instead they try to lead the show with Dogget and Reyes who appear in Season 8 and 9 which happen to be also the worst seasons of the X Files. There are only a handful of good episodes (could even fit on 2 discs) and Season 9 doesn't even contain a deserved wrap up of the traditional Mulder/Scully storyline and even ends with a cliff-hanger. The much tooted 'the truth' double episode ending in Season 9 doesn't contain anything new you haven't learned already. You may just as well stop here.

Season 8:

(/5)

They are replacing Mulder and Scully with Dogget and Reyes,

X Files: Season eight is the one where Mulder leaves the show (in order to pursue a career in film) only to appear part time. You may even be in for Mulder's death. The show begins with a brand new introductory credit sequence which actually looks very good and there are two versions, one containing Mulder leading and one without Mulder with Scully leading. This way you know if Mulder will make an appearance or not. The new agent Dogget (Robert Patrick) is set to replace Mulder as Scully's partner. The Cigarette-Smoking Man (William B. Davis) is gone from the show. Assistant Director Walter S. Skinner (Mitch Pileggi) has more of a lead role. 'The Lone Gumen' John Fitzgerald Byers (Bruce Harwood), Melvin Frohike (Tom Braidwood) and Richard 'Ringo' Langly (Dean Haglund) are back as is Alex Krycek (Nicholas Lea). Special Agent Monica Reyes (Annabeth Gish) is also a brand new addition. FBI Deputy Director Alvin Kersh (James Pickens Jr.) is really playing the bad guy this season along with the new mysterious insider Knowle Rohrer (Adam Baldwin).

Season eight of the X Files is mostly about - Agent Dogget, Gibson Praise, time travel, monster bats, religious cults, ghosts, drugs, alien pregnancy, x-ray vision, metal man, pain, Indian mystics, viruses, Mulder, alien black oil, Doggett's son, alien colonisation, mutants and Scully's child. Dogget is essentially the new sceptic so he and Scully have a lot of fun in the single episodes. Also thankfully Season eight completely omits the slapstick humour change that Season seven tried out towards the end.

The major problem however is not with this season but what the producers are hiding from us. You don't see this until season nine. Essentially Special Agent Monica Reyes (Annabeth Gish) is here to replace Scully. Yeah the producers are going to be moving in the direction of Special Agent Monica Reyes and Agent Dogget leading the X Files for Season nine and possibly more. However Season nine killed the X Files. It is easy to give this series 4 to 5 stars without knowing what the producers are planning (I originally gave it 5) but when you know the truth! you can easily dock down. So Mulder essentially did leave the show in season 7 and Scully is leading for the time being but doing bit parts in season nine

Season 9:

(* /5)

Deceptive and misleading train wreck with little Scully and practically zero Mulder

X Files: Season 9 is a problem. The way to solve this problem is easy. Stop with Season 7. If you enjoy watching good TV seasons then stop at 7. If you are an X Files fan and want to complete things then fine but you know what is happening and if not here goes. Duchovny has left the show but appears for only a few episodes between Seasons 8 and 9 and when he does turn up it's not worth it. Now we know that Dogget is the Mulder replacement, but what Season 8 didn't tell you was that Reyes was the Scully replacement. So Season 9 is mostly Dogget and Reyes investigating something. The stories are all mostly terrible and a chore to sit through. It is like the writers and producers have lost all heart. In fact X Files Season 8 should never have been called the X Files. A better title for this would be Dogget and Reyes Season 2.

The show develops the new introductory credit sequence. There are a few versions, one containing Mulder leading and one without Mulder with Scully leading. Some have Skinner, others don't. It is mostly Scully, Dogget and Reyes but looks can be deceiving... and they are because Scully is in like 5 % of the show if she is in the credits.

So Agent Dogget (Robert Patrick) replaces Mulder. Special Agent Monica Reyes (Annabeth Gish) practically replaces Scully. Assistant Director Walter S. Skinner (Mitch Pileggi) leaves his lead role from Season 8 and virtually vanishes from this Season. 'The Lone Gumen' John Fitzgerald Byers (Bruce Harwood), Melvin Frohike (Tom Braidwood) and Richard 'Ringo' Langly (Dean Haglund) are back for one or two episodes. FBI Deputy Director Alvin Kersh (James Pickens Jr.) isn't really heard of. Knowle Rohrer (Adam Baldwin) has a episode or two but make no mistake about it, this is all Dogget and Reyes.

Season 9 of the X Files is mostly about - water, satanic murders, skinning, serial killers, flies, Mexico, looking for Mulder, more serial killers, crashed saucers, kid's imaginations, near death experiences, numerology, the Lone Gunmen, profiling, disfigurement, psychokinesis and finally... the truth .

Season 9 is bad. I cannot see how anyone who has sat through the amazing stories that were Seasons 1 to 7 could like, let alone recommend, it. What is there good to say about it? Duchovny was the X Files. They don't even try to tie loose ends up. Even the double episode 'The truth' doesn't reveal anything you haven't already heard before and ends in a cliff-hanger that has never been answered and probably never will. The producers are trying to sell us a different show under the banner of the X Files and didn't even have the courtesy to give us a decent Mulder/Scully ending. To top it off the episodes are a slog to get through and lots of them will insult your intelligence. This isn't just a bad season of the X Files... this is a catastrophe that many wish they never sat through, including me. It may well be the worst TV season for any series that I own. I think anyone who throws out boxes 8 and 9 from their X Files collection is rightly justified in doing so.

However the traditional X Files seasons 1 to 7 are excellent shows and is one of the reasons why the X Files manages to get into the Top 10 TV series of all time. Having this collection is worth every penny and you will watch it over and over again. It is an amazing journey and one well worth taking.

Pros:

- One of the best TV series of all time.
- Huge story arcs throughout the seasons.
- The dialogue and classic Mulder one-liners.
- Repeated viewing

Cons:

- You might be able to get Seasons 1 - 7 cheaper than the whole collection boxed.
- No remastering.
- Seasons 8 and 9 are terrible.

Star Trek Deep Space 9 review | 8.0 (2001-01-05 13:23)

I won't say much about "Deep Space Nine" other than that it is the most well written, off-beat, and truly suspenseful of the Star Trek series. It is the series for everyone else... those who don't enjoy happy Star Trek (ie- "Next Generation"), weird Star Trek (ie- "The Original"), or dumb Star Trek (ie- "Voyager").

It has a much darker tone, with a story-line that, if anyone watched from the beginning of the story arc to what is on currently, could understand and enjoy. It doesn't have the traditional "We are the Champions and can solve any problem in an hour". It features low-life, people making mistakes in judgement, conflicts over spirituality, and a much more human and less superficial look at one of pop culture's little universes. It features war-torn individuals and petty conflicts over land. Problems with culture-clash, government conspiracy and corruption, etc... This list could go on and on.

The main thing that makes "Deep Space Nine" different is that it is a Star Trek series for folks who don't want a lot of technobabble (not that there isn't any) Star Trek, where problems just go away or perfect people on a perfect ship that always win. It makes it more interesting for the watcher, almost like reading a novel. Most people, especially non-Trek fans, who had watched the series from its conception or jo

Battlestar Galatica review | 9.5 (2001-01-11 12:10)

BSG is a wonderful sci-fi series! In the midst of the battles between the human kind and the robots, the dark sides of the people are exposed whereas the robots display in themselves what humanity should be. The desire to survive, the yearning for the Earth, and the hope for the future drive both the humans and the robots as the distinctions between them gradually disappear.

The casting was exceptional and the performances were more than convincing. The actors did excellent jobs in expressing the emotional struggles within and without. The dynamic and unpredictable story lines demanded feats of acting skills and they all performed to high standards. There were a lot of breath-halting cliffhangers, palm-sweating suspense, and eye-widening surprises.

At times, some of the narrations seemed to be a bit preachy. There were times when the decisions of the people on the ship were too predictable and childish. I had an impression that the ending was rather rushed.

BSG kept asking us the same question "What makes us human?" In this regards, this TV series reminded me of a book called 'Somewhere carnal over 40 winks'.

I hope for more of realistic sci-fi series like BSG in the future.

Mad Men review | 9.8 (2001-01-15 13:36)

There are many hilarious moments that are only funny if you've been paying attention and understand where the character is coming from. There are also many tragic moments that would pass you by if you didn't know what came before. Many lines have double or even triple meanings. Watch this from the beginning, with a friend. Believe me, you will want to discuss each episode afterward to figure out some of the nuances of what happened.

The main Mad Man is the confident womanizer Don Draper, who is head of the Creative department at a mid-sized ad agency in 1960s Madison Avenue. I admit, at first I kind of hated him, but as the viewer learns more about him and his past, I learned to - not love him exactly - but like him and want to watch him endlessly. He is a complicated character who can be a very good man, but also a very bad man.

Don Draper is joined by a rich cast of supporting characters, many of whom deserve a show of their own: The ambitious young Campbell who is utterly sleazy most of the time, but has occasional moments of growth and even cuteness. Peggy Olson starts out as Draper's secretary, but her growth into a strong, confident woman mirrors what is happening for Woman in the 60's. Silver fox Stirling - he may be morally bankrupt but gets some of the best lines. I could go on . . .

The 60's clothes, hairstyles, decor, and current events provide an interesting backdrop for what is essentially a character piece. The setting provides both the occasional laugh (cigarettes being advertised as "healthy") and the more than occasional cringe (how could dumping trash from a picnic in the park right on the grass ever seem okay?!).

If you need fast-paced action or a laugh track, this definitely isn't the show for you. But, if you like character development and subtlety in your television shows, rent the first seasons on DVD and settle in. You won't regret it.

Monty Python's Flying Circus 9.0 (2001-01-18 11:28)

With hindsight, it seems possible that we can praise the Pythons too much. But you have to look at what they did in the context of its time.

They blew a massive hole in the conventions of not only television comedy, but television itself. They used (and abused) the medium to what was then the limit of its potential: no thirty-second "blackout" skits, no contrived punch-lines (except in the name of self-mocking irony), performers falling out of character and addressing the audience, skits being intruded by characters from a previous sketch, or even an entirely different episode (so you had to pay attention!), stream-of-consciousness animated links, absurd props (the 16 ton weight)... and they claim they merely threw it all together when the BBC approached them to make a "satirical sketch show" in the vein of "The Frost Report" or "TW3".

Not only that, but they have influenced probably every comedy writer and performer of note ever since.

The Pythons are either authentic, top-drawer geniuses, or the six luckiest opportunists who ever lived - probably a bit of both! They caught the BBC with its knickers down and took advantage.

OK, so the shows look their age, and much of the material is rambling, patchy, hit-and-miss stuff. But we only remember the good bits, and it is those good bits which will ensure the place in television history of Messrs Chapman, Clease, Gilliam, Idle, Palin and Jones for many years to come.

Lavishing praise on a thirty-two-year-old television series? It all seems a bit silly to me...

The Simpsons review | 9.0 (2001-01-19 08:25)

A television series that could probably be best described as "The Flintstones" gone stark-raving mad. "The Simpsons", everyone knows them. Some love the series and some could care less about it. Love it or hate it, it is near impossible to criticize the intelligence and creativity of this series. The titled animated family makes their home in Springfield, USA and gets into situations that are seemingly more outlandish and crazier than the previous adventure. Homer, Marge, Bart, Lisa, and Maggie are still going strong after nearly a dozen years of television life and with each passing moment it seems that the series sets some new precedent. For several years the show seemed to be the only attraction to the then obscure Fox Network. It was the first primetime animated show that was treated like a sitcom since "The Flintstones" quietly left the air in 1966. Many people feared the series when it first premiered in 1989 because they felt that it was hardcore adult material in a candied form that would appeal to younger audiences. Well for the most part this was true. However, "The Simpsons" would prove to be much more for all audiences. The great thing about the series is that it caters to all audiences. True there are usually situations that may not be suitable for all viewers, but then again that is true with everything on television this side of Disney Land and Sesame Street. "The Simpsons" works because of great comedy of course, but also great lessons that can be taken from most of the episodes. The people within the program may be animated, but they are just as complicated and vulnerable as the people watching them. All the regulars have their quirks, but in some episodes you can understand what certain characters are going through because the show is so life-like at times. Former President George Bush (the one from 1988-1992) once made a statement that families should be more like "The Waltons" and less like "The Simpsons". His opinion is somewhat old-fashioned and unrealistic. In other words, many topics dealt with in "The Simpsons" fit life for people in the 1990s and 2000s better than "The Waltons" did in the 1970s. A crowning achievement in television art.

Trailer Park Boys review | 9.0 (2001-01-19 13:01)

While I respect the opinions of those who criticized the show (not surprisingly the comments rated "least useful"), it appears that their views are so concrete that they just don't get it.

This brilliant series is not intended to reflect the "reality" of trailer park life in Nova Scotia, but is instead a wonderful artistic compilation of many extreme, bizarre, and mundane experiences that are interesting on an entertaining and (feigned) voyeuristic basis. There are operas, soap operas, space operas, and now "park operas".

Consider how difficult it must be to act improv style not only on the set, but to act "in character" during all media interviews and public engagements, as is the expectation. Not many actors would have the commitment or stamina to carry this through for the benefit of the production image. Mike Smith, who plays the character Bubbles, apparently can only wear the thick glasses for 15 minutes at a time without extreme fatigue.

Let's consider the acting quality and skill. Would Deniro or Pacino make this a better series? No! The charm is in the rough edges, the improv, the humility, and the belief that these are low rung thugs. It is totally believable and a credit to the acting and direction.

How is Canada or Nova Scotia being insulted if we recognize that this series is a parody and that we should not take it so seriously. According to the on-line polls I have viewed for TPB of the episodes to date, the average rating has been 9 out of 10. Most of those voting were from Canada followed by participants from the US, the UK, Australia, and New Zealand. We should be proud that we have had an impact on others, especially on those outside of our country.

Stan Marsh, Kyle Broflowfski, Eric Cartman and (sometimes) the ill-fated Kenny McCormick are 8-year-old boys growing up amid an adult world in the backward, frozen-over mountain town of South Park, Colorado. Their adventures, that make up creators Trey Parker and Matt Stone's animated comedy "South Park", include fending off everything from supernatural demons to the biggest names in the Hollywood intelligentsia. "South Park" is several things. It's rude, crude, shocking, smart, decidedly adult, completely original, and it is indulgent in the whims and imaginations of it's creators. It's also the very best political, pop culture and current event satire on television.

The show started as something of a fad - the new vulgar, don't-let-the-kids-watch show on the block. But as real world events changed, "Park" evolved along with them. Standing as the kings on top of a soap box they constructed out of swearing kids, talking poo, homosexual hand puppets and hermaphroditic parents; Parker and Stone where blessed with the freedom of a hit series, hip status and a network that gave them the freedom to do whatever they want. As the show aged, they matured in their storytelling abilities and the show went from shock value fad to a barbed satire of American culture.

"Park" is brought to life with oddly beautiful, vibrantly colored 2-dimensional cut-and-paste animation. The episodes are masterfully constructed. The writing a witty showcase of Parker and Stone's love for pop culture parody, graphic violence, pornography and a bold willingness to take on the hot button issues of the week. It is a free-for-all virtuoso where nothing and nobody is safe, every establishment media position gets flipped on it's head and every politically correct sacred cow gets eviscerated. Now that's comedy - if you can stomach a barrage of extreme scatological humor with your social satire. The vomit jokes and fat jokes on "Park" aren't there for the sake of it, but have substance behind them. And nobody does them better.

Eric Cartman, Mr. Garrison and more recently Randy Marsh (stepping up as a reliably hilarious scene-stealer) are classic characters, but Parker and Stone have gone further and developed an entire town of colorful caricatures. They aren't made to be as endearing as those in "The Simpsons", but aren't supposed to be. The characters aren't just vacuous idiots, and the laughs of the show come from a very socially conscious place.

Straight men Stan and Kyle are the show's most underdeveloped. They serve mostly as a mouthpiece for Parker and Stone's conservative libertarian philosophy, often literally giving a speech to a crowd in the show's finale. There is not a single other place on TV where you can see environmentalists, the anti-smoking lobby, illegal immigrants, trial lawyers, news media hysteria, elitist Hollywood liberals, abortion, sex ed in schools and every celebrity from Mel Gibson to Paris Hilton all get ripped to shreds. The show pulls it off because it has a unique ability to deconstruct and reconstruct current events better than anyone else (notably Comedy Central's overrated "The Daily Show with Jon Stewart"), giving them a hilarious or supernatural explanation without moralizing getting in the way of the laughs. They take their own messages to such loony extremes it's impossible to take seriously. The cherry on top is the seemingly endless quality of the original songs provided by the creator's cover band, DVDA.

With a skeleton crew that writes, directs, animates, voices and scores the show, this is independent television in it's purest form. This means it often labors on Parker and Stone's geeky indulgences - episodes center around a full-length "Star Wars" parody, the class gerbil making it's way up a human bowel or Timmy, a handicapped student who can only say his name. Occasionally, their shock value execution creates a gagging reaction that obscures an otherwise brilliant point ("Fat Camp"). But I'd rather have a show that challenges me than one shackled to clichés and network mandates. When "South Park" goes for the shocking ending, you better believe it actually will shock.

Still, "South Park" is almost impossible to recommend in a casual sense. The show is truly an acquired taste, but one I have to come to support whole-heartedly through the years despite (and because) I have absolutely no idea what to expect when sitting down for a new episode. How rare is that? Where so many other shows cower in the corner, begging for our approval "South Park" is constantly taking risks and re-inventing itself. We've got terrific stunt episodes, episodes built around one joke or building to a single knock-out punch line. They use the smash-cut ending better than anyone ("There Goes the Neighborhood"). Sometimes the experiments are to its own detriment and the episode is a 22 minute bore, but even then it's almost unheard of to find a show in its 10th season that is still water cooler television.

"South Park" grabs us by the collar, shakes us around and dares even its biggest fans to come back next week for more. The show is a monument of creative freedom with a wicked imagination, a true (and hilariously funny) sense of comic timing, and an insightful, socially conscious ear that smartly reflects a point of view starving for attention in mainstream television. It is a hugely entertaining, fiercely visceral, fire-breathing, red-blooded American satire made by, for (and most appreciated by) the most jaded and discriminating TV viewers. We just don't have shows like this on TV today. Anywhere.

There never has been a sitcom that truly pictures life among the singles (twenty-something) as good as this show does. It's not just comedy, it presents the episodes in such a way that one can truly identify with the situations they face so the audience has something to talk about in coffee shops too. The humor is universal. I feel like I'm part of the group every time I watch it because I feel the different emotions they go through. Plus, of course, it is so much fun because it's fast-paced. Every scene and every moment is relative to what is going to happen next so you don't feel like it is dragging you onto nothing. Just like how a sitcom should be. Funny!

Seinfeld | 9.0 (2001-01-28 08:00)

I caught a few episodes of Seinfeld over its final two seasons run on public channel, and made it a point to catch a lot more of Jerry and friends during its reruns. I found it very amusing on first viewings, but as time wore on, I began to like it more and more, and to eagerly borrow taped episodes from friends, and to hunt for re-runs on syndicated channels.

Of the two comedy TV series in the history of television, I would choose both Seinfeld and Monty Python as the cultural landmarks of the medium. In Seinfeld, there is not a trace of sentimentality and glib moralizing that plagues the American sitcom genre. Characters do not hug each other on Christmas, fall in love, wax on and on about family and friends, there is no faux-cathartic season ender so favored by the writers of, say, "Friends".

Instead, we have the narcissistic Jerry, constantly mining the minutiae of everyday detail for every bit of situational comedy; we have the hyper-aggressive Elaine, whose strings of breakups with boyfriends are as impressive as her petty neuroses leading up to the breakups themselves; the ultimate schlub-loser George, who lies to every single woman he dates, sells faulty equipment to the handicapped and muscles off women and children when fleeing an apartment fire; and the impossibly inventive physical comedy of the entrepreneur cum schmooze Kramer.

Over and over again, week in and week out, the quartet discuss trivialities with unbridled zeal, as the non-descript narrative pings from one mundane setting to another. Seldom has such wit been generated by such gargantuanly pointless human endeavors. That is where the brilliance of Seinfeld lies, in the ability to go to the most bizarre ends to fulfill the potential of a less than hopeful comedic premise; and the endless, pointlessly smug and nihilistic banter that almost invariably escalates into some of TV's classic lines, such as when George shouts triumphantly after winning an argument that "there is no bigger loser than me!".

My Parents were slightly different (2001-04-12 11:16)

Our parents cooked, for three hours. They did pizza, pasta, Italian foods, waffles, hamburger soup, Tomato soup, Pelmeni, pasta, chicken alfredo, Spaghetti, Fedelini, Capellini, Agnolotti, Cannelloni, Lazonia, Beef Stroganoff, soul food (mashed potatoes/beef or turkey/pees/squash), beef stew, hamburger soup, omelets, stuffing.

They weren't afraid to discipline me. For the most part. They weren't afraid of looking like a "bad parent" at the mall. They weren't afraid of telling us we were out of line and punishing us accordingly

They weren't parenting philosophy zealots. My parents went to my beacon relay meets track and field meets and cross country. I was into videogames, cross-country and track and field in 1999. I was a decent racer, placing 3rd or 4th on many beacon relays. I believe his parents would never see him at track and field.

Our family knew the value of money. Probably not that well, but no new vehicles for certain. We mostly bought computers and videogames, due to my 1990s culture. Even today, they didn't spend money on a new TV very 4 years! My parents updated TVs every six years. They didn't buy the most expensive cameras (entry-level SLRs). They used that money for a fifth wheeler and college education. Degrees are forever. My parents are heavy Sturgeon's Law followers. They buy everything on sale and aren't as materialistic as younger americans. We lived in a nuclear family.

Why I Hate My Hometown (2001-05-01 09:50)

I hate by hometown, because after high school nobody visited me monthly. Facebook started in 2004 and everybody was supposed to meet up on facebook events since 2004. I preferred to blog. There is little to do in Hudson, WI. There is no zoo, museum, Imax theater, fair grounds near Hudson, WI or St. Croix County. I require a bachelor degree to date someone from okcupid, match.com, etc to have a girlfriend to support a family. The available women on the social dating websites are ugly. I can self diagnose why I am girlfriendless. I know I don't have time for short time dating while earning my bachelor degree. Bars are for feeling sorry for yourself or drinking contests, not for dating. I spend a lot of time on okcupid so websites don't work.

The Person I Admire Most (2001-05-02 10:07)

Other than God, I admire Pres. Ronald Reagan. His economic ideas worked. He allowed Vietnam and Afghanistan War bankrupt the USSR. Nuff said.

My father has a masters in teaching, but he isn't epic on the grand scale. Above average doesn't do justice for this entry.

1990s Nickelodeon (2001-05-10 15:54)

It is good that some of these shows such as The Adventures of Pete & Pete, Rocko's Modern Life came back to TV. I was scanning the Nickelodeon shows one day and the 2000s aren't any good (like Dr. Phil and Dr. Oz) I am going to rate them best to worst.

1. Adventures of Pete & Pete 9
2. Rocko's Modern Life 8.8
3. Salute Your Shorts 8.5
4. Are You Afraid of the Dark? 8.5
5. Clarissa Explains it All 8.5
6. The Ren & Stimpy Show 8.0
7. The Secret World Of Alex Mack 8.0

I watched every episode of all of these TV series. I hope Generation Z enjoys it as much as I did.

Why I Don't Travel (2001-05-11 10:40)

Traveling is expensive and there is Internet connections. Cisco is building video-conferences rooms all over the US to make traveling other than vacation obsolete. Vacations only last in pictures anyhow. Materialistic objects last a lot longer. I am a materialistic person. I'd pick a Honda motorcycle over three Walt Disney World trips.

Why I Love This Sport (2001-05-16 10:59)

NFL football is my favorite sport, because the NFL propaganda machine is the most brilliant. Gridiron faster than soccer in real life so soccer is completely obviously boring.

Baseball, I remember the 1991 World Series in the Humphry Metrodome, is a great game. North America and Japan play it consistently. Baseball is popular in Australia. I remember seeing baseball every summer on Fox Sports Net.

In this paper, I will cover security precautions, file server, printer server for Windows, Macintosh running on Linux. Then I will do the DHCP services. I will draft the services I plan to implement for this server, the files that need to be configured during deployment.

The security I will need to do this will be putting this hardware in a server closet. I should remove floppy and DVD-ROMs in the workstation computers. Go into the Award Phoenix bios and disable the USB ports so that it is impossible to boot off them. I should add a GRUB password. The nohup updateb & command by itself will keep services running in the background as the administrator closes the terminal. With the Plymouth installer (replaced RHGB since Fedora 9), check encrypt with file system to activate encrypting file system. I can use the Sudo command to kill processes without having to use su to switch to root account. The su command could compensate security of your server. I should reduce the number of network services for my company to prevent buffer overruns. The nmap -sT server1 command will list any services running on the server. You can detect crackers with intrusion detection system (IDS) programs, including Advanced Intrusion Detection Environment, Integrity Checking Unity, PortSentry, Snort, Linux Intrusion Detection System, and Simple WATCHer. AIDE would be an alternative to tripwire with added functionality. ICU will work with AIDE to check for integrity. PortSentry monitors traffic on ports to see if it has been probed. LIDS will modify the Linux kernel to increase process and file security so the system would detect a breach. Simple WATCHer monitors log files and alerts administrators. Physical securities I will endorse are locked doors with security badge access to the server room, server cages, and electronic access control for every room that is IT related. For encrypting file system, the IT department needs either Truecrypt or EncryptFS. If Truecrypt is the decision, then Truecrypt will encode an encrypting file system. On the other hand, EncryptFS will store metadata of each file if there is no hardware encryption. EncryptFS is stackable. Truecrypt has AES, Serpent and Twofish algorithms with RIPEMD-160, SHA-512 and Whirlpool hashes. Finally, I would add a Cisco firewall up to it and add CipherOpics CyperEngine for the router so all outgoing information is encrypted. (Linux+, pg 674-676, 680-81, 2006) (Truecrypt, 2009) (EncryptFS, 2009) (Devx, 2008) (routers, 2008) (phoronix, 2008)

For firewall services, Fedora 10 has a Red Hat firewall application under the System , Administration in the upper left hand corner of Gnome. The first list you see is called trusted services and you check the proper ones like IPP, DNS, Samba, Samba Client, The next list is trusted miscellaneous ports. Don't forget to set Default configuration to Server, because desktop is highlighted on first execution. There is a ICMP filter in Firewall Configuration to send error messages. You can create a blacklist in it easily. Older versions of Linux have IPtables where you can set up which IP addresses pass thru and drop the rest IF the administrator wishes to have access to the 192.168.1.0 network. He/she needs to add iptables -f. Next line: Iptables -P FORWARD Drop, Third line: iptables -a FORWARD -s 192.168.1.0/24 -j ACCEPT. Now that network is accessed, but all other networks are blocked. (Linux+, pg 672-673, 2006)

For the print server, I would use common UNIX printing system (CUPS), because it is newer than some others and allows a computer to act as a print server. Fedora uses CUPS as default print system. In Gnome it is managed by the CUPS manager and taskbar where you can delete print jobs. KDE Print is a CUPS front end too.

To create a CUPS server, first use the Lpstat command to see if any print servers are available which there aren't, but this command is handy if there are print servers available. To create a print job use lp -d printer1 /etc/inittab. The -d will specify the distribution printer.

More options of lp

Description(Linux+, pg 477, 2006)

-d

Destination

-l
Specifies the ID to modify

-n
Number of pages

-o
Sides – sets if it should be two-sided short edge or two-sided long edge

-q
Specifies the print job priority.
More options of lpstat

-a
Displays a list of all printers that are accepting jobs

-d
Displays the default destination printer

-o printer name
Displays the print jobs in the print queue

-p
Displays a list of printers that are enabled

-r
Shows whether the cups daemon is running

Shows all information about printers and their print jobs

Other commands are cancel followed by the IDs to remove jobs. (Cancel p1-1 p1-2) To remove all jobs there is the -u command. I can restrict users with the lpadmin command. (lpadmin -u allow:root, user1 -u deny:all -d printer 1) The Lpr command is used to print documents to the queue. The lpq is to view the print documents in progress. The lprm command is to remove print jobs. (Linux+, pp 474-478, 2006)

If you need an user interface, there is the Printer Configuration Tool in Linux. Use it to browse queues of CUPS origin. Secondly, in the 'Add a queue name' dialog box, add the name of the printer (printer1) and short description. Thirdly, click Forward button to specify the queue type of the new printer and the administrator will select CUPS (IPP) from the drop down menu. Fourthly, use raw print queue (you can try postscript later, but first try raw print queue for compatibility). Click Finished. Finally, click on the new option such as "Printer 1" in Printer Configuration tool and when sharing properties named window comes up, select "This queue is available to all other computers" in the Queue tab. Check the box where it says Automatically find remote shared queues in the General Tab. (Linux+, pg 480-482, 2006)

To allow Windows to be compatible with CUPS, you must install Adobe driver from their website. I will be using the Adobe driver for this paper. To use the CUPS driver, go to Add Printer in Control Panel and select Connect to a Printer on the Internet option. When you see a textbox, copy and paste the URL of printer queue such as <http://hostname:/631/printers/Printername>. Don't use Generic PostScript Printer, but browse for the /etc/cups/ppd/PrinterQueueName.ppd. To add Windows support for CUPS, you must install the extracted cups-windows-6.0-1.i386.rpm driver to the /usr/share/cups/drivers directory and cups-windows-6.0-1.x86-64.rpm 64-bit drivers to the /usr/share/cups/drivers/ directory. The Windows cups can be downloaded off of <http://www.cups.org/software.php>. All Windows machines Windows 2000 or above will be backwards-compatible with CUPS post script. Apple had CUPS integrated into MAC OS 10 since 2002. (Owlfish, 2003) (Linux+, pg 478-483, 2006) (CUPS, 2009)

Linux users are supposed to go in Printer Configuration box and select the Printer 1 Queue available. In Windows, click on Add Printer in Control Panel than go down to option "connect to a printer on the Internet." Use the URL <http://hostname:631/printers/RawPrinterQuetenname>. When completed, the administrator will be able to have print server in windows from a Linux OS. (Owlfish, 2003)

To connect MAC OS 10 to a print server, first select the Print & Fax pane in the System Preferences. Secondly, in MAC OS 10.4, it is only a + icon, but in MAC OS 10.3, there is a Set up Printer at the top of the Window. Thirdly, IN Mac OS 10.3, click the IP Printing from the drop down menu whereas in MAC OS 10.4, click on IP Printer in the Print Browser window. Fourthly, both MAC OS 10.3 and 10.4, select the IPP Option. Fifthly, type in the hostname. Sixth, you're supposed to type in the Queue field, the IP address. (RIT, 2006) (Danka, 2002)

The Samba file server supports Windows and MAC OS 10. Samba file server will allow Windows users to drag and drop files on a Linux server. Since Fedora 8, Samba is packaged with the OS. First, the administrator has to enable network activity to the SAMBA server. Enable the Ethernet device in Network Configuration Tool. Secondly, the administrator needs to update firewall settings so the Samba server is trusted. In Fedora, click on Security level in System Settings or "system-config-securitylevel". Afterwards select the Ethernet card so it is a trusted device. Thirdly, configure the Service Configuration so that smb is enabled. Fourthly, logins should be configured. To do this, create user logins using the Gnome User Manager too. There is also a shortcut command, system-config-users. Add users as you need and then think about what directories you will need to access in the SAMBA server. Fifthly, I will need to configure a SAMBA server. This can be done by opening SAMBA inside Server Settings. This will make changes to a file called smb.conf in /etc/samba. From the menu, choose Server Settings than Samba. When the application loads, please press the preference menu and server settings. Use the Windows workgroup name. The authentication mode should be user if the logins are Microsoft ADS. Sixthly, you must add users to it with the Preference menu and the Samba user item. Eighth, add a shared folder by clicking on the add button using the SAMBA services configuration window with one shared directory. Ninth, the administrator will reboot the SAMBA services by clicking from the menu, System Services, Server Settings, and then Services submenu to open Service Configuration window. From there is a restart icon. In the tenth step, the administrator will be in Windows. This can be accessed by the Start menu, run command. Type in \\linuxserver.test.org (plan A) or \\10.2.2.3 (the ip address is plan B). The eleventh step should be signing in with one of the names created in SAMBA in the Server login Window. Once this is done, there should be a SAMBA window in there. (reallylinux, 2006) (Linux+, pg 664 -665, 2006)

To connect a MAC OS 10 PC to a SAMBA Linux server, the user needs to hit Apple key + K key to bring up a server address dialog box. Secondly, the user will need to type in smb://10.2.2.3 in the textbox. Third, you select your SMB mount. Fourth, the user will add the Windows Workgroup name which doubles as Samba workgroup name in the first box, and your username and password in the second and third textboxes. To disconnect from Samba, you should press CTRL+Click (mouse) and then click on Eject text on the dropdown menu of directory in question. (techrepublic, 2008) (Linux+, pg 664 -665, 2006)

The server will need Apache web server to host a web site listing company information. Apache is the most popular web server in the world. Apache web server has been included with Fedora for at least 2 years now so it should be on my Installation DVD. If Apache is already installed I would type in the terminal, rpm -q httpd. If some like http-1.7.1-7.2.fc10 shows up in the terminal than Apache is already installed. The administrator should have included it from the installation DVD, but if for some reason he/she wants the latest version, I found how to install and configure Apache web server. In the terminal, you should type su - install http. Launch to see the status of the Apache web server type su - /sbin/service httpd status in the terminal. To start Apache when the system boots add /sbin/chkconfig -level 3 httpd on. (howtoforge, 2008) (Linux+, pg 663, 2006) (Techotopia, 2007)

Now I am about to configure the Apache server for the domain name. Open up a text editor such as Gedit in Linux and edit the httpd.conf file in the etc/httpd directory. First type ServerAdmin webmaster@myexample.com with serverAdmin as your real name. Next, type in Servername myexample.com with the server name as the real name. Afterwards define where the web site files are going to be located with the documentroot command. An example would be DocumentRoot /var/www/myexample.com. I would create a html file with Open Office or Gedit and save as index.html in the /var/www/Myexample.com directory. The final step would be restart the server by using su - /sbin/service httpd restart. (howtoforge, 2008) (Linux+, pg 663, 2006) (Techotopia, 2007)

Description (Linux+, pg 663, 2006)

Listen 80

Specifies that the Apache daemon will listen to HTTP on port 80.

Servername server1.class.com

Specifies that the name of the local server is server1.class.com

DocumentRoot "/var/www/html"

Specifies that the document root directory is /var/www/html

Directoryindex index.html

Specifies that the index.html file in the document root directory will be sent to clients

Errorlog /var/log/httpd/error_log

Specifies that all Apache daemon messages will be written to the /var/log/httpd/error_log file.

MaxClients 150

Sets the maximum number of simultaneous requests to 150.

User apache

Specifies that the Apache daemon will run as a apache local user account

Group Apache

Specifies that the Apache daemon will run as a apache group user account

To get DHCP operating in Fedora 10, the packages should already be on the installation DVD and otherwise go to the URL http://download.fedora.redhat.com/pub/fedora/linux/releases/10/Everything/x86_64/os/Packages/ and search for DHCP-4.0.0-30.fc10.x86_64.rpm and dhclient-4.0.0-30.fc10.x86_64.rpm. Secondly, the next set of directions is if for any reason the DHCP files weren't installable from the installation DVD or that version is too outdated. Third, you type `./configure $make`. Fourth type in `$ sudo make install` in the terminal. . Fifth, once the DHCP program is compiled in GCC, now I should type in `sudo cp server/dhcp.conf /etc`. Sixth, you must configure the settings to match my system settings. Seventh, for help on configuration options, type in `man dhcp-options` in the terminal. Eighth, in the terminal type in `sudo touch /var/lib/dhcp/dhcp.leases` to get your configure checked for human errors. Ninth, the administrator is allowed to activate DHCP by typing in the terminal: `$ sudo chkconfig --level 35 dhcpd on`. Finally, the administrator will need to restart the DHCP by typing in the terminal: `$ /etc/init.d/dhcp restart`. (askdavid-taylor, 2006) (Linux+, pg 662, 2006) high school linux (2002-03-11 02:57)

After all this, the server and workstations should be secure and ready to go. I did Windows, MAC OS 10, and Linux to the Fedora print servers, I logged Windows, Linux, and MAC OS 10 to the file server.

I am literally the first person in the St. Croix Central to have a Linux class from River Falls's Chippewa Valley Technical School or any college. Classmates seems so programmer, talking about C++ is better than Perl? and Python? I was in a room with programmers. I had this spectator Dan who was in school with me, helped me get through class. Spanish sucks and I was forced with this one! College used Suse Linux 7.2. It ran the 2.4.4 kernel and had RIESER journaling file system. That means it'll pull the plug without hard drive fucking up forever. We learned some kconsole commands like ls, cp, Man. We learned how to install it. We had to use the VI editor to move words around in the terminal. The only reason to get this is because Windows XP gives screens of death, and it comes with Tetris, Klondike, Mahjong, Chess, mines, and Kbounce. XMMS plays mp3s off CDR. I played games while the teacher talked. This was the third hardest high school class ever after algebra and science.

I brought it home, and I use an external 3COM 56K modem for Battlenet in Diablo 2 where I have a kickass level 64 sorceress. I gave Suse half as much space as Windows XP.

Overall, people won't like this, because it won't play Dungeon Siege, Diablo 2, Unreal Tournament, Quake 3, Quake 2, Simcity 2000, Simcity 3000, The Sims, Alpha Centuri.

This Linux seems to be a bridge between Windows 98SE to Windows XP. I was thinking of putting JPEG on my Geocities page for guestbook comments.

Screenshots from Floppy.

Everybody took a website design and Microsoft office class and upload it to Angelfire.com instead. I have one at <http://Geocities.com/nightwalkers101>

RedHat Linux 7.1 (2002-07-28 07:10)

Red Hat Linux 7.1

Installation

Installation of Redhat is really simple. If you install directory from the original copy then you should be fine but I couldn't get my duplicate CD to work. I went out and bought the best program for installing Redhat Linux, Partition Magic 7.0. What it does is lets you point and click and verify your space then partitions the drive for you. The process of moving a 10 GB (Windows) FAT partition to the end of harddrive takes 45 minutes to depile. Once the program was done partitioning PM also pre-created Swap and EST Primary partitions. Since there is more then one Linux platform out there then my other OS I have installed Mandrake 6.1 could also be loaded. So what did I do? I made a second pair of Linux Swap and EST Primary partitions for Mandrake. If you don't customize you should have no difficulty with partition. Although your screwed if your boot image doesn't show up on the bootup screen. This happened before I went out to Best Buy and got the full version of Redhat Linux 7.3 Professional.

Linux takes up about 1.4 Gigabytes of hard drive space, this is about that of Microsoft Windows XP. The software is advanced enough that it can detect all monitors, modems, mouses, speakers, printers, and network cards from the start. The only problem I had Installing was I needed a Linux compatible hardware modem. A good hardware modem would be from US Robotics. They are the only certified Linux modem manufacture and they'll do it inexpensively keeping the quality at a high standard. When installed Linux gives you the choice of Ghome or KDE desktop interfaces. I prefer KDE. Ghome is cleaner while KDE is more stylish.

The Difference

I am writing this assuming that Windows is easier to use then Linux. Since Linux is a open source operating system, developing programs is less expensive. Linux was first created at the University of California in 1990 by a team of dedicated developers. Red Hat based in Indianapolis, Ohio took over Linux and made it better. Linux has come a long way since then exceeding in stability over Microsoft, the tyrant of share holders. Unlike Windows, Linux has to password the /root directory. This gets really annoying Linux copied Windows with all the Desktop look-a-likes, but this is ok because Linux also does a very good job imitating Microsoft. :)

Linux has the system of having software that comes with the Installation CDs. From what I know a lot of Red Hat Linux users like to install Linux once every month. Using software in Linux for a beginner isn't difficult at all. Point and Click. What novice Linux users need to be aware about is that /root (directory for system files) is password protected. All programs rely on that to install client in Redhat called Program Manager. It will have a comprehensive installation wizard that actually tells you all the system files used to install your application. If you go to Sourceforge.net, you'll see many alternatives of the same program. If one doesn't work then maybe another will.

From the developers stand point Linux is available anywhere. If you want to master Linux then you can download the information and take on the world. Also Redhat releases updates of an entire matrix of bug fixes called the Linux Kernel. Most time they release a new version every 6 months and post it on their website. The new Kernel includes the latest drivers, and mainly networking fixes. Linux is also the preferred choice in many business servers so it is no wonder many people want the latest version.

The Fun Factor - Linux Games

The technical side of Linux is confusing. I rather talk about it's software. Linux has better games than Windows. Windows may come with Solitaire, Minesweeper and Freecell. The KDE desktop comes with a lot of software (50 MB) We like Linux games because the developers must of been using their brains for each one. Asteroids is one heck of a game. Lieuant Skat plays well but isn't one of my favorite. So far their isn't any titles coming to Linux except for DOOM created by unknown Linux programmers.

One of the better side of Linux is that it has NES support. I used Little John NES emulator. It works with Linux and is stable as long as you don't mess with the settings. That's great news because now I can play Super Mario Bros. or some RPGs that were professionally done in it's day. Some of these programs don't work at all because the system is missing files. I would go on a file hunt if I had more time. I also seen emulator support for Genesis, Master System and Atari 2600.

Linux Screensavers are hands down better then those on Windows. The cycle includes concepts from the Matrix to a false virus with a download screen. , to your desktop moving around. That is cool. If you want Linux then your going to have to sacrifice your online gaming experience. No developer is putting any games on it. XWindows isn't powerful enough to simulate anymore then DOOM at this point. A lot of people won't use Linux unless they have dual boot or two, more than one PC.

Linux does have one graphics program on the Internet that I've heard is a lot of fun. It's name is Gimp. Gimp is the Linux version of Adobe Photoshop. I can't tell if it's the best paint program available but it's not bad. The program offers everything offered in KPaint, and a layer system that beats a lot of complex shareware Windows applications. For advance users, Gimp features a mult-layer system. That will allow users to make shadows for blending effects.

Developer's Support

I have to say that 3rd party support on Linux is at a high. It's support isn't as strong as Microsofts though. The program Kdevelop 1.4 features a C++ editor and compiler. Like Windows, Kdevelop can do the same things a developer needs, what I may need. Kdevelop is simple and very powerful from it's looks. If I needed to do source code, Linux now could be my system I work in. Matter of speaking, DOS Emu is a very powerful emulator of DOS 6.2.

There are some Linux programs on the web that give Linux support it needs. Linux isn't as fancy as Windows with most of those programs like Winamp and Trillian. I can think of Gaim. This program can be used when Linux is installed out of the box. It is the only messenger I found that had ICQ on it that was able to do that. Opera became by favorite browser because it had multible windows. The small section reserved for Windows isn't very big and Opera comes in handy.

Many people like to burn software they've downloaded off the Internet. Linux comes with X-CD-ROAST 0.98. The program works but I have been looking for other alternatives. I looked at the Linux megasite Sourceforge.net and found Arson and CD Bake-Over. Both programs were under 1MB and the .rpms installed OK. I couldn't find them under the KDE menu. It was a pain because I was hoping to see a better unity. I give 10/10 in development support.

Office Suites for Linux

The K-Office Suite is not my favorite suite. K-word is unstable and will simply vanish when I'm working. It find that advanced editor is more stable then Kword. Kword has Spell Check. You can't save files under other then KWD format. I would like to find another suite on the Internet with more file type support.

I hear that the ideal office suite for Linux is from Sun Microsystems. They are the on es who invented Solaros. So they created their office system for their Unix which also works in Redhat. The Sun Microsystems Office Suite defiantly has a better spell checker then that wimpy K-Office. It also can make presentations like Microsoft's Power Point Software and has it's very own email client which can gather news services like Microsoft's net meeting. Go Linux!

Communication Software bundled with Redhat

The Linux must have a high standard of network software to be used in businesses. I don't know if Linux excels in this area. For an example, modems connections are as good as Windows. The connection doesn't crap out on me when I'm away. XWindows is useful when reading graphics files and Video from MS Windows. It can read video format from Window CDs. I hear Redhat makes pretty powerful servers so it is no wonder so many people want the latest version of their Linux.

Linux worth it ?

In the end. I must pick Windows over Linux. Windows has the most 3rd party support and even though Windows may freeze up, it has IExplorer and the good webeditors. Money is not an issue with Windows. Windows users already know this, everything that Microsoft sells for 300 dollars, you can get it off the Internet free or close too. I still want to play Warcraft with friends so I rather not use Linux at this moment. For the most part, people agree with me with that part. If you don't have Windows yet. Spend the $300 dollars to get Windows XP Professional. Then use partition magic to partition Linux on your harddisk.

Who died on September 11, 1971 ???? (2002-09-11 20:02)

Nikita Sergeyevich Khrushchev (April 15 [O.S. April 3] 1894, – September 11, 1971) led the Soviet Union during part of the Cold War. He served as First Secretary of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union from 1953 to 1964, and as Chairman of the Council of Ministers, or Premier, from 1958 to 1964.

Stalin ordered the murder of millions of Ukrainians via starvation on 9/11/36.

Former KGB agent Alexander Litvinenko stated "Russia was fighting the USA with an invisible hand". Litvinenko also stated that Ayman Zawahiri (the new leader of Al Qaeda) was trained by the Russian KGB/FSB in 1998. Litvinenko was poisoned in London soon after he made that comment.

The Soviet Union Army was in Afghanistan in 1971. Nice al-Qaeda revenge theory.

Playstation - Final Fantasy VI review (2002-11-03 12:14)

Final Fantasy VI (Final Fantasy Anthology)

Top

I thought I try out Final Fantasy 6 on the PSone. It's one of the rarest and a very expensive Playstation game. In fact for the price of Final Fantasy Anthology, you can get a brand new Playstation 2 game. I never owned a SNES Game before. I played some Final Fantasy VI through emulation. The way I heard this is Final Fantasy VI (FF III in North America) is timed after the events of FFI mainly because it is the same time as the Esper Mages. The Espers are Magic race that are short and no faces with yellow eyes and witch's hats. Final Fantasy IX was the next game in the series of events in Final Fantasy VI because one of the characters in the game was a Esper. I believe Final Fantasy IX came before Final Fantasy III because the Magik empire still Existed. This game is near the end of the Esper Race when the Magitek Empire have wiped out the lands of Earth (War of Magi) consuming resources at an astonishing rate 1000 years after. Humans wanted to capture Espers and harness their magic to power the Magitek Armor, the apex of human civilization in that time period. But there is one human who carried Esper magic whos name is Terra and she forgotten everything except for magic. There are too songs in this game that I've heard on many gaming sites near the beginning of Final Fantasy VI when Terra, Biggs and Wedge are coming towards the Castle. The songs called "Death on the Snowfield" on the game credits, but I don't know what the other ones called. But "Death on the Snow field" was some of the finest Final Fantasy music ever created. I'm personally much more an action First Person Shooter fan myself. So Unreal Tournament music sounds better. In the game, after your first encounter with the first Esper in the cave, your Esper can join you in your battle, but only once. Then after it's up to you (or me) to figure out what the best way to use Esper Magic. Final Fantasy used a live action level up system, meaning that the enemy can attack any time during the battle. Enemies can transform into a more powerful enemy if you don't attack when you have the chance. The more you use different combos up magic the more often it'll level up and the more powerful the spell and the more powerful combos you can learn, which isn't learned early in the game.

Graphics - 5.5 - The game is definally a 2D game. It was one of the best looking Super Nintendo game available partly because it had some 3D short clips. The game runs in low resolution. The game great looking 2D animation. They look very clean and crisp. Well if you take it that all these sprite characters have "3 still animations at once" I still suppose most of you are addicts of the PS2 game, Final Fantasy X, the first playstation game to go high resolution. I suppose Final Fantasy VII on the PC was a high resolution game too. But this game had a unusual graphics engine to make animation so crystal clear which was also used in the creation of another great game, Chrono Trigger.

Control - 9.0 The control in Final Fantasy VI is able to be used with the D-pad. Usually in these old titles, you do a lot of menu jumping, especially when you quickly decide the type of Esper Magic to use in the random battle sequences. The menu is clean, and not over compensated with pretty icons and colors. All of Squaresoft games in this time used the active battle system. We seen this in Chrono Trigger, Secret of Mana and Seiken Densui 3.

Sound - 9.0 - I come across the music as interesting. I'm a guy who likes to download re-creations of game music based on MP3s which people made music off the Final Fantasy series. Back in 1994, all games were midi. Well the Playstation came out later that year and became the biggest hit since Atari, even more so then NES. It's good, it's super dupper freaken mega great people. You can compare it to Chrono Trigger, or you can compair it to Final Fantasy X and it'll be one of the best. Then there is recreations of the popular "Death on the Snowfield" in the cinematic video scenes. There are only four in the entire game. The intro in the cd, the castle scene, the ending and one other scene.

Fun Factor - 8.5 - This game should of made it with a specacular 32 bit upgrade. But it didn't. Any how the Gameboy Advance of Final Fantasy III does looks better then the Playstation game. The game is fun because it has a good story line through out the game. The game is rememberable because it has Espers in it and the has a good random battle bases. It's not too easy but not overly difficult.

Closing Comments - If you don't have to get Final Fantasy VI for the Playstaion to enjoy a more epic RPG released a decade ago. Just search Google for the SNES ROM of Final Fantasy VI. There are enough gaming sites that'll carry the rom in a zip file. If you need a emulator, get SNES9x, it's the best. Needs the minimal requirements and still as the best sound of any emulator. The Final Fantasy VI marked a end of a generation who played games when they were just game and people played these games over 3 or 4 times before they finally got sick of them. Now games are only completed once before the next best thing comes out. It's complete insanity now-a-days. Kids and adults a like throw 100s of dollars in videogames. It'll never stop as long as theirs a new Final Fantasy game in development, there will always be a young egger gamer wanting to buy it. (article posted July 14, 2003 1:20 PM)

Playstation - Legend of Dragoon review (2002-11-04 12:12)

Legend of Dragoon (revised three times)

Top

Legend of Dragoon is an amazingly long RPG spanning four CDs from Sony Interactive on the PSOne.. A dragoon is another word for "Dragon Rider" The game is really close to Final Fantasy except that it has a lock on system that allows you to hit at the precise moment when you need too. Some people just love this game. I see enough fan sites that say that this game is really amazing or is suppose to be. What do I believe. One part of me tells me that those sites are over exaggerating. The other part of me tells me that this is the few other RPGS that really are this epic. This is not the same story as Panzer Dragoon Saga for the Sega Saturn, which was much different much because Panzer Dragoon is a rail shooter. The game has 55 hours of game play from what I heard from the Internet. the English translation in this game is still quite good. The game spans 4 discs so it's describe every milk and cranny conversation between characters. So I won't try too.

Enough with the prelude, actually I have nothing against this title. The graphics are good. Some of the detail in this game comes from talented artists. SCEA took a lot of time to make this title write. They really didn't have any experience prior in making a 4 cd game. But after all it turned out okay.

As the story goes the earth was overthrown by darkness until Creator Sol dropped a seed into the ground. This seed grew into a strong tree called the Divine Tree. The divine tree grew fruits which feed animals of the forest and the world only became partially darkness. Their were 107 fruits that grew on that tree each representing a species. The last and final fruit had the most power and controlled the other fruits (species) until it had complete power over all of them. The Wiggles created dragons they enslaved to keep order of the other fruit. Humans went to war with the wiggles and they fought until they won. After the humans gained control of the dragon spirits, they could control 7 dragons, the largest and strongest species that the earth knows. Humans are both good and evil 10,000 years after the war, and have been using the dragoons as a weapon of mass destruction to weaver war and peace, depending on the time. This game takes play of a world war between two very powerful kingdoms. Basil at the moment is the loosing side.

Dart's town is destroyed by the Divine Dragon which he later controls. The divine dragoon is let loose to destroy villages. He is 50 feet tall. One of this close friends, Shana, taken from the village to be held prisoner with the Sandona Empire. The intro video shows the black knights destroying the village. Dart's town is just the end result in a cold war between the Sandona Empire and the Basil. Sandona isn't really an empire, it's just somewhat bigger then Basil. Basil is ruled by King Albert, a playable character in the game. Sandona is controlled by Frugal, an evil emperor controller of the black knights.

Dart, so far in disc one, joins forces with Lavitz, a escaped prisoner who is on the side of good. He is a knight of a fallen fellowship of knights. Much like a crusade. He is the only survivor and returns to Basil. Dart and Lavitz team up in the Prison to find Shana. The three heroes return to Basil to meet the King. The King joins forces with the three heroes. But he isn't playable until the end of disc one. King Albert is just is a contributing part of the story at this moment. By the end of the disc Lavitz is killed by the Dragon Buster by Lloyd by attempting to save king Albert.

The game is about collecting items so you have a strong enough armor rating to survive the massive hits enemies through at you. Sometimes bosses like Lloyd are impossible to beat even as a dragoon (a highly armored transformation of characters in battle) so the best way is to defend rather then attack. Other parts are questions that need to be asked to move the story. These questions are accidental before one can see the next scene. While some questions you can be asked and get them wrong. But you can return to that one person ask answer them again. Some once you are wrong on your answers the game ends and you start at the last save point in the game. Dialog is a key element in this game.

I got to the 2nd disc about 14 hours into the game. Lavitz was killed at the end of disc one What's odd about this rpg, and I don't mind it at all is that the game gains extra characters every town you go into. Like Meru, she's a brat. The youngest in the party, acts like she's 15 or 16. She reflexes on most of Japan's pop culture, I never been to Japan so I won't know. Meru is both immature and comical at the same time! What is a game without a comical character. She very well could have the most personality in the game. She comes from the town. There is a bounty hunter called Mappie, he's an evil character, yet another character working for Lloyd. In the game he should of used the Dart's dragoon spirit when he stole it from him. There was only one big boss fight in The Valley of Zero Gravity. The first Vangine from 10,000 years ago awaken for the fact that he's smelled dragoon spirit. I barely was able to survive such a monster. His left arm kill much of my characters. So I uses Albert, Rose as my other choice instead of Shana. Hansel doesn't have any magic dragoon stuff so I can't get a huge hit without magic. Alert would be the most powerful of the three. I survived by using a lot of heath potion since keeping hit points high is a key factor in beating any boss. I keep having a feeling that there be more powerful ones. In the game there was a little sequence in the beginning of disc 2 in Flatz. It said that the Black Monster (the monster that destroyed Dart's village) could have been the most lethal of all the Vangine. But I'm more afraid of Lloyd since he has the lethal sword. Maybe I can beat him without turning into a dragoon which will be hard since I'm beating a million bucks that our arch enemy, Lloyd is a dragoon himself. Just a thought. The city of Flanz compares well with the Final Fantasy VIII. The graphics are creative. This game is known most for it's creativeness, not for it's battle system. Since it's battle system is only average compared to other RPGS.

Just as Lloyd gained access to the Basil, we know know there is a fake princess in the Kingdom of Fletz. Maybe Lloyd, the main villian, turned himself into a princess? Do you think that could be the case? He failed in taking over Basil, so then he moves onto another 3 kingdoms spanning 3 discs. So that means I have to save 3 more kingdoms? Fourteen hours may not seem a lot per disc, but I spend 4 to 5 hours a day on the game, that that is not every day.

Graphics - 9.5 - Sony's latest 3D engine went into Legend of Dragoon. For as long as I known Playstation, Sony was a publiher for a lot of it's rpgs. But never before have I seen them attempt to make one ... Mixed with Prerendered and 3D models, the game is a little more then above average when it was released. The game has a lot of dungeons and mid-evil time villages. This game could be bigger then Diablo 2 or Final Fantasy VIII. By the end of the first disc, you get a cd jammed packed with detail as you go through the Garden Shrine in Disk one. That was full of great pre rendered particle effects. They almost looked high resolution on the PSone if it wasn't for the blocky pixel shades on the pillars, ground, trees. The castle by far was the best on disk one of the game. While it really gave the castle a dark feel, with it's green ooze like water flowing and appearing to flow continuously, and golden interior. The Castle wasn't all that big. This game looks a lot better on a projection TV then on a normal 25" The graphics are cleaner and the cinematic look dvd quality.

Control - 7.5 - The menu's a bit hard to navigate and the joystick at times is unresponsive. Or maybe that's because this Dart gets trapped in the prerendered backgrounds. The lock on system is sort of tricky. The easiest of Darts combos is the double slash. That just takes 2 quick hits of the A button on the duel shock controller. The game is straight forward at first. At the beginning of Legend of Dragoon their isn't any overly powerful enemies to fight. You can go back and continue fighting areas you once fought and level up. There is a dotted line on the world map. Follow the dotted line until the heroes get to a new area.

Sound - 7.0 - All the cut scenes are all spoken English. Soundtracks tried to be as good as Final Fantasy and came up short. I don't think the developing team had time to find much breath-taking music for this game. The end of disc one as comical in a way. You save the kingdom on the first disc so the war is technically over with both kings at piece. But then the other 3 discs or 30 hours are finding and defeating Lloyd. Get it you saved the world on disk one practically Fun Factor - 9.0 - I had a lot of fun playing the scenes. Random battles are frustrating. But if that's the case then don't get into Role Playing. They are about fighting in random battles. But I wish the battle sequences didn't come at random, rather have the enemy present like the castle guards. That would make the game a little better. But traditionally RPGs haven't soon the location of random battles and kept them appearing at certain locations (90 % of the time around key locations whether it be a boss or key) or by time (in many locations on the world map and questing places where you spend a lot of time doing anyway) Some people hate it, some people love it. I don't know myself. This is just another RPG of many that I'm played. As for enemy AI, there are both easy and hard battles spread out at random. I mean you have random creatures to fight on maps and questing, some are easy then others. Keep your Hit Points high through out the game and you should have no major issues. I have to experience all four discs to make a final conclusion to whether this game was truly the time it took me to get though the first disc.

CastleVania : Symphony of the Night

Top

Graphics - 10.0 The graphics in this game features the best 2D graphics ever on Playstation in my opinion. Better then Street Fighter III Alpha. These graphics are more detailed then most 16-bit side scrolling games. These graphics are really 32-bit. Special affects range from a varity of magic. Backgrounds are that of an mid-evil castle in the 17th century. You play a vampire slayer.

Control - 8.0 In times like these I think of Golden Axe or Castlevania Bloodlines on the Sega Genesis . The control is percise. But only the game player can time himself correctly because timing is everything. If this game had a difficulty from 1 through 10, I would rate this game a 6. Five is average and 6 is a little more difficult then the average videogame.

All enemies have counter attack mechanisms. I hate that. But to the true Castlevania fan, it makes things that much more challenging. With that, despite my level of ability, I like the control in this game. It's solid.

Sound - 9.0 - excellent music. Sound effects are good. Music sounds gothic, but reminds me of Mozart when playing this game.

Fun Factor - 8.0 - Gee, I don't really know. All I know is that it is the best 2D action side-scroller for Playstation. I'm not crazy about this game. Partly because the graphics are out-dated. I get a kick out of slicing and dicing enemies mercifully. Some of the enemies have a cheesy look to them. This game has a variety of magic to use. But it takes more time to find the spell recipes than I would of liked. I hope I'm not finding recipes all the time. I enjoy going through the game and beating the bosses. Komani did something right when they put out save portals everywhere. That was needed.

Closing Comments - If I had favorite Playstation game, this would be one of them. I have been a big dungeon and dragons, hack 'n slash rpg fan for 5 years now, ever since Diablo. This game almost makes me want to buy Castlevania Chronicles, almost. I have better ways to spend my money, but I say that this game was a good investment at 30 dollars. Gran Turismo 2

Graphics - 10.0 - good graphics. Although dated now, they were good in 1999. The level design is also good. Tracks are pretty long. Sun shines of cars. Good car selection.

Control - 8.0 - Great solid, tight control for driving. But, I believe the game is more for the hardcore gamer. It'll take me a while to drive like the pros. Not much like Dreamcast's F355 Challenge. I have to say that that game rocks more than this one.

Sound - 9.0 - above average soundtracks.

Fun Factor - 8.5 - Good game. I knew it was a good game, that's why I bought it used. (posted February 28, 2003)

Playstation - Final Fantasy VIII review (2002-11-11 12:17)

Final Fantasy VIII

Top

Graphics - 9.5 - In short, Final Fantasy 8 is noticeably better looking than the presquel, Final Fantasy 7. This allowed Final Fantasy 8 to take "Best RPG of 1999" by Playstation Magazine and Gamespot. This game, in town, looks high definition because of his pre-rendered backgrounds. I like the still camera angle for prospective. Although the traveling aspect outside looks in low resolution, they can't much improve on Playstation. It's about as good as it got for PSX fans. The cut scenes, although not DVD quality, are in high resolution. As you can tell, Final Fantasy III, VIII, and X are the only Final Fantasy games that exist in a high tech civilization. There are many enemies in this game and they all have different characteristics. Although I can't explain why I like some of the characters, I can tell you that these characters are original. Squaresoft has people hired to draw new designs 24/7, and these are some of their creations. Some of them dinosaurs, some of them plant creatures, some of them rapid animals, some of them high tech machines made to look like bosses. In total, there are 4 discs. The first disc is the longest of the four. You start out as an average fighter until Quistis asks you to become a SeeD member. This is where you work as missionaries and do jobs for various people. The first mission was a test. You must fight against a giant robot. The game continues when Squall hooks up with the Princess of Timber, Rinoa. She asks Squall and his team to get the President who turns out to be a boss in disguise.

Control - 8.0 Excellent control. Move anywhere in the game and your character goes there too. Squaresoft has used their latest version of the d-pad when traveling first used in Final Fantasy 7 and improved it in games like FF8, Chrono Cross, Xenosaga and Legend of Mana, to name a few. The battle system, doesn't allow you to run away or retreat, which I don't like in Final Fantasy 8. You can't defend yourself in this game unless a party member knows magic shielding, which is essential in beating this game.

Sound - 8.0 - above average soundtracks. The game repeats battle scene music over and over a lot. I really don't mind it at all. I think I also happened Chrono Cross too. Although I particularly like the music in the academy. The voice overs in the Full Motion Video are very good. Japanese port I heard was much better. Err, Japanese actors sounded much better in their language than we did in ours.

Fun Factor - 8.5 - Good game. I knew it was a good game, that's why. The game's not easy.

Closing Comments - Final Fantasy 8 splits off of the Final Fantasy franchise even more than Final Fantasy 3 did. I hear that you either really not liked Final Fantasy 8 or liked it a lot. One reason that many people did not like Final Fantasy 8 was that it had a simplified battle system. Another could be that it was in a high tech world, not what most Squaresoft fans are used to. While it was great for novice RPG games, like me, it is very boring to the strategist. This game did not disappoint, it was clear that it sold over a million copies in United States, and over 3 million in Japan. It is true that in some ways Squaresoft outdid themselves again and have been doing that for over a decade. We don't notice anymore. One plus Squaresoft did was releasing this game for the PC. Although in many ways, you get what you pay for in the Playstation game, the PC version does allow the game to run in high resolution, which I think is kinda cool. I don't think that the PC version has as much precision like the Playstation version. (posted April 04, 2003)

Playstation - Chrono Cross review (2002-11-18 12:18)

Chrono Cross

Top

Strange, but real sequel of Chrono Trigger. While Chrono Trigger was also one of the best RPGs for Super Nintendo, I don't really know, that's what I been told. Chrono Cross didn't live up to the hype so it became the 3rd best RPG for Playstation. Final Fantasy 9 stole all the popularity from it. This game was released on budget and on schedule in 2000.

Graphics - 11.0 - Really, Really good graphics. This is the best looking Playstation RPG. While Final Fantasy 9 would come in a close second, the pre-rendered backgrounds are very good if not exceptional.

Control - 9.0 - Control is alright. Some people thought the control was extremely good. I'm just ok on it. Most part of the d-pad is only for selecting menus onscreen to attempt your next attack.

Sound - 9.0 - very good soundtrack.

Fun Factor - 9.3 - Chrono Cross surpasses Density's Tale and Secret of Mana. But its potential can only go so far. It can't beat classics like Final Fantasy 7 or 9 in my opinion. The game is very long. That's always a good thing. I played half way through Chrono Cross and felt that the game was really frustrating. First you can't heal in the middle of the game then the enemy stuns you and then you die. Pretty sure it's not 100 % fair. I don't even know if the game mechanics are 50 % fair. I think the battle system is good but the lack of damage takes away from this game. It could have been perfect and one of the finest games ever created. (posted February 28, 2003)

N64 - Legend of Zelda - Ocarina of Time review (2002-12-04 17:36)

top

If you could invest 14 million dollars on a project that will get revenue soon after, in a matter of weeks in fact, who would you spend it. I don't know about the best way. But I would ask Nintendo or some huge developer to make a game if I get 20 % of the cost of the game. If I did, I probably would be a billionaire. Legend of Zelda: Ocarina of Time is the next installment in the Legend of Zelda franchise, the previous installment four years earlier on Super NES, Legend of Zelda III - Link to the Past. It's not a real sequel because the Link of the Past came after Legend of Zelda 64. But this game is a multimillion sellout. One of a kind. It was popular enough for Nintendo to re-sell this game for Gamecube. Games are way more expensive now-a-days. Most games cost of good quality cost around 30 million dollars for labor. Instead of actually traveling in time, Link discovers himself and his family. Okay, so the first two prequels to Zelda III don't fall in time order. In fact I don't believe this game came after Legend of Zelda on NES. In Zelda III, Link starts out as a boy in Hyrule and in Ocarina of Time, Zelda starts at the same age. Link to the Past was a really good game.

The Fun Factors

It has everything to challenging characters to really good story line to huge environments. I love that aqua babe because she's eh, naked, sort of. Zelda 64 with the help of Nintendo's lead artist, Zelda the game turned out to be a great masterpiece, perhaps the best N64 game ever made. Zelda I could of played for a whole week and weekend and never get through. It's sometimes frustrating. Too frustrating just because you don't just die, you also lost your location. But you kept all your equipment. It was the first Zelda game that you could save your progress along the way. This got me into trouble when I went forward in time. This didn't really made the game less fun, it this made me not want to go through all The freaking trouble to get back where I started. I also liked the cinema at the end when Sheik unraveled herself as Princess Zelda. Nintendo made Zelda 64 95 % flawless. It looked good on limited cartridge storage. I remember seeing the first Zelda Gamecube shoots at Electronic Entertainment Expo in 2000 when Link and Galeon fight off on the silver screen. Every one thought that the 10 second film was a cinematic cut scene in the game in development. It looked awesome and looked like it was timed right after Zelda 64 which added a lot of value to the original 3D game. The online community went berserk over that small piece Nintendo given to them. Only for about 2 weeks though. That's because a lot of those Nintendo fans played the game and liked it enough to impatiently wait for the next game.

Conclusions

This game lives up to Nintendo's reputation. In some ways it recreated it. If you known a Nintendo 64, You should rent Ocarina of Time for a few bucks. Most people who played it including me said was a satisfying experience.

Super Mario 64 ©1996 Nintendo

There are those who say that Nintendo developed the Nintendo 64 around Super Mario 64. For short while, Super Mario 64 was the only game available for N64. Super Mario 64 is in top recognition on the Nintendo 64. Here's Why.

The game has reamped Mario into 3D and placed him in a respected platformer. By now you can not see the advancements Nintendo had when they released the game. Now if you type "Super Mario 64 ROM" into Google, your going to get a couple 100 hits. To be honest, it's really one of a few playable Roms you can have through emulation on this platform. Mario in this game, like the Super Mario RPG before it, Squaresoft's last game for SNES is better then 80 % of the games out there. Mario has to try to save Peach, the Mushroom Land Royalty from the evil

Browser (yeah you guessed it, Browser may not look evil to you anymore with all the different franchises he's featured in.) Anyhow, this game runs about the 4th best N64 game I played. Okay, a few features that I like about this game and makes it a good platform is that you can not die right away. The game is fairly easy to beat. Okay its more then easy, its a weekend thing if you start on Friday, you may beat it the next day or if you don't stay up the night, you can finish on Sunday. If you go to funcoland and happen to pick up a N64, this game is worth a try above all others. (posted 04/18/2002)

Banjo and Kazooie (2002-12-07 17:38)

top

Developed by Rare, Nintendo's 2nd party developer, Banjo and Kazzooie and it's sequel didn't shame Nintendo. For I while, the game trailed Zelda when it came out the same day. Rare had something going for them when they thought of a SM64 clone. Banjo and Kazzooie wasn't even in development for as long as Zelda and people who played the game, at least children, thought it was fun. I agree with them. In side the game features another 20+ hour game for people to beat. At the time the game cost 69 bucks to own. That soon changed a year later. I actually bought my copy at a fair stand for 20 bucks. They had a game store behind them. I could of only gotten one. I stopped playing Banjo and Kazooie because something was odd with me trying to beat a craps ass. Yeah I only onced turned up the music before i've learned my lesson. Take it from me don't turn up the volume, this isn't a adult game, people. Unless ur alone then it would be ok, but with people, with all the strange pecking sounds Kazooie makes may be disturbing.

Conclusions

Solid title but was really made for little children and not us 'Mature' Adults. PS. If you grab the controller from someone because you want to finish it, that does mean that you are the one who's immature.

N64 - Star fox review (2002-12-09 17:39)mattStar Fox 64 ©1997 Nintendo*top

Nintendo's sequel to their first fully 3D game for SNES, Star Fox 64 does show off a little. The game however is N64s only aerial combat title. This is not because the design behind the game is very good. So what if its not perfect. You still get hard bosses to defeat, secret areas in space, power ups and a fair chance to beat the game. You can not ask for something more. In the game you control Fox McCloud's plane. In the game you can either play as a normal or expert modes, but you must also beat the game with the amount of lives you get, and one of three courses. Actually it is in your favor to do the best possible job in each mission. Then instead of showing 'Mission Completed' your mission statist will show 'Mission Accomplished.' If you get a accomplished statist you must beat the mission in a lotted time, destroy a current ammount of enemies, or beat a boss a current way (in two ways you must accompany another to the end of the mission) All those challenges make the game what it is. For a cartridge technology Star Fox shined over many Playstation titles in 1997. Of course it could never beat the popularity of Final Fantasy VII.

Conclusions :

This is actually a enjoyable one player title that can be beaten with-in 2 hours. If you can figure out how the controls work, piloting the Fox's craft is as easy as making peanut butter and jelly. Not recommended. What is recommended is giving this title a rental if you don't own a copy of Star Fox 64 already. (posted 04/17/2002)

I do not see Perfect Dark as beginning that perfect. For one it can be extremely hard. But it can be extremely fun when playing with friends. But lets discuss the single player mode missions. Rare took what they had with Goldeneye back in 1997 and improved append it. About 4 people on the first project managed to put their skills to use on Perfect Dark. However perfect dark did have good voice acting, the most superior engine of any N64 game ever created. But the title didn't have one thing. That thing cost Rare. No frequent story line. Many say that the game has a story and I say those people haven't got their heads on tight. Perfect Dark is pretty much going around killing people (the sweet part) and meeting people that don't really help you fight your enemies. Those Aholes this leech of your security. I mean who helped you in that Chicago level with the Heavy Armed Robot. No one. Who helped you escape from Area 51, No one. Who helped you beat the hardest level in the whole frequent game, this you. This game is a kick ass multiplier title and a more then decent single player title (those ones with no flaws) but Perfect Dark don't have what it takes to be on the high end. Backup support.

Conclusion

Buy this game and you'll love it to death. After a while, you find yourself playing a current console title that is bigger, badder and almost as much objectives as Perfect Dark. (posted 04/20/2002)

- Turok 2 Seeds of Evil ©1998 Acclaim

Another popular 1st person shotter (that I've own for 3 years now) is Turok 2. At it time in late 1997, this game was the best looking FPS on the charts. If you look in it a little you'll find it isn't what it was once hyped up to be. Like Perfect Dark you are on your own for the entire time. Turok 2 story line takes off when Turok Dinosaur Hunter ended. It is relatively simple combated to other games i've played. The game gets confusing when you try to find keys to open doors that will bring you into other areas. Sometimes you have to backtrack to find the beginning. One thing that you might have simfinely for is the children. Sometimes you this want to help the crying children who are locked in cages sometimes guarded by gruesome enemies. You must find these cages through-out the game. One personal opinion on this captured children thing. You see that all the humans that once dominated the land are all gone, all except for children. You think it was a trap, and it was for Turok. I mean I think that Turok has a heart but it was to his disadvantage to have to defend himself in hostile territory this to try to save one of those kids. It this made me mad when I died. The game has your average pistol and a rail gun, some semiautomatics, garnades and a nuke that you need to take care of yourself. Throughout the game their are wave points to save, but you must either be a expert gunner or need to remember the map. The game does have a map but it becomes useless when the map changes 3 or 4 times while you move forward in the game. Turok 2 is huge and it will take you a weekend to get through it.

Conclusion For a 64 bit title, Turok 2 is real pretty. You'll have a good time shooting enemies. You may not like the fact that the Turok franchise are the bloodiest shooters on the console. However if gore don't bother you, I say, Turok 2 can be really fun if you know what to look for. (posted 04/20/2002)

SWRS is either a game that you like or you don't. I liked the sequel on Gamecube much better then this one on N64. It has nothing to do with graphics my friend. Even though the game had no problems with control or camera angle, the game is difficult. In someways I got frustrated when playing this game. You have your X-Wings buddies but they never defend you. The computer does a good job piloting them but they don't help me. Star Wars Rogue Squadron is the top Star Wars francise in terms of gameplay. All other Star Wars games where pieces of shit to say briefly. Only Rogue Squadron and some of the X-Wing titles avaiable on PC where any good. Factor 5 seemed like they went all out developing scenry for this game. This game did run without the RAM pak but pumped every ounce of hardware capabily without it. Star Wars even made the best looking games for 1998 and yet it was on a outdated console. I mean those other titles like Zelda and Turok 2 still came out the same year, but PCs where at the 64-bit /128 bit barrier with the TNT 8 MB videocards. Some of the games already looked like what Perfect Dark looked on the N64 to years later. So for that reason, Lucas Arts also put this title on PC. They did get more N64 games but the PC version can still be played in High Resolution today.

Conclusion

Factor 5 did a good job making this title. They spent 2 years on the game. But if you see the PC version you might want to pick that one up instead. The PC version looks alot better. (posted 04/19/2002)

Tony Hawk Pro Skater (Greatest Hits Package)

| GAME FEATURES |

Developer : Sonic Team

A.) First title to feature Sonic, Knuckles, Tails, Amy, Mr. Robotnic in high resolution. Had stunning graphics at it's time. Won awards in 1999 congratuating Sega for good programming effort.

Publisher : Sega

B.) Good sound track.

Released on Sept 09, 1999

C.) Version 1.1 (greatest hits package) prevents game from freezing up at times. Some noticable improved loading times on levels. Prevention of Sonic getting stuck into walls. Control is alittle more responsive then original release.

D.) A

Type : Action Platform

I barely remember Tony Hawk Pro Skater for Sega Dreamcast. Tony Hawk Pro Skater made it to the Dreamcast about a year after its successful PSone campaign. Back in the day when Playstation graphics weren't god dead awful in some games. Like its Playstation counterpart, the first of two that made it to the Dreamcast were very simple, but those games were running in high resolution. The Dreamcast at one time just happened to get a gem when running directly against the Playstation. One of having a 128-bit console was that you had much less fog and false texturing. So you could see the other end of the arena / stating rink quite easily. The graphics were some of the Dreamcast's best. The Playstation 2, where all Tony Hawk games are known to exist from did have extra texturing to its characters. In fact if the more playstation textures were drawn in then in the Xbox games, the Dreamcast game would have about 1/3 the processing power of that of the Xbox. It looks better then 70 % of all Dreamcast games which quite an accomplishment when also is considering that the game play mechanics are amongst the best of that system. The graphics vastly improved over the N64 version of Tony Hawk. Tony Hawk Pro Skater is one of the few games that I've played before I stop playing the Sega Dreamcast all together.

For obvious reasons, I thought there would never be a popular Playstation game for the poor knocked around Sega Dreamcast. Some say that in a year the DC graphics were not going to last those of the duel processing power of the PS2. While others said that Dreamcast only had only a few good titles from a handful of good Playstation 2 games. Well may I remind everybody that when Playstation first came out in 2000, although we knew that there would be some quality titles coming, it didn't have any exceptional titles except for maybe Tekken Tag Tournament and Ridge Racer V. Well if this game isn't a popular game port from the Playstation, then I'm mud! First of all the Dreamcast managed to get 2 new exclusive skating parks that the N64 and Playstation didn't have.

Pros for Tony Hawk Pro Skater for the Dreamcast

- It had a lot of skating parks to skate in.
- Much better graphics then Playstation and N64
- The graffiti contest in Multiplayer mode rocks.
- The part where you're only player that plays against yourself unlike in later Tony Hawk games were the gamer has to answer to other skaters to do jobs.
- A lot of fun doing tricks in free skate mode. Neversoft got rid of the trick bar in THPS3. Points don't add up unless you're against the clock. In this game the skate tricks are added up in the game while you're playing the game. I thought that game was better. One reason why Tony Hawk Pro Skater was more fun then the sequels.
- The ability to customize your skate and make your own skater with a variety of clothes, tattoos, caps, shorts
- High Resolution graphics over the Playstation, the frame rate improved I've heard
- Game takes advantage of Dreamcast hardware
- Music in the game is some good, some bad.
- The Dreamcast version, I wonder wasn't easier to play then the Playstation AKA the difficulty of the game got better. Tricks and landings were better polished off.
- Replay mode.
- Could create your own skating parks. However, Neversoft gave more options in creating skating parks in Tony Hawk Pro Skater sequels. The parks seem to be bigger in size in the later games.
- I remember H-O-R-S-E and it was fun. Only one thing wrong with H-O-R-S-E. It's was like your opponent was doing better then you were and you could barely catch up then he would finally beat you after a long time. I realize that this mode is in THPS3 and THPS4 so I'm happy. The mode followed through. One reason to get the next Tony Hawk game for next generation consoles. I played it in THPS4 on Xbox and I realized the same mode was on Sega Dreamcast which was cool.

Cons for Tony Hawk Pro Skater for the Dreamcast

- Bulky Dreamcast controller. Ever since I got a Playstation in near the end of 2002, I realized that the PS controller felt better then the Dreamcast and N64 controllers.
- Couldn't play your character in THPS2
- Tony Hawk may be a legend but he is so much easier to control then the other skaters. This got better in THPS4 when playing it. It doesn't hurt the game all that much, but you screw up a lot when playing Tony Hawk first and then playing my other favorite skaters Andrew Reynolds and Kareem Campbell.
- I don't watch the X-Games on ESPN so I don't know much about skating.
- Replay mode could have recorded longer.

Summing up Tony Hawk Pro Skater

Graphics

7.0

The talented group at Neversoft improved the game when Playstation owners said that it couldn't be approved apound.. The game wasn't a direct port. Tony Hawk and Spiderman used the same graphics engine. The Dreamcast unlike the PSone and N64 versions before it, had a perfect 60 frames per second speed.

9.0

Tricks are easily pulled off. The Dreamcast controller was bulky but that didn't hurt the game too much. An extreme sport game shouldn't be this professional. But it did and did it very well shocking most Playstation owners when it came out. Extreme Sports doesn't have a good reputation of having a good selection because most of the games suck. But then you have four Tony Hawk Pro Skater games too so you can never run out of Tony Hawk Games. It couldn't of done it without the outstanding achievement Neversoft gave all platforms when releasing this game.

Originalism

8.0

The game had all the pro skaters in it. The levels were based on actual locations throughout the USA.

Sound

5.0

The game had music from the radio. Most of it was heavy metal and rap

Replayibly

Dreamcast has some unusually great titles. This was one of them. This game is great, I am a Sonic fan as much as I'm a Mario fan. I'm a little old to be a Sonic fan, but I don't care.

Type : Action Platform

Sonic Adventure is the recreation of Sonic Xtreme, a canceled first party title which was originally for Sega Saturn. Sonic Adventure was the first project for Dreamcast, Sega was working on. A demo came with the Dreamcast featuring the first level of the game. Some argue that the first level with the whale was the most fun in the game. The backgrounds were amazing in 1999. And this game. The game featured cut-scenes in the middle of the game when Sonic saves Amy and defeats Dr. Robotnic again

Summing up Sonic Adventure 1.1

8.5

Great first effort to put Sonic the Hedgehog on Dreamcast. IGN.com said Sonic Adventure had the most impressive graphics in 1999. I noticed that Dreamcast displays images at a lower resolution and looked close to what Gamecube pumps out at 800/600. While the sequel looks better with more pixel shadowing, the first game was better developed (in my opinion) For some levels in the game like Speed Highway for Tails, the level is completely changed. The close ups are great and clean. Sonic looks better than some of the backgrounds, but that can easily be overlooked when going at top speed on a speed track.

8.0

Playable to say the least. In 1999, the graphics were clearly the most important aspect in creating Sonic Adventure. Although the key locations in Sonic 3D Blast showed up in this game with music Sonic fans heard from Sonic the Hedgehog for Genesis. About 50 % of the Story Mode is moving around while the other 50 % is completing the objectives. It is a kids game that adults play.

When I played this game when I was 14. I liked it. The environments are creative. The music is remixed, but isn't very good. I like Tail's theme, the only exception.

It's a classic, it's a mulk up of a Sonic defeating Dr. Robotnic. In the game Sonic Team uses voice acting, and is as bad as some anime voice overs in movies. I forget who does the voice acting but Sega hired hollywood actors to act for them. Sonic Team blew it, I admit the idea is good. I wonder if the voice acting improves in the Gamecube version. It has to be so Sonic mets all the playable characters, and the other characters have there own story.

Dreamcast has some unusually great titles. This was one of them. This game is great, I am a Sonic fan as much as I'm a Mario fan. I'm alittle old to be a Sonic fan, but I don't care.

DC - Skies of Arcadia review (2003-01-04 11:22)Skies of Arcadia Legends*| GAME FEATURES |

Developer - Overworks

A.) 30 - 40 hours of competitive gameplay

Publisher - Sega

B.) First story driven RPG for Nintendo from SEGA / Overworks.

C.) Near perfect use of the battle system (not as good as some of those Final Fantasy titles but very close. If you haven't played Final Fantasy VII on PS then don't worry about it. The game is still rich in gameplay and really cool in my opinion.

Released on Jan. 29, 2003

D.) Fight the Black Pirates in ship battles. Every time you level up on the ground everything in the skies with reset. Giving you more experience points when you get back aboard.

Type - Role Playing Game

I would only say that Skies of Arcadia Legends is a cool game if you are a RPG fan. I am a mild RPG fan at best. Skies of Arcadia was first released on the Sega Dreamcast in 2000. I beat the game twice. What I'm about to write, is why this game is cool.

As for the story line, it basically says Vyse and Aika who go out and explore their world. The empire called Valua finds the home of Vyse and Aika and destroys it and captures all the blue rouges. (Later in the game the village is rebuilt) Vyse and Aika are now on their own to go on ship battles and hand to hand combat with Valuan soldiers and creatures that inhabit 6 climate zones in the game. Some are hard to get too. That didn't stop me from playing Skies of Arcadia. Vyse eventually gets to save the Blue Rouges but since they are out to save the world from Valua, the blue rouges meet allies on the way including the Prince of the Valuan Empire (which is supposed to be a secret let loose later in SoAL) Together Vyse and Aika with their allies fight evil. [Story 10/10]

The visuals in this game only come second best to Sega's other RPG Phantasy Star Online Episodes I, II. Much like another ported RPG on Gamecube called Baldur's Gate - Dark Alliance, SoAL is basically a straight port of the groundbreaking Dreamcast game. Skies of Arcadia was the nicest looking Dreamcast game ever created It has to be the truth. Plenty of thought went into Skies of Arcadia Legends.

I also like how Overworks put together the worlds from Summer climates to Winter climates. The water effects were exceptionally good. Most additional art is 3D which tells me that Sega put a lot of time in this game. I can also tell that the game was budgeted and could have been more if Sega fully emulated SoA to Gamecube standards. Imagine Skies of Arcadia look and feel like Final Fantasy Chronicles (a huge release on Gamecube appended release). The technology of character models painted is outdated in 2003 but was state of the art in 2000. The Gamecube release is one of the better looking titles from 2003. [Graphics 8.5/10]

Ship battles are fun and appealing to a novice game player. I happened to get to the end of Skies of Arcadia. The game gets harder as the story gets more complex but that's how all games are these days. Some die-hards may want to replay the game until they perfectly destroy Victora battleships. In the game, if Vyse didn't get to Valua's secret weapon first and would say, "Ouch!" However, I purposely went through the different zones to fight pirates again and again. It was so fun. [Ship battles 9/10]

My favorite stage of this game is when Vyse and Aika / Fina get separated and all three go in the minigame not knowing the other one is there. It took me forever to figure out the puzzle. To complete the puzzle the player had to move platforms a certain way to get across. So Overworks comes up with a split screen showing Vyse and Aika going moving levers on the screen which moved the platforms. I got frustrated a couple times but I eventually made it.

In the sound department, Skies of Arcadia has an original soundtrack. Not as good as Grandia or Final Fantasy tunes. But the music is well orchestrated. Characters in the game don't speak every word. But there is a convincing story line bar on the bottom of the screen. [Sound 8/10]

You have every reason in the world to buy Skies of Arcadia if you like playing role playing games. For people who don't have 30 hours to spare shouldn't get it. For those of you who can't wait until Legend of Zelda comes out on Gamecube buy this game. It will more than satisfy your needs. It is very well designed. If you like Diablo style level up in your skills, Baldur's Gate Deadly Alliance may be another choice. I am looking into it myself. (Review Posted February 01, 2003 9:20 AM)

DC - Sonic Adventure 2 (2003-01-05 11:24)

Sonic Adventure 2

| GAME FEATURES |

A.) Featuring original cast : Sonic the Hedgehog, Knuckles, Amy Rose, Tails, and Dr. Robotnik.

Developer : Sonic Team

B.) The next chapter in Sonic's never-ending saga to end Dr. Robotnik plans to conquer the world.

Publisher : Sega

C.) 3 - 4 hours of gameplay.

Released August 21, 2001

D.) faster frame rate and better loading times over Dreamcast

Type - Action Platformer

Sonic came to Gamecube with a lot of people wondering why? It was Sega that went to Nintendo not the other way around here. So since the two major publishers had 3 big titles to put on Gamecube, Sega this made extra Dreamcast software that would do perfect ports or this is what it looked like. As for Sonic Adventure 2, all you get is Sonic and his speed. To me, this is all right at the beginning. But dies off more as the storyline goes on. SEGA probably got every 10 year old who owns Gamecube wanting to buy it. It is not your Sonic that you once knew and loved on Genesis. But you can tell that Sonic really came along when Sega put him into 3D with clearest pixels and some indirect lighting effects to match.

The Level Design

You might not like Sega for turning Sonic into a more "Techno Sonic". I know why too. Japan is crazy about Techno Remixes. SEGA wanted Sonic to become a Disc Jockey before someone could say that they went overboard. When they did the idea was official and no one could change it. Sonic Team most defiantly borrowed from NiGHTs and famous NES classic Marble Madness to create the Sonic World we're now familiar with. The treasure hunts were more satisfying and height doing Sonic levels. What do you think of that? Knuckles is cooler than Sonic. You can also tell that Sonic Team cleaned up the levels since Dreamcast.

The Control System

Either then Sonic Adventure on Dreamcast. Whether or not you think the gamecube controller has out or not.

Sound

Sonic Team did one thing right out of the sound department. They made the music fit the game. I recently tried doing remixes with songs and all of them turned out horrible. Sega probably did their best in the sound department. The music sounds like alternative rock or hip-hop customized for Sonic and Knuckles. I personally don't care for it much. Most people would listen to the radio anyway so it depends on your preference.

Conclusion

Sonic Adventure 2 is a less a winner than the original but I agree with those people who give it 3 1/2 stars. It would make a decent retail. (posted July 11, 2002)

Type - Role Playing

Grandia 2 is my first RPG, if you call Zelda 64 a RPG then I suppose it'll be my second. I bought it because I have growing interest in console RPGs. Sometimes if you play your first console RPG, you think that the game is better, the game mechanics are foreign to you, and you hate doing battle scenes over and over gets irritating. To my surprise, I liked it a lot. I knew the game had engadging cut scenes and battle mode. I like the story in this game, infact it's as good as Final Fantasy 8, which game out the exact day that Dreamcast was released.

Summing up Grandia II

Graphics

10.0

Featuring better graphics then Sega's "Skies of Arcadia" Every pixel in this game is smoothed out to be more smooth and more colorful then even the Playstation 2 version.

8.0

I enjoy an easy game. While this game isn't easy to complete, it has good control. The camera is great. It hardly has a problem. The battle system has definding feature. The navagation system activated by the B button in progressing the character, is very fullled out. It has basic features including the ability to change weapons, potions, battle gear for all characters in your party. What you except in any RPG. If you compare this game with Squaresoft's Final Fantasy 8, then there is a lot in common with the battle system. The battle system isn't consistant. The game pauses while you plan your stradeegy against the enemy. While it doesn't make the game ingenious, it makes the game incredibly realistic to play. You need this battle system to fight enemies in the game. It doesn't take much intelligence to figure defense out. You might want to find what skills are best suitable on the Internet. I once wrote a faq on how to play this game.

Highly Original. Has the story line of a fantasy rpg. The towns are orginal. Grandia 2 is pure fantasy. I liked the music in the game. Game Arts has good music. The music was really good, and speed up when in tense situations. I like that. The text driven RPG has some spectacular quotes. Some cut scenes are spoken out, and their pretty good. The FVM is good.

Save the Gradias from the evil Valmar spirit that lives inside the people. Interesting story - 3 main characters are effected in some way in Valmar's clutches.

7.5

This game is simple enough were most people can defeat the final boss, yet powerful enough that you might want to beat the game again. I've beat Grandia 2 only once, but I played 4 hours into the game 4 times since I got it. The best RPG for Dreamcast, no doubt.

Type - platform

Ecco the Dolphin comes from originally the Sega Genesis game of the same name. No, it's not a remake. But it does show off Dreamcast's hardware dolphin style. They really mean "Think like a Fish" in this game. Exploring underwater with the exception of breathing oxygen. How much activity can you do without drowning is the apex of real life. It's hard because Ecco has no weapons except for his dolphin call. Dolphin calls can open new areas and scare away certain enemies like sharks!

Summing up Ecco the Dolphin - Defender of the Future.Graphics

Graphics that some PS2 games can't handle. Maybe. This game has great water effects. Some sea life here and there. Although most of the coral reefs and plant life are drawn in. It still looks cool.

Control

7.5

Control the smartest dolphin in the world. Ecco does a lot of tricks. He even knows who his friends are. Control isn't any problem in this game. The camera remains still as Ecco swims around in his universe. I don't like that. They should change that.

8.5

I'm not a big fan of dolphins. It has great graphics, although outdated in 2003. It's also hard. I quit this game because I didn't know where the objectives were. So that's what is for. Even with the facts, you still have to survive on your own. I would use a gameshark on this game if I had a chance. Ecco is either trying to make new friends or die because he has none. Friends are essential.

6.5

Save the world from an advanced alien race. Which is sending beacons underwater for testing the earth for climate reasons. Unless Ecco can prevent it. I don't know because I was unable to finish the game. But first he has to use his friends to get pass by o

Type - Ferrari Racing

If it is between Test Drive Le Mans and F355 Challenge, I would have to pick Test Drive Le Mans. But this is the second best racer due to all the options. Playstation 2 may have Gran Turismo 3 A Spec and Midnight Club, but this game has a cool announcer. Realistic Ferrari sounds. And Led Zepplin / Guns and Roses sound track. These are some classic rock on the Radio. Too bad that the game has only 5 playable soundtracks. It would have been much cooler if A2 included more rock tracks. As for the game, the physics are better than your dead average racer like Wacky Races, Mario Kart 64 and Micromachines. They all suck except for Mario Kart. the game has plenty of tracks including 5 unlockable tracks. I like the sound of the engine when I slow down. The engine skips and that sounds cool.

Summing up F355 Challenge

Graphics

9.0

Graphics are one year ahead of it's time. The tracks haven't lost their momentum. It's a little fuzzy in the front. But that's what Dreamcast racers are like. The cars are PS2 quality!

10.0

Perfect Control in my opinion. I lost interest in this game when I got a Gamecube. But I remember when I played this game, it had an edge to it. You play this game and you realise how much more the game is difficult without the handicaps. The AI is good enough that if you're lucky, you'll most likely get 3rd place unless you know exactly what turn to take and when to make it. Don't forget to brake. If you're willing to put time into a racing game to find out the best curve turning style, you're welcome to try. Cars turn extremely tight. Failure to that could of meant a new opportunity.

DC - Resident Evil 2 review (2003-01-10 11:30)Resident Evil 2*| GAME FEATURES |

A.) IThe playstation port in high resolution. Suppost to be the best Resident Evil 2 port of any console (PSX, GCN, DC, N64)

Publisher : Capcom

B.) creepy rooms. creepy zombie faces.

Released on March 01, 2000

C.) Eccasional freeze ups on the 2nd disc.

Type : Survival Horror

When Resident Evil 2 came out for Playstation in 1998, it was very improved over the orginal. It looked a lot better, it was twice as long. Originally Capcom was going to port Resident Evil 3 to Dreamcast. So they ported Resident Evil 2 also. Both games had the same graphics engine and for some reason Resident Evil 2 looked better then Resident Evil 3. The cutsceens improved in the Dreamcast Version. Of course all of this becomes unrealistic after playing the Gamecube version of Resident Evil. The prerendered backgrounds are here. One thing that has been unchanged. Out of all ports (including Gamecube version) the Dreamcast has the best graphics. But hey the game is still there. Leon is locked inside of the Police Station for the majority of the first disc. Then Leon and Claire get out and go into a zombie infested hospital. RE2 was my first Resident Evil game I played. I eventually became a fan of the series. Shooting zombies is fun. Although I am a fan, the games do wear off on me. Perhaps after playing and getting lost getting the proper tools to open new areas is too strenious. Capcom also made spinoffs franchises like Clocktower 3 for the PS2. Clocktower 1 and 2 were exclusive to Sega Saturn. I don't know how good they actually were.

The bad was that they didn't redo it like in Resident Evil Code Veronica. I suppose it would be very expensive to create a game and redesign it like if it was in Resident Evil for the Gamecube. Capcom didn't add any parts to it. At times the game was too hard to get through. But that doesn't effect it, it's now Capcom could improve it. Don't get convinced that Resident Evil 2 looks like Resident Evil Remake for Gamecube. It looks like the former Dreamcast version. Capcom priced it out at 30 dollars. The original game for Playstation is already 5 years old.

Summing up Resident Evil 2

Graphics

6.5

Graphics are good. But not that good. I've seen better on Dreamcast. The blood looks like a blob of red paint instead of real blood. The game follows a formula that Horror Films also follow. Not showing the actual creepy monster until you run into him. The eerie rendered police station, hospital added to the scary effect. It had everything. Very detailed. A long the way, there is hints like being locked into a room and knowing that you'll soon end up fighting another boss.

8.0

Not extremely good control, but very playable. The Dreamcast port didn't have quick turns in opposite directions that RE: Code Veronica had. The game has point and shoot written. Dodging zombies can be hard, but that is also determined by your skill level. It's good!

Original

7.5

Really Original. The game has a story to back it up. And it's not what the dog dug up. It's a compelling story or 2 if you play both discs. One disc has Leon's game. The other has Claire's game.

Sound

9.0

There is elevator music in this game, but it's creepy at times. But combined with the discussing noises the virus infected spooks make, it can really be scary at times. The effects come straight out of "Nightmare of Elm Street" or "Night of the Living Dead" or "The House on Haunted Hill" Honestly, the music fitted the game really well. I was scared sometimes.

I wasn't too excited to play it over again. One major reason was that I would have to relearn all the right times and where the FMU was going to play (since cutscenes drive Resident Evil 2 to advance further. It's not that I'm lazy, I never would have time to play the whole game finish it with out dieing, getting a little mad. Turning off the Dreamcast and starting over. Then why am I a fan of Resident Evil? When there is nothing stopping me from advancing, the game grows on me, and is addictive. If you got this game when it came out for Playstation. Don't look at this port. You might like the high resolution textures. But it's the same game. You don't need Resident Evil 2.

Test Drive Le Mans

| GAME FEATURES |

Developer : Ifangrames

A.) 12 playable tracks

Publisher : Ifangrames

B.) All different types of cars

Released on April 20, 2000

C.) Best stock car racer on Dreamcast

Type : Racing

Test Drive Le Mans was some good in a dieing console ready to vanish from stores. This game was ported to Playstation 2 and PC. But the Dreamcast had the best graphics and best control of all the ports. The control is tight. This is 2 years before Ifangrames renamed itself to Atari. Basically the same company. What made Le Mans so good, was it was a little above average to begin with. It had the lengthy tracks. The race cars. It is a Speedster vehicle. If that isn't enough it took granted like rain effects. The rain splashes off the ground and makes the road slippery. Flog fills the sky and corners are outlined in lights a couple feet before in view. While it's makes the game complete. It just can't compete to today's games.

Summing up Test Drive Le Mans

Graphics

10.0

Graphics are really good. I haven't seen any other racer for Dreamcast look this good. It has water particle effects. Great structure graphics. Not too blurry on this ageing console. Graphics are best compaired to Test Drive Rally.

Control

9.0

Tight control. Stopping is a nesesity for making sharp turns. The dreamcast control is able to make good control in a good game. Without having to worry about expensive hookups. This game supports Dreamcast compatible steering wheels.

Original

6.5

Most of us have seen these games on more powerful consoles like the PS2. This game is oddly a giant leap from games on the PS2.

Sound

9.0

TCool engine sounds. I don't mind the techno remixes. Still too un-American for me.

9.5

The tracks create a positive feeling inside. The control feels like your driving a Formula One stock car. It doen't feel quick like in "Ferrari F355 Challenge." That too was a simulation. Yet it's not a rally racer where you continually let off the accelerator to gain tread. The variety of tracks add to the replay value too.

DC - Sega Rally 2 review (2003-01-14 11:33)Sega Rally 2*top*| GAME FEATURES |

Developer : Sega

A.) 4 playable tracks all of them around the world with 4 soundtracks.

B.) The best looking racer of 1998 and 1999

Released on September 11, 1999

C.) AI is strong. You must pass all cars in front. Big gaps between you and other competitors, means you must make few errors to get in front.

Type : Rally Racing

Sega Rally 2 for the Sega Dreamcast was my most favorite game by the end of 1999. Dreamcast had the first console racer to feature high resolution graphics, it was awarded many noninees for good looking racer by PCWorld, Gamespot, IGN.com and Videogames.com. If you ever seen a actual rally race on television, you see that the cars must have decent conditions or the car will not steer ride. Some cars have 2 and 4 wheel drive. The difference between the two is with 2 wheel drive the driver can slide easier. This doesn't work in wet pavement. So the car you choose is the car you must drive in all conditions. You can change the car specs to match better turning. If you have a narrower track, the bearings should be looser. that way you maximize speed while turning a little at a time. The co-driver tells you what kind of curve your going to do. This part gets some getting use too. You must have total control when coming to this title. But it's a lot of fun when you do know the steering patterns. Manuel shift is the best because you can downshift and save seconds. I use to use the time attack option and play against my ghost. That was cool because the ghost went exactly where I went on my best lap. Sometimes I beat the ghost it sometimes I didn't. In my opinion the Time Attack is the most rewarding aspect of Sega Rally 2.

Summing up Sega Rally 2Graphics

Graphics are solid. Today's games have high resolution everywhere graphics that are independent from the rest of the game. True to life 3D images. This game was the first to have these. This game also started all the high resolution work and set an example of what the next generation rally racer should look like. The game has decent replays and the car models are extra detailed (dreamcast standards we're talking about). The backgrounds are somewhat a blur. But this game is 4 years old and deserves respect for what it was. Not that it's been dominated. Sega put a lot of work in this game from what I can see.

10.0

Perhaps the best control I've seen in a Rally racer. I also loved Test Drive V Rally. But this game was better in controlling the vehicle. For what ever reason I liked that game better.

Original

700

Tons of originalness. The tracks were well designed. And it had twice as many tracks as the Saturn prequel (I own the prequel too) And Twice as many cars. But the quality of the tracks were about the same.

Sound

8.0

The soundtracks were ok. And the engine sounds took advantage of the Dreamcast sound chip. The Dreamcast had the loudness chip I ever heard on the console. Even compared to the XBOX. They both sound the same.

9.0

The game was so realistic back then. And the gameplay wasn't bad to begin with. Sometimes I had bad wipeouts because I overturned in a tight corner, which I didn't like at all. But I liked this game From Sept 99 to March 2000 because no other racers were out for Dreamcast and no games had better graphics until Test Drive Le Mans or Test Drive V Rally or F355 Challenge or Vanishing Point came out for Dreamcast.

B.) Epic Music I haven't heard since I don't know

C.) First anime game I got into.

Type :Fighting

Soul Caliber was the first game that featured anime that I got into. The women in the game were full of expression. I meant they looked sexy.

Anyway I liked this game better then Dead or Alive 2 because the characters could shield themselves easier. The game had tons of moves. I remember looking on the web for best tactics to use in the game. Which moves were the most effective so I won't have to figure it out myself. When I played it I ruled in the arcade mode. Simple tricks could help you get away with the first 5 opponants. But it was didn't take me long to finish. Were the opponents too dumb to do special attacks. I don't know? The key was keeping far away from them until they made a attack and close in and do attack until you KO! them. It worked so well that I beat my own score many times. Maybe 50. I never got into any other fighter. I've tried 2D fighting games like Marvel vs. Capcom and Street Fighter Alpha 3. But this game had something that those didn't. Pure 3D action! I'm sure that people will remember this game for years to come.

Summing up Soul Caliber

Graphics

9.5

How should I say extremely good. While Sega Rally 2 was the best looking racer for Dreamcast. Soul Caliber was the best looking game in the whole year 1999. And for good reason. It was an direct port of the arcade game. The game even was enhanced over the arcade version.

9.5

Perhaps the best control put into dreamcast. The balance between dodging, shielding and fighting were up there in the all time. I seen this game in cupple "Best Games of all time" polls and Editor's Choice Polls. The Soul Caliber who changes his appearance in the end of the arcade is twice as hard as any opponents you play in arcade. In survival, you compete all fighters and then it cycles over again. You can't ever beat survival. You will die. It's just a matter of when you will die. The longer you hold out the more unlocked items whether it be characters or gallery pics in the game. You might be able to defeat all characters one time through by button mashing, but the second time it's up to your knowledge of luring in your opponent, waiting for him/her to make a mistake and going all out on them with special attacks before they can recover and fight back.

Original

Tons of originalness. The sounds are really good. I can tell that his game has aspects of Tekken. But for a new franchise this game is really good.

Sound

8.0

The soundtracks are really good. They have up beat tracks that have really good scores.

9.5

I love this fighter. But I love Racing more. But besides Super Smash Bros Melee. Soul Caliber is my second favorite figher of all time. And I don't really play videogames that much anymore. It's hard to say. I'm mostly a spectator now a days.

C.) 15 hours of gameplay in this game.

Type :Platform

This was Dreamcast's only platform game. Uri Soft made Rayman before, but he's different now. Uri Soft successfully put him into a 3D platform game like what Nintendo did to Mario. The little guy doesn't have legs or arms, just a hand and feet. But he comes equipped with magic which he uses to defeat enemies. It was a solid game, but I fell out of interest with Rayman. But he was funny at times. The game is huge. It must have been really high profile game @ Uri Soft because they've put this game on PlayStation, N64, Dreamcast, and PS2. So it was stunning for all consoles. IGN.com said that the Dreamcast version was absolutely gorgeous. The game is already 3 years old, and I thought Dreamcast was going to last until 2004. You do a lot of skills. The game has many ingame cut scenes. And the music is very platformish. When first looking at it, you'll think it's only a kids game. Well sometimes kids games can be great games too. I haven't heard about Rayman 2 much, but this game is also out for Playstation 2. With the exception of Super Mario Sunshine, PS2 has all the great platform games available. Publishers put about 90 % of platform on the PS2. It's good that Dreamcast got one of the top 5 platformers to own for PS2.

In the game you save your homeland. The AI in this game is above average. The Rayman 3 AI is suppose to be improved dramatically over Rayman 2. Though in Rayman 2 the game gets plenty difficult in the middle of it. Most of the game is hanging from vine to vine. I like the colors in the game. The lava level was both long and inventive. It added character to this game. The rest of the artwork is really good. Not half of any developers in the Industry can do as well as Uri Soft did with Rayman 2. Three years after Dreamcast stopped production, it's an antique now.

It's looks really good. A lot like the PS2 version of the game. The dreamcast version of Rayman 2 stands out more because the game looks brighter shades of Rayman and some backgrounds. The water effects are good. The sky moves.

9.0

Take Rayman through an adventure with precise controls. I've beat the game. It's not too hard to beat. While I think they've stold something from Legend of Zelda with the "Z targeting" effect. The game locks on a enemy and automatically destory it. However the camera in the game is good. However, once you make a big mistake, you start the whole level over.

10.0

In some ways I think this game is as inventive as Mario. Only Ratchet and Crank, Spyro the Dragon or Crash came this close. Why? Rayman is simple, kids love him in France (he owns his own show) So Rayman is cool in France and North America? Hmmm, although I lost interest in platform games, I respect Uri Soft for making this game. It's fun in it's own way.

Sound

8.0

The soundtracks are appropriate for a platform game.

Replayibly

I'm not into Dreamcast platform games anymore. I might pick up Rayman 3 for Gamecube though. Just more Rayman, he's gain a reputation for being a good platform game.

D.) A co-op option letting a friend battle evil with you.

Type : Action Shooter

I bought this title thinking that I could play hours of mind boggling action. In fact for the first 2 days I was afraid to play it because I read that Ikaruga had a difficult learning curve. That almost made me bring it back to the videogame trader. I bought it because the graphics looked great.

In the game you have a ship called the Ikaruga that has black and white bullets shooting at you. Black shielding absorbs black bullets . But black sheilding will instantly be destoried with one or 2 hits of white bullets. You have about 5 retries and 14 levels to beat. In the game you have 3 difficulties to play around with : Easy, Normal, Hard.

The soundtrack in this game sounds like it came straight out of Soul Caliber. The level 1 track in Ikaruga is the exact same track in one of the fighting levels. There is no guitar playing in this game.

I've recently got up to level 3 on Easy mode. The game has 5 chapters. Ever feel like the game is preventing you to getting very far. Beginning with the 3rd level you have black and white bullets being shot at you at the same time. So your first thought would be to try to get up on the screen to avoid them. Problem is you have walls in this game. Passageways that you must go through. Go in crossfire is your second thought. That part is easy part to figure out. The tough part to figure out is how to always be in right kind of crossfire when it happens to avoid the opposing color as much as possible. If you got that part down. Then congratuations, you are there for master gameplayer. When I began playing this game I thought that level 1 on easy was a bit hard. Little did I know. In some places there are swarms of enemies that go diangle and have a stream of firepower. Death is the only way it seems. I have little natural talent in these kind shooters, but I play it for fun, and that is the only thing that matters right now. (Article posted on May 13, 2003 | revised 1 time on May 18, 2003)

Summing up Ikaruga

Graphics

7.0

Has scrolling background, looks like flash on the Internet. Everthing is sequenced to happen the same way at the same time in every game. But Treasure has some nice 2D artwork. I admit that the bosses are cool looking in 2D shooter 3D form.

8.5

If In the box Sun Tzu says "Amid the turmoil and humult of battle, there may be seeming disorder and yet no real disorder at all." On the controller you use the joystick the A and B button. But the disorder is how you obsorb the energy. So the quicker you can change your shielding, the longer you'll stay alive. No average gamer can beat the first level without dieing once!

Orginalism

The same exact thing has been done for years. Ikaruga is continuing to keep this once shriving genre alive.

Beautiful to look at, hard to beat. In my opinion the patterns of enemies that you fight against adds to the experience.If you download many action 2D shooters like DeathStar off the Internet, I advise looking at Irkaruga. There are better Gamecube games out there like Metroid Prime that will satisfy your adrenaline for a good action game, but this game shouldn't be underestimated. Personally, I'm okay with it.

Gamecube - Legend of Zelda Wind Waker review (2003-02-02 11:40)| GAME FEATURES |

Developer : Nintendo

A.) High Resolution young Link, what more can you ask for.

Publisher : EAD (Nintendo 1st Party House)

B.) Game play built around the Orcania of Time engine. don't know all the ways it improved, but the "Z targeting battle system" is back!

Released on March 24, 2003

C.) New technologies never seen in Orcadia of Time on N64 or Gamecube.

Type : Role Playing Game

It's suppose to be Legend of Link, not Legend of Zelda. To set everybody straight, Shigeru Miyamoto, the creator of Legend of Zelda and Super Mario Bros, who directed and helped publish all of the game you see. From Gamecube's best looking games to real time game machanics, we was in charge. Except he is one of the most respected videogame designers in the industry. He had competition from Squaresoft, who also put a burden on him to make the best game possible. The Wind Waker had about 150 Japanese on staff putting everything together. Other games he was lead designer for were Super Mario Sunshine, Metriod Prime, Luigi's Mansion, Pikmon and Super Smash Bros. I own 4 of the 5 listed. He believed that most of his work is teaching developers how he wants in his games. When Orcania of Time came out for the N64, it was undeniably Shigeru Miyamoto's biggest achievement (Game Informer Magazine). Legend of Zelda became one of those RPGs with very high statist such as Final Fantasy. Now the entertainment industry is seeing "The Wind Waker" reach the same success as Orcania of Time did 5 years ago. When you turn on your Gamecube system and play this game, what your seeing is the most detailed role playing game ever on a videogame system.

This game is cell shaded like Rayman 3, another platform game for Gamecube. Some people liked Rayman because it is a cross between Super Mario 64 and Spyro the Dragon. In my opinion I liked Rayman 2, but ever finished it. Rayman got to frustrating to finish. Super Mario Sunshine was a good example on how development delays get games in trouble. Apparently Nintendo gave Miyamoto enough time to finish The Wind Waker and he made the control really tight, which is a good thing. I was a bit worried that the transformation of The Wind Waker wouldn't have the same 'tight' control as the N64 versions had. Nintendo fixed the camera. There are so many platform games that the camera is a problem, not true in this game!

I am a moderate RPG fan, meaning I'm not a diehard fan, but rather collect games because I know they are good. I beat'n Orcania of Time for my N64 twice. I feel like a couch potato telling you that! I never play RPGs twice. It was a well organize RPG. It also was very long. So on the third time I quit. Link was well equipped with bows and swords to battle the final boss. It took me a while to defeat the final boss (after I found Zelda in the final moments of the game.) I barely remember the ending when Link and Zelda kiss. It makes you wonder what this game would be like of Nintendo switched over to a opinial disc platform rather then cartridge format. The graphics look better. Yet Zelda fans still do, on the Gamecube ever since the bonus disc was released a month ago. Nintendo actually was going to release Orcadia of Time as a separate release, but they included it. So we still get to see the game in high resolution.

Ok, when you first play this game, you are actually playing Orcania of Time 100 years after Link of the past defeated Galdeen the Great. But the evil has returned as the World is enhibitated by mutant hogs who we also saw after the magical woods. As the gamer pictures Hyrule Plains again in The Wind Waker, remodeled in high resolution, he must get very excited. If that is not the most exciting aspect of the game, it is certainly one of the exciting. Mean while you get to use stealth tatics that were in Orcadia of Time, that maze in the woods near the beginning is a good example. In the beginning when your on the island, you find that the village folk don't have time for you! And that means that your adventure is set for Link and no one will interfere with his journey to save his sister. Another tweak, Miyamoto achieved was that the music is that of earlier games like orginal Legend of Zelda theme remix from the NES and the Neverending Woods theme from Orcania of Time. I guess I don't know, your not listening to midi form music from the pass, but CD quality audio! The new songs also enhanced by Gamecube's Dolby Digital Pro Logic II.

I'll get through it once and then find something new.

If you ever look at The Wind Waker, or will buy this game on release, you'll find that this game is very complete with the original world of Orkania of Time and then some more. You hear that Legend of Zelda has so much in common with the Nintendo 64 game on the Internet. Remember, while most of these Internet / Nintendo junkies don't have much of a life, I do. I say that it has good control simply because Nintendo made it good. Why am I the only guy who doesn't copy The Wind Waker from other websites. What I do know is Wind Waker is even larger than Orkania of Time. It's obvious. N64 games had a reputation of not being very long. Legend of Zelda is separate from most RPGs because your weapon is the weapon that you'll use well into the game. It's not like Neverwinter Nights where you find newer weapons and they do the extra edge you want to kill off all your enemies. Not true in The Wind Waker. You first have a short sword and a shield. Link is a Halfling, not a Half-Orc Barbarian. He shows he's not that barbaric, yet he gets away with a lot of one on one fighting. It's a funny concept that we see in Legend of Zelda, this boy they call Link has 3 times as much life as his components do. But let's not forget, Legend of Zelda is supposed to be somewhat of a fairy tale. I'd like to see Link in a breast plate. And he gets enough protection without a breast plate, which is weird. I hope Nintendo is making another Legend of Zelda before Gamecube dies. It'll be another cell-shaded masterpiece! (article posted March 24, 2003 4:30PM)

Gamecube - Sonic Mega Collection review (2003-02-03 11:41)| GAME FEATURES |

Developer : Sonic Team

A.) 12 Sonic games from Genesis including minigames

Publisher: Sega

B.) hours of classic sonic

Released on Nov. 13, 2002

B.) Movies of Sonic CD

Type - 2D Platform

This collection is released by Sega / Sonic Team. I admit, I have never seen Sonic on another console besides a Sega product. You can tell that this game was a merchandize gimmick. People who love classic Sonic the Hedgehog games will buy it. I bought it, that says a lot about me. My favorite game in this package is Sonic the Hedgehog 2. This game was the fastest Sonic game. People know it as the most detailed Sonic game of the trilogy plus Sonic & Knuckles. I played this game on Gens, the Sega Genesis emulator for Windows. It is the most straightforward, action-packed of all those Sonic games on Genesis.

Sonic 3D Blast makes me dizzy. But unlike Genesis / Saturn, you have a joystick to make the correct turn. It is in 3D, but not in real 3D. I honestly thought I would never see Sonic 3D Blast ever again after it was vanished from stores after Sega Saturn got sacked by Playstation. As for the game you get 11 complex levels. Sonic Blast 3D is about Sonic going from A to B without bumping the sides. Side bumping will mean death to Sonic. Sonic 3D Blast was horribly unplayable. On the technical side, it featured Sonic the Hedgehog in the most graphical Sega Genesis game ever produced. To its credit, it was not the worst Sonic game to date. Partly because Genesis had no joystick attached to the system. Most people thought Sonic 3D Blast as a runner up to Super Mario 64. The 32 bit Saturn version was a little more polished. Now that I can play it with a joystick with out worrying about that blasted D-pad on the Saturn controller.

Over all, I think this game is a step in the right direction as Sonic games go. They brought back Sonic the Hedgehog 2. It has the best Midi I seen in Sonic the Hedgehog games. So with a "ultrasonic" techno track, you can enjoy this game too. I won't recommend this game to any user. But if you use to play Sonic the Hedgehog, this isn't a bad deal. Depending how you look at a 10 year old game, of course. And this may be the best game featuring Sonic ever released in the last 6 years. (posted April 15, 2003)

Gamecube - Need for Speed Hot Pursuit 2 review (2003-02-04 11:42)

Developer - Electronic Arts Canada

B.) Play 25 tracks including all the cop cars you love to hate.

C.) Earn money by placing 1st and buy faster cars

Type - One on One Racing

This game was developed for consoles because it officially would be the sequel to the greatest Need for Speed game of all time, Need for Speed III. The design couldn't match the design that of NFS III. I don't know, it was just better. Only released on the PC, NFS3 offered many tracks to race on. The controls were well executed and the Internet provided 3 dozen fast cars. I never got into the racing genre on the pc. You had a option of using the keyboard, but the preferred way was to use a 6 button joystick. Now 3 years after NFS3 was released, Hot Pursuit 2 brings updates from the prequel. The consoles have pre-set controls. I played the rental and the Gamecube version sucks. Unfortunately, EA didn't have a separate developer handy to do the improvements. Here's why : The control is loose and it is very easy to do a 360 on the ground. Which in a car chase is exactly what's not needed. Yep, EA Games is definably exaggerating when they put you up against 3 cop cars after the 2nd lap of your race.

So what NFS : HP2 is left with is a straight port of the Playstation 2 version. The game is clearly not cleaned up. A game running in medium resolution with some trees, a tunnel here and there, but mostly road and flat backgrounds. It's not exceptable in today's games. Reminds me of Crusin USA for Nintendo 64. They are pretty much the same. Need for Speed VII has average control at best. Cop cars can swap you around like flies. If you are looking at the best version of this game, look for the PC version. With the right equipment, the game should look better and play much better. Some recommendations would be Extreme G III. XGIII has better control then other racing titles. This game would make a good rental. If graphics are what your looking for, XGIII looks better then Need for Speed VII. I give this game (overall 6.0/10) Now that I know NFS on Gamecube isn't very good, I would like to try NASCAR THUNDER 2003. In times like this, I really thought Uri Soft should ported Speed Devils to Gamecube. In fact I'm interested in what this Racer game is for Gamecube. Perhaps another Speed Devils. If it were, I'm going to get it. (posted February 24, 2003 6:45PM)

Gamecube - Metroid Prime review (2003-02-04 11:46)

- | GAME FEATURES | A.) Nintendo's highest priority game since Super Mario 64
 B.) stunning detail we haven't seen since Resident Evil
 C.) Classic Metroid game hidden on disc

The prequel to the original Metroid game on Gamecube. This game preceeds the distruction of Talius IV. Metroid Prime is how should I say a kick ass game - because it is. So the game has plenty to look at - yeah many Gamecube fanatics expecially the editors at IGN and Videogames.com can come up with plenty to say about Samus's mission and the combat system in this game. The game is slightly different from other Gamecube shooters. Much different. It's a cool game. The automatic lock on system makes sense.

Combat System in detail. I like the weapon system on MP. First you get with it and lock on with the L-trigger then press A repeatedly. That's cool because there's more. The C-PAD is never used in Metroid Prime other then selecting rooms on the three dimincional map. (Combat System 10/10)

Navagating huge complex worlds in Metroid Prime isn't as easy as shooting. You must be equipped with the right tools so that you'll eventually survive upcoming matches. I like this but you will spend a hours between each checkpoint. This is probably the single most important idea Retro Studios put in their first person shooter. If you can't save during the game the checkpoints must be close together, and for once, they are. (Layout- 09/10)

If I had one topic that made Metroid Prime a good game, that topic would be the lock-on system. Because of it I can easily point and shoot at the enemy. Why have difficulty trying to line the "crossfire" to the enemy's head. By that time he would have gotten 3 shoots off me. I love you Retro Studios for this lock-on system. It makes the game simple, I can concentrate on knowing where I'm going!

I have only started this title and one things for sure I'm not going to finish it today or this week. Its one of those titles where I'm going to have to spend 3 weeks to finish. I'm not pushing this time. I have a good feeling that I'm going to miss something. I don't know if that is the designers fault or my fault but I'm not afraid to die and try again. Quitting will only leave me wondering if I will finish this title and for other games I left unfinished – fine. It's not going to happen this time around!

Developer - Overworks

A.) 30 - 40 hours of competitive gameplay

Publisher - Sega

B.) First story driven RPG for Nintendo from SEGA / Overworks.

C.) Near perfect use of the battle system (not as good as some of those Final Fantasy titles but very close. If you haven't played Final Fantasy VII on PS then don't worry about it. The game is still rich in gameplay and really cool in my opinion.

Released on Jan. 29, 2003

D.) Fight the Black Pirates in ship battles. Every time you level up on the ground everything in the skies with reset. Giving you more experience points when you get back aboard.

Type - Role Playing Game

I would only say that Skies of Arcadia Legends is a cool game if you are a RPG fan. I am a mild RPG fan at best. Skies of Arcadia was first released on the Sega Dreamcast in 2000. I beat the game twice. What I'm about to write, is why a gamer should pick up it. I know gamecube rpgs haven't been great, great. This title should change your mind though. It has unique features in it that make it a genuine rpg.

As for the story line, it basically says Vyse and Aika who go out and explore their world. The empire called Valua finds the home of Vyse and Aika and destroys it and captures all the blue rouges. (Later in the game the village is rebuilt) Vyse and Aika are now one their own to go on ship battles and hand to hand combat with Valuan solders and creatures that enhabinate 6 climate zones in the game. Some are hard to get too. That didn't stop me from playing Skies of Arcadia. Vyse eventually get to save the Blue Rouges but since they are out to save the world from Valua, the blue rouges meet alleys on the way including the Prince of the Valuan Empire (which is suppose to be a secret let loose later in SoAL) Together Vyse and Aika with their alleys fight evil. [Story 10/10]

The visuals in this game only come second best to Sega's other RPG Phantasy Star Online Episodes I, II. Much like another ported RPG on gamecube called Baldur's Gate - Dark Alliance, SoAL is basically a straight port of the ground breaking Dreamcast game. Skies of Arcadia was the nicest looking Dreamcast game ever created It has to be the truth. Plenty of thought went into Skies of Arcadia Legends.

I also like how Overworks put together the worlds from Summer climates to Winter climates. The water effects were exceptionally good. Most additional art is 3D which tells me that Sega put a lot of time in this game. I can also tell that the game was budgeted and could of been more if Sega fully emulated SoA to Gamecube standards. Imagine Skies of Arcadia look and feel like Final Fantasy Chronicles (a huge release on Gamecube appond release). The technology of character models painted is outdated in 2003 but was state of the art in 2000. The Gamecube release is one of the better looking titles from 2003. [Graphics 8.5/10]

Ship battles are fun and appealing to a notice owner. I happened to get to the end of Skies of Arcadia. The game gets harder as the story gets more complex but that's how all games are these days. Some die hards may want to be replay the game until they perfectly destroy Victora battleships. In the game, if Vyse didn't get to Valua's secret weapon first and would say, "Ouch!" However, I purposely went through the different zones to fight pirates again and again. It was so fun. [Ship battles 9/10]

My favorite stage of this game is when Vyse and Akia / Fina get separated and all three go in the minigame not knowing the other one is there. It took me forever to figure out the puzzle. To complete the puzzle the player had to move platforms a certain way to get across. So Overworks comes up with a slit screen showing Vyse and Akia going moving levers on the screen which moved the platforms. I got frustrated a couple times but I eventually made it.

In the sound department, Skies of Arcadia has a original soundtrack. Not as good as Grandia or Final Fantasy tunes. But the music is well orchestrated. Characters in the game don't speak every word. But their is a convensing story line bar on the botom of the screen. [Sound 8/10]

You have every reason in the world to buy Skies of Arcadia if you like playing role playing games. For people who don't have 30 hours to spare shouldn't get it. For those of you who can't wait until Legend of Zelda comes out on gamecube buy this game. It will more then satisfy your needs. It is very well designed. If you like Diablo Style level up in your skills, Baldur's Gate Deadly Alliance may be another choice. I am looking into it myself. (Review Posted February 01, 2003 9:20 AM)

Gamecube - Eternal Darkness review (2003-02-07 11:47)

- | GAME FEATURES | A.) Dolby Pro Logic II sound
 B.) 30-40 hours of gameplay
 C.) hard-to-beat zombies / monsters
 D.) 12 playable characters all with different stories and different fighting styles
 E.) 1 harsh difficulty
 F.) huge amount of detail, not in polygon amount, but objects showing at once.
 G.) fully acted story line. And very good acting H.)Options to have HDTV recognition.

Silicon Knights created Eternal Darkness, the first game since the 2000 release of Inhuman on Playstation. The team had a N64 version of Eternal Darkness going at its full benchmark capacity. Then Nintendo wanted to port it entirely to Gamecube.

I've been wondering about the story. Its not excellent, but not bad compared to the extremely large Final Fantasy and Resident Evil series. The story spans 2000 years. How else would you conquer the world, other then kill nearly all heroes in the game. But this story wasn't snapped together, it must of took a good 6 months with minor improvements along the way. But regardless of the story, every line is spoken out from what I heard – real movie actors. It think I've heard Matt Damon as one of the characters! (story 9.5/10)

Gameplay is nothing to complain about. The battle system is right on the money. Select the part of your opponent and he dies. Plenty of spells in this game, none wasted. In the third chapter I've found 1 spell that fixes items and enchants swords. As the game goes on, the ability to shield your character is a life-saver. However in most cases when fighting a boss, you have a lot of melee combat. Sometimes you injure yourself as much as him. So backing up and waiting for after the attack is what keeps you alive.

It so happens that all the dead heroes in Eternal Darkness were either cast away by Pious or doomed to age in a spell like Anthony. Was he right or wrong ? He must have been right if he was included amongst the playable characters. One of the toughest enemies I had to encounter were horrors whom attack the head. If you don't get them off in allotted time, they'll take over and the game ends. They can be damned to hell but not easily. (gameplay 8.5/10)

Sound in Eternal Darkness is mostly creeks, knocks on doors, extranominal sounds coming from places you wouldn't want to be in. Yes it fits well with the scene. Don't get spooked know, it's only a game. The game pumps out dolby pro logic II which makes everything sound more livelier. Much like what Winamp does to MP3s. I give the sound effects in this game a creepy 9 of 10. (sound 9/10)

Eternal Darkness isn't a platform but if you like platform games, get Eternal Darkness. It's only single player so rent it then play it. You can buy the game but mostly I don't think it's a quick enough. (replay value 7/10) (posted August 29, 2002)

Gamecube - Timesplitters 2 review (2003-02-08 11:44)

| GAME FEATURES |

Publisher - Eidos

A.) steady first person shooter

Developer - Free Radical Design

B.) 3 hours of story mode

Released on Aug. 18, 2002

C.) hard-to-beat zombies / monsters

type - First Person Shooter

D.) Have a wide selection of pulse guns, machine guns and pistols in a period of 600 years

Timesplitters 2 has been a solid effort and conquers every aspect you would want to see in a first person shooter. Designed by Free Radicial Design, the game looks really good. The down side of it is it looks good and their isn't enough of it. Some Europeans have a erge for dance mixes. But somehow we get a musical customized soundtrack from these guys. The game is suppose to increase replay value by having better AI then Timesplitters for the Playstation 2. The sequel added some new levels to the base which wasn't included in the PS2 verison.

I was going to say that this game wasn't good but it was worth 50 dollars. One of the best places I've played was in NeoTokyo level. Some say that that level was harder then heck because a security guard is hidden from view when the hacker makes her move towards her secret hideout. I've been caught red-handed every time.

Timesplitter 2 graphics are better then Agent Under Fire. The development team at Free Radical Design is a colorful group. Designers whom worked for big developing studios Nintendo, Sega, Activision and Raven Software. All the models are well rounded and in high resolution. Sometimes there are hints of Quake 3 and Half-Life with a pinch of Goldeneye. But upclose they look empty. But if the team working on the Gamecube version was trying to re-create Goldeneye then it's all good. (graphics 8.5/10)

In first person shooter terms the Gamecube controller sucks. There are no exceptions. The C-stick is too loose to have any kind of head shots. Sometimes it feels that you aren't running - only walking. The gamecube controller didn't work in 007 - Agent Under Fire and it won't work in this game. (controls 7/10)

The vastness of the Multiplayer Mode is apresheated. Timesplitters 2 comes with Elimination. This mode is where everyone has some lifes and the one who lasts the longest wins the game. Its cool when I have friends over. Some people don't enjoy playing shooting games anymore. However there is a solid one player option. It's pretty basic. If you move around on the level the bots will miss you most of the time. I remember this when I played Half Life on the Internet. There was one classic moment when I got shot in the back of the head in the Nuclear Reactor level. I was gearing up to shot my friend and he saw me. I kept missing him. And he got me with one shot. The game was running 30 frames per second with minor slow downs over a modem.

And I almost forgot. The game comes with a really simple to use Map editor. It allows you to edit makes that the game already has. Or you can make your own. Free Radical Design released that not everyone had the ability to texture their levels because it's too time consuming. So they came up with a good idea that the level texturing is done for you. There's a pointer in the program and all you have to do is press A to choose, lay, pick up, drop or move. It's simple. I like it. And it's fun to have Elimination or Deathmatch on levels that I've created. One positive turnout that Free Radical has put on Gamecube. Gamecube doesn't have a reiteration of having exceptional first person shooters like the Nintendo 64 had. We knew that N64 had Goldeneye 007 and that was exceptional game. (Level Editor 9.9/10)

The sound department sounds like a energy mixes. You can hear a difference between futurist and present and pass music. In my opinion the Sibera music played in the opening level sounds the best. Gun shots are most noticable. Since you really can't commit on how a machine gun sounds verus a shotgun. I can't really tell you how great it sounds even though this is a first person shooter. Yeah boys and girls, the sound in this game is rivil'n. (soundtrack 8/10)

In conclusion the replay value when playing with someone near your skill level is brilliant. I had as much fun playing this game then Perfect Dark on Nintendo 64. The story level had some good points hear and there but all levels in this game have solid design. It's this not the brillant design you find in Unreal Tourament or Perfect Dark. Because you can play with friends and have the selectable missions. (Wait for Metroid Prime 8/10) (posted November 06, 2002 7:30PM)

Gamecube - Resident Evil Zero review (2003-02-09 11:46)

| GAME FEATURES | A.) prerendered backgrounds and Cinema like FMU

B.) Rebecca and Billy team up and do double damage.

C.) The chapter before the well known Resident Evil chapter first played on Playstation.

Oh joy. The second Resident Evil game is available. It plays well and also looks good. This game isn't amongst my favorite on Gamecube. So far I only played 3 hours into this game. In easy mode everything is plentiful and I haven't died yet. Remember Resident Evil is all about shooting zombies. Neither Billy or Rebecca get infected with the T-Virus. Zombie smarts are even as good as the Resident Evil remake. Perhaps Rebecca will appear again in Resident Evil 5. We know that the newest Resident Evil game featuring Leon is debutting sometime next Winter.

Gathering items and walking around is all apart of Resident Evil. It is common for the gamer to get the item he/she needs and backtracks to the beginning and use the item. Sometimes using the item makes other things in the game happen. Every thing is labeled and alot of times Capcom gives you directions on how and where to use the item. A good example would be the hookshot found in the beginning. (Concept 10/10)

Control is fairly simple in this game. It's not smooth as silk but neither is dodging zombies. Most of the time the zombie gets you and draws blood. Too much blood with obviously kill you. Shooting the weapons are easy. Point and shoot. The games difficulty controls how strong the enemy is. If you switch the game to normal or hard you'll most likely run out of ammo. If you are afraid of dieing because of lack of ammo you should try the awesome easy mode. I highly recommend this mode because chances are you'll out last the game and have fun doing so. (Control 9/10)

I have many games in my archives at home but the story keeps me interested to hand pick this game to play. If the Dreamcast won't freeze up when playing RE2, RE3 or Code Veronica – I would probably be excited to play them. But since I have a bad experience with the Dreamcast, I haven't got much into the series. (Replay Value 7/10)

First of all I realize that many gamers play this game because gore and blood is cool. You may want to pick up games like FIFA 2002, Metroid Prime or Star Fox Adventures before trying this game for there superior quality. But if you are wanting to pick up a Mature game, Resident Evil Zero and Resident Evil are good solid choices. If the game was 30 dollars instead of 50 I would rate this game 9/10. (Collection Value 7/10)

Gamecube - Star Fox Adventures review (2003-02-10 11:48)

A.)

Dolby Pro Logic II sound.

Developer : Rareware

B.) Super Duper Adventure.

Publisher - Nintendo.

C.) 2 playable characters.

Released on Sept. 23, 2002

D.) misson based game.

type - Adventure

We could have had a very clean, very fun title from Rareware. But we found out that that fun was only a myth. I Now we find ourselves trapped in Nintendo platform games. Star Fox Adventures lifts off as a Oricania of Time clone but Star Fox is still alittle out of its way. Don't expect a great game here. I've seen the game and Gamecube has matured with it's graphics in this game. This game has high resolution textures all through the game. You can see rushing water, rain, snow. What comes with it is good loading times between levels. The supporting cast has shadows which give the game an edge. However I feel like an idoit trying to enjoy Star Fox since Fox McCloud is acting like macho. But then again you can't blame Rare for that, they had an disadvantage in the voice department. For that I give them respect. Heck, Resident Evil voice acting is a simple match against Star Fox.

Star Fox Adventures takes place 8 years after Star Fox 64. Slippy and Peppy are grown up into seniors. Falco has left the team. Fox McCloud has the main role. Star Fox appears in Dinosaur Planet, whom has been taken over by General Scales. He appears throughout the game. But mischiefly scrams to another hiding place. Fox has three jobs A.) find 4 warpstones. B.) able to complete the game and go head to head with General Scales. C.) Find Tricky whom sometimes get captured. You'll never see your self backtracking. Tricky the dinosaur is usally The warpstones allow Fox to gain access to new stages. He must save Crystal, a prisoner of her home planet. So Fox and his sidekick helps him discover new ways to move ahead.

| Sound |

Sound in this game I believe is in dead middle. We have tunes that sound like Legend of Zelda. But it also sounds like the Rayman franchise too. Fox can give many combat sounds. It "sounds" like Rare done that part right with Fox. Hy-yah and yah mostly. (sound - 7/10)

| Combat System |

The combat system is appoved before. Not bad because it's popularity in well known games. The staff is always used half way through the game. But when it gets down to it all, all your really doing is a lot of button mashing. When you think of many combat arrangements - you would "button mash" Yeah controling Fox is easy enough for a 12 year old to get the hang of it. I wanted something a bit more advanced. I never did get into deep combat. But I can see how Rare went around the problem of being cornered and over-powered by fighting one enemy at a time. I save the game often Fox McCloud has never been in a situation I couldn't instead shut the machine off and start over. (combat

8/10)

Conclusion is Star Fox Adventures you can grow out of the moment your mature and go see a "Rated R movie" for the first time. This because Star Fox is in it, doesn't mean that you should be over-joyed and spend 50 bucks on this game. Sigh The advantages of having a Playstation 2. Playstation 2 is kicking our butts in platforming games. What to do?what to do? (overall 7/10)

Imagine that someone has come up with a gadget to allow smokers to light from computers. It would make everything convenient. Wow the things that you find off the net these days. I was listening to a lot of Monty Python - Holy Grail comedy lately on my mp3 player.

It's not that Monty Python isn't funny, some of the other music I listen too (like Metallica/2pac) didn't measure up to it well. It doesn't matter now. But that was what happened to me when I listened to Monty Python. A package came in the mail (drum role please) and it was a pair of speakers, one memory stick and one soundcard. Everything worked except for the blasted soundcard. The VIM editor in Redhat Linux is consuming me. Every difficult editor. This a bit above comprehension.

Gamecube - Super Mario Sunshine review (2003-02-11 11:49)

| GAME FEATURES | A.)

Dolby Pro Logic II sound.

B.) High Resolution Mario.

C.) 10 worlds with 16 minigames.

D.) Healthy gameplay mechanics.

E.) One big headache playing the same objective over and over again.

We might of guessed it already but Mario on Gamecube. Every child in Walmart wants a copy like they wanted Sonic Adventure 2. Then why did an adult like I go out and buy a copy. One reason I can think of ... Mario. I grew up with the NES. I played Super Mario Bros franchise through LopyNES on the PC. Like the most of us who got suck in buying a Gamecube because we all thought that "Nintendo will do it again" despite the tight grip Sony has with all their good exclusive titles. I had to put this into concept because Nintendo does like to advertise Mario on the Internet I've commented on in my

September 02 article

| Story | I hate to wreck Mario's good name but the story in Mario Sunshine has to be the weakest story I read in a platform game.

Gex : Enter the Gecko being the worst of them all in my opinion. Mario saves Peach from a wacko Mario look-a-like who jumps around with a paint brush and leaves paint splats though out Super Mario Sunshine . Mario is on vacation in a warm tropical climate. I can say that Nintendo wanted more water in this game. In someways the story this plain sucks. (Story 5/10)

| Backgrounds | The development team who created this game did a very good job re-creating Super Mario Sunshine like the well liked Super Mario 64. More the gamecube, this platformer is the crispiest ever seen on Gamecube. With the exception of some low-resolution textures made up for wall textures. Ok, so there is nothing wrong with Nintendo's textures. Nintendo could of made them 3D. My concept score would soar without a doubt. I can't say that they are bad because this game ranks higher then Crash Bandicoot 4 and probably slightly better the Rareware's Star Fox Adventures. Nintendo had slightly better tools then the UK developer could hope for. The water effects are well above average for a game of this magnitude. I will be waiting for the GCN port of Rayman 3 and Star Fox Adventures to see what they play like. (Graphics 9.5/10 | Concept Art 6.5/10)

| "Shine Get" | I like the locations of Shines in the game. All are spread out. There would be 150 in total. It is impossible for someone to get all shines without a strategy guide. The writers at Gamefaqs are having a hard time finding all shines in the game. Playing the sequel is harder when getting 100 coins in each world. Having spent a week playing this game I haven't a clue how to get 100 coins in all those worlds. The coins are so spread out. Some coins are even hidden from the player. That takes the fun out right there. But in terms of gameplay, Mario can reach a lot of required Shines with his water pack. That is true to 9 out of 10 Shines.

Shines easily conquered - 30 Shines

Shines approached 3-5 times 70 Shines very difficult Shines - 50+ Shines (including all hidden Shines and all shines in the blasted air strip at very beginning)

(random quests 9/10)

| Sound | The caravel music is childish but alright. All the music in this game fits the setting. If I was to change the music, I would change it to MIDI sounding remixes. I would associate with a professional musician who knows music from the back of his head. (Sound 8/10)

| Conclusion | Super Mario Sunshine would be a good game for an audience 8 - 15. The game does have a good all around gameplay. No level is lesser then another. Buy it if you want too. The game looks like the top ten of all gamecube games. Before making a final decision check out Star Fox Adventures. Star Fox Adventures is said to be a Legend of Zelda clone on Gamecube.

Gamecube - F1 Championship review (2003-02-12 11:51)

| GAME FEATURES |

- A.) The entire 2000 F1 Grand Prix competitors and track statics
- B.) decent framerate
- C.) 3 - 4 hours of gameplay.
- D.) a trail stage which allows you to qualify for the championship.

We know that EA Sports likes to skip around a lot with their 2nd to none franchises. Madden defiantly gets one game every year, F1 does one 2 years in a role then stops. On the 2nd year, EA made the major changes which were necessary to make F1 2002 a better title then F1 2001. Most of these changes where added to the Playstation 2 version. I believe the steering system is much more tighter then before. The Gamecube can pull the controls off much more nicely then the Playstation 2 or the Xbox in my opinion because the controller made of better quality. Every joystick is about the same now-a-days. Move a small ways on a PS2 controller and you move slightly, the same way it would be done on the cube.

Graphics

Not one of EA Sports flashiest titles. When comparing graphics I'd like to compare to Dreamcast's F1 World Grand Prix. Even though the dreamcast version had a resolution of 400/600 instead of 600/800 on the gamecube, the dreamcast game had close resemblance. F1 2002 has many more high resolution pixels in its game. Dreamcast doesn't didn't have a large amount of high resolution pixels because it can't handle it. This think now much better the same game looked if the same F1 World Grand Prix would be on Gamecube. Now I would love to see a direct competitor that would stand up against EA Sports.

On the whole you get high definition trees, mountains, lookout towers and a nicely "painted" background. The weird 3D still shots at the end of each race add to the game's personality. You also get rain, sunshine and cloudy weather. One thing I disagree with in graphics because it doesn't look quite right is the gamma . The gamma is a shade or 2 lower then most games to hide low RES pixels which fill in the backgrounds. It is to bad that the technology isn't there for Nintendo to clear up the backgrounds so they would look like the immediate pixels seen closes to the player.

Controls

Gamecube controls in this game are reasonable. You can't throttle the speed in this game. Its a major let down. If throttling was apart of F1 2002 it would of made me a happier camper. EA chose not to include the feature. Gamecube does have pressure sensitive triggers but I don't see why the game wouldn't use that feature. Other then that, I am surprised at how much you have to slow down on a corner and sleep up without over drifting. Over drifting is when you over accelerate or under accelerate and not have enough speed to turn the corner quickly enough. If you can master the basic methods of cornering, you have 1 of 3 areas of the game conquered. The other two are not hitting other drivers and staying on the track 'til the race is over.

Music

There's not much of a music selection in F1 2002. The title sequence is going to be the only music played in the entire game! The engine and streaking sounds from other racers are Formula One standard.

Conclusion

F1 2002 is probably going to be the 2nd best racing title for Gamecube right after Wave Race for the ability to pit stop and the fact that your also racing in a sporting event helps reply value immensely. If your a racing fan you should pick out this one. (article posted 07/17/2002)

Gamecube - Star Wars - Rogue Squadron II review (2003-02-12 11:53)

- A.) fully licensed game
- B.) great story line.
- C.) 20 missions to play
- D.) depending on skill level the game will stress you on time and accuracy

I personally wasn't a favorite of the first Rogue Squadron game. The game was way too difficult to be fun. In the second game made isn't so hard. One of the reasons that help ease the load off is your allies actually don't piss you off by not doing anything. They do help when you order them to fight on their own. And they do a nice job on their own. When I have a Tie on my tail I this as them to form up. This works well because Reinforcements are minimized as I do my the stage's objective.

The graphics are really good in this game. Some effects include shine off the X Wings on a Flyby maneuver. Others is that space is filled with Supernovas, Planets, comets. Detailed cargo ships. Gamecube looks pretty nice on a regular television, but looks especially nice on HDTVs. The images show off their full potential when you have a full digital connection between the Cube and HDTV. All of the work put in Rogue Leader to make the enemies hard to shoot down, sound effects that are accurate and allies who have a balance between taking the enemy down and asking you what to do. Well I guess Factor 5 put this in the 'code' so your allies will be with you when you forget to tell them to bug TIE Fighters. No scenes from Star Wars Episode I. Factor 5 mixed this with Battle for Naboo for Nintendo 64 and it didn't make much sense to people.

Game play in Rogue Leader

Your ships are very responsive. But so is your enemy. Piloting your A wing is no trouble but targeting the enemy becomes most difficult. This is why. You must line your target meter where the enemy is going to be not where he is. I had trouble remembering this. In fact this is probably the main reason you'll lose. In this game if you don't take down the enemy he'll get reinforcements and you'll take damage. If you master targeting you pretty much beat the game. Sure enemies can get harder but that's when you move the settings up. For our first time, you should get through the first 4 missions easily.

Conclusion

Buy this game if you enjoy the Star Wars genre. From what I heard this game is one of the better ones out. Obi Wan for Xbox didn't get a very good score but Stairways Star Fighter for the PS2 / Xbox is basically the same game. (posted April 27, 2002)

Gamecube - Extreme-G III review (2003-02-12 11:53)

| GAME FEATURES |

- A.) 16 tracks
- B.) 4 championship modes.
- C.) 8 professional sponsors
- D.) detailed backgrounds

Not many people will pick up a futuristic racer like this one. The Xtreme G franchise wasn't very popular. The developer that made both titles cease to exist now. But considering that XGIII has good graphics and a slick track design makes me personally want me coming back. I say this game has a high replay value to it. The developer took Battle Mode out of XGIII because they said it would wreck the point of the game, racing.

The controls are responsive. Except when you attempt to first play Xtreme G III, you know that you'll be hitting the rails most of the time. This is the biggest disadvantage in Extreme-G because not only do you have to stay in the middle of the track, you have know whats behind you. That pulse that makes your bike unstable is the most dangerous. You can loose your place very fast. And all the competition will pass you before you can get your bike on the race track.

Sometimes you will get stuck on a sharp curve and die from jumping the track. So to save civilization the bike has a distract sequence.

Xtreme G III has remastered tracks from the first game. Muon Harbor is an example of what was unchanged. It has been close to 100 years since Xtreme G has been incorporated. You have many tracks to play on ... 16 in all. The make up on the tracks are great but your not getting top notch designing here. Sometimes you look at Rush 2049 on the Dreamcast and see how the slightest graphical change doesn't mean anything. Resident Evil which have very big differences, is the few titles to greatly differ from the original release.

The Xtreme G franchises uses techno as a main music theme. I say if the Europeans like that stuff then it can't be all that bad. Acclaim also has rights to Dolby Digital Surround Sound. So if you have a entertainment system it will sound more realistic. And no this doesn't apply to me.

In this game, I'd like to say, "wow." Its a good title to come to play every couple 10 minutes. It's a "10 minute game." Easy on the eyes, good control and music that is fun to listen too. If you don't like it then you can always turn it way down.

Gamecube - James Bond - Agent Under Fire review (2003-02-13 11:54)

GAME FEATURES |

All franchises that included James Bond relied on him to bring game buyers to it. That's exactly what Agent Under Fire had done. The games controls weren't so easy at first. I mastered these controls. But my friends have not. One highlight of the game is the multiplayer support which is like most FPS, fun for a while. But I'll get to that later. Agent Under Fire has a Single Player setup which isn't confusing, isn't really detailed, you this try to make it to the end of each stage. The first few stages in the game is easy to beat. You may play for a hour and get the first 4 completed out of the total 12. EA fixed many of the AI / camera errors in the PS2 game that made it not function. But due to Gamecube's tremendous 64 bit cache, EA could easy run the game at a solid 30 frames and use the extra cache to modify some aspects that made Agent Under Fire unreasonably hard.

Multiplayer Mode

Agent Under fire is a First Person Shooter that comes with over 10 multiplayer maps. Not a bad combo. Worth your 40 bucks in my opinion because it is a first person shooter on gamecube. Most people I know like first person shooters. This game was made by EA Canada. It's not your Goldeneye. OK so it's not bad but it doesn't match up to any of the Goldeneye's personality. What Agent Under Fire doesn't have is very open maps. You can Camp and frag your friends in some of these levels without being seen (the bot knows where you are at all times, the only exception). But due to human's nature of not being perfect at kicking ass. We this say, this above decent. Agent Under Fire features a training mode with not to bad bot AI. It jumps, it shoots, it does damage. The multiplayer mode of Agent Under Fire has its moments but its nothing you would of seen in Goldeneye or Quake III Arena. (posted May 05, 2002)

Conclusion

Agent Under Fire is not worth the 49 dollars you pay for it. There are better games that are worth that cash. But it is good for a rental if you have friends over. If your looking for a good first person shooter, Retro Studios / Nintendo are coming out with Metroid Prime in July.

Gamecube - Resident Evil review (2003-02-14 11:50)

GAME FEATURES | A.) Dolby Pro Logic II sound
B.) 30-40 hours of gameplay
C.) hard-to-beat zombies / monsters
D.) 3 playable characters all with different stories and different events
E.) 3 difficulties
F.) huge amount of detail, not in polygon amount, but objects showing at once.
G.) new areas not seen in original game
H.) fully acted story line. And very good acting
I.) Options to have HDTV recongization.

Resident Evil for Gamecube is the bloodiest shooter that hit the console. Capcom spent 2 years on this project redoing all the still framing. You can hear a difference since the game also has a audio advantage as well. Zombies look much more in depth. To me the game doesn't look extremely good, but the game IS extremely large. Covering a 60 plus room mansion. Capcom had to invent a new engine which I think they sub-license with Nintendo. In the beginning you get to play Three S.T.A.R.S. members including the most famous Jill Valentine with Chris Redfield and Rebecca Chambers (main character in both RE0 / RE Movie)

Gameplay

Playing this game is not easy nor hard. It this takes a lot of memorization cuz you'll be playing this port for 30 hours. The game comes with the all the advantages of Code Veronica but has the worst difficulty of all the franchise. Ammo is scattered throughout the mansion and the combat knife is not do all that much damage. This is a bad thing. But that doesn't affect the game much. You may want to take a break between sessions due to the great amount of consternation it takes to keep your character alive. The game offers 4 control setups. The games control feels like the Resident Evil games on Dreamcast. The controller for Gamecube basically is the Dreamcast controller on a more powerful console.

Artificial Intelligence

Zombies aren't dumb in this Gamecube port. The little mistakes you get away with your old PSX port or some Dreamcast ports are in no way similar in this game. This game is much harder to beat.

Such movements as Zombies do is - they fall on you never stop until your die or automatically knowing where you stand can make you really agitated can even make you swear. Zombies can brake down doors in front or surround you on all sides with no way out. Your allies from the old Bravo team and your team help you complete Resident Evil. However your the one that decides their fate. This is the difference between ammo (4 shots per zombie, 7 shots for lickers) or allow your partner do all the shooting.

Sometimes you find that your ally takes the same number of shots that if you killed the zombie or what ever anyway and he come back to life and still waste someone's ammo. One thing that I don't ' think that many reviewers caught in Resident Evil for Gamecube is that once a zombie feeds on another victim or another zombie, every one of them comes to life. Some monsters here are even impossible to kill. So in times like these you can do nothing else but to be scarce. One way to avoid some zombie bites are to have a fair amount of herbs handy. This can be the difference between life and death.

Graphics

Capcom does a good job making this game technology superior over any other console games. The backgrounds have lightning effects, man made lighting effects, precise shadowing and far less low resolution parts of walls or parts of characters such as cloths, pictures, fires, rubies or other items found. All items pop up and show themselves quit nicely. All the FMV full motion video is in full screen, ultra high resolution (DVD quality video) and between 10 to 30 seconds long. Its amazing how Capcom could of done all of this spanning 2 discs. You really do get what you pay for in Resident Evil. This makes few wonder what Capcom will feature in Resident Evil : Zero currently pushed for a December 2002 window.

Conclusion

Defiantly being the best game for Gamecube in 4 ways : Superior graphics : Superior quality : Superior length (could be the longest game ever on a Nintendo console) and superior difficulty. If you are over 17 and own or want to get a Gamecube, this game is currently the best title to own. This game is a academy award nominee for 2002 games. (posted May 05, 2002)

Gamecube - Super Mario Bros. Melee (2003-02-14 11:56)

| GAME FEATURES |

Super Smash Bros : Melee is another great title to own from Nintendo. Basically it is a fighter filled with trademarked characters. The game includes a nice touch with playable characters like my favorite, Zelda with others including Link, Mario, Luigi, Samus, Browser, Ice Chambers, Shriek and over 20 others. This game is a great 2D Fighter to own. Everything fits into place. Rumors on the development time is that Hudson started development as soon as the fight title on N64 was in order. And I can gladly say that the sequel is better. Melee includes with SSB1 didn't. Detailed backgrounds, CD quality music, a lot of items to smack your opponent with. Its all in this game. Its not the best game but I does reach the Top 5 in the field of this years fighting titles.

Graphics

The graphics are nice. Many people where glazing at the perfection Nintendo had with Zelda and Mario. Zelda is minimal jigged lines on her character. Some nice texture work on her dress and every thing make the game a fun experience. Stages in the game are good, but not something that you be amazed about. The game runs at a solid 30 frames per second with all effects on.

Gameplay

The basic maneuvering in this game doesn't interfere with anything. Opposites are sometimes difficult to take down mostly because they use every trick in the book against you. SSBM isn't button mashing. You can easily figure out the movies because Hudson didn't clutter this games with extra attacks. For an example if you press A + B + L trigger you get this attack. SSMB is mainly won by using the best item that falls. Watch out for the sledge-hammer, its a killer ! The game is even more fun when having company.

Conclusion

SSMB is a very good title to own, but it isn't a must buy title to own. Since now-a-days it's really hard to say what is an exceptional game out of over 500 titles in stores really is anymore. I'm sure this one is in the Top Ten percent of all console fighting games today.

Gamecube - Sonic Adventure 2 Battle (2003-02-15 11:52)

| GAME FEATURES |

- A.) Featuring original cast : Sonic the Hedgehog, Knuckles, Amy Rose, Tails, and Dr. Robotnik.
- B.) The next chapter in Sonic's never-ending saga to end Dr. Robotnik plans to conquer the world.
- C.) 3 - 4 hours of gameplay.
- D.) faster frame rate and better loading times over Dreamcast

Sonic came to Gamecube with a lot of people wondering why? It was Sega that went to Nintendo not the other way around here. So since the two major publishers had 3 big titles to put on Gamecube, Sega this made extra Dreamcast software that would do perfect ports or this is what it looked like. As for Sonic Adventure 2, all you get is Sonic and his speed. To me, this is all right at the beginning. But dies off more as the storyline goes on. SEGA probably got every 10 year old who owns Gamecube wanting to buy it. It is not your Sonic that you once knew and loved on Genesis. But you can tell that Sonic really came along when Sega put him into 3D with clearest pixels and some indirect lighting effects to match.

The Level Design

You might not like Sega for turning Sonic into a more "Techno Sonic". I know why too. Japan is crazy about Techno Remixes. SEGA wanted Sonic to become a Disc Jockey before someone could say that they went overboard. When they did the idea was official and no one could change it. Sonic Team most defiantly borrowed from NiGHTs and famous NES classic Marble Madness to create the Sonic World we're now familiar with. The treasure hunts were more satisfying and height doing Sonic levels. What do you think of that? Knuckles is cooler than Sonic. You can also tell that Sonic Team cleaned up the levels since Dreamcast.

The Control System

Either then Sonic Adventure on Dreamcast. Whether or not you think the gamecube controller has out or not.

Sound

Sonic Team did one thing right out of the sound department. They made the music fit the game. I recently tried doing remixes with songs and all of them turned out horrible. Sega probably did their best in the sound department.

The music sounds like alternative rock or hip-hop customized for Sonic and Knuckles. I personally don't care for it much. Most people would listen to the radio anyway so it depends on your preference.

Conclusion

Sonic Adventure 2 is a less a winner then the original but I agree with those people who give it 3 1/2 stars. It would make a decent retail. (posted July 11, 2002)

Gamecube - FIFA 2002 review (2003-02-16 11:57)

| GAME FEATURES |

Most developers will find its going to be hard to crack this near perfect Gamecube title. EA Sports made use of this version. Nintendo this happen to get a winner in the soccer field. With the exception of already having some of the best graphics in a sports game. EA also hosted two announcers which speak 300 sentences and can announce 1000 different players who play with over 400 professional teams.

Gameplay

You'll find it easy to score goals against the keeper in amateur setting. I don't watch professional soccer but a soccer game is the best sports game you can buy with your money, I think. For one thing it doesn't require coaching. American Football requires a lot of it. Instead I can focus on scoring goals. Once you get into the professional settings you will get your ass kicked. Trust me, its not an easy task. Since the first soccer games that were made in 3D. developers like EA have gotten to modify them to the point that made them more accurate with better all around players, better all around effects, better all around modes. If you go through the games tutorial, you'll learn many things. The key to winning games is practicing against them as you play against another. I don't play this enough to get great at this game so I'm not the one to practice. If you can lobb successfully you'll beat the normal difficulty easily. I could never lobb successfully. But for many people to keep the game fun, you might wanna remember to restart if your opposite is 3 or 4 goals ahead. In a real soccer game, you already lost.

Conclusion

FIFA 2002 and Soccer Jam (Sega's cartoonist version of soccer) are the only soccer titles out. FIFA 2002 is going to be your first choice and will probably stay that way for sometime. EA Sports created a game worthy of ownership here. Videogames.com gave this title a 8.9 out of 10. But in my opinion, its deserves more credit. The game is very fun besides the fact that I'm a soccer fan. I say the best games are expedition games or as the announcer quotes, "A friendly, nothing up for grabs game including so and so. GBA - Sonic Advance review (2003-02-21 11:58)

| GAME FEATURES |

Developer : Sonic Team

A.) Sonic in high resolution for an handheld. Still a blast to play even after the 7 years Sonic Team discontinued the Sonic the Hedgehog 2D games (since Sonic CD for Mega32x in 1995) There was Sonic Pocket Adventure for the Neogeo Pocket, but I'm so unfamiliar with that game.

Publisher : Sega

B.) Good sound track. Familiar sonic the hedgehog tunes

Released on February 05, 2002

C.) A practice area where someone can increase their skills at coverting to white shielding or black shielding in the game. A lot of practice will be needed for an average gamer to get past the C grade level at the end of the practice run.

D.) A co-op option letting a friend battle evil with you.

Type : Platform

I played Sonic the Hedgehog on the Genesis. Yes I've played it and I played it for free thanks to emulation. Haven't we all at one time or another? Could Sonic Advance be the best 2D sonic ever? Look at the "colorful" history of Sonic games. Well back then it was good, now Sonic's Director Cut(s) are in the dark ages it seems like. Sonic Adventure was not exactly a very successful game on the Gamecube.

Let me ask this question, many say, including me that Sonic the Hedgehog 2 for Sega Genesis was the best Sonic the Hedgehog game in the the history, until Sonic Advance came out. Needless to say that Sonic 2 was a more high profile game then the first and the 3rd wasn't has high profile as the 2nd, so like wise, Sonic 2 would be the most famous Sonic game around. Sonic the Hedgehog could easily of been a mediocre platform title in it's time if it wasn't for the fast pace, colorful world that was better then most action shooters of the day. If you have played the old sonic you'll first realize that the GBA has 2 buttons while the genesis controller had 6 buttons. However Genesis didn't come with triggers which made it difficult to hold 2 buttons at once. But the originals didn't use more then 2 buttons anyways. The Sonic the Hedgehog was known for it's industrial level, the second zone in Sonic the Hedgehog 2. It had a good soundtrack, a long level, lots of secrets and it wasn't boring. If you played the casino level in Sonic the Hedgehog 2 then you know that it was fun trying to get the best score. Sonic could spin in the jackpot cubes and win big or loss it all. Sonic Advance is like the original Sonic the Hedgehog 2. The graphics are twice as colorful as those in Sonic the Hedgehog 2. They look like it's in high resolution, which beats all the other 2D Sonic the Hedgehog games.

So graphics aren't the only thing that makes this game fun, although the game is already amongst the prettier bunch as GBA games go. In the game, Sonic is usually running. The first zone is easy to start out with. It's impossible to die in this level and the stage 2 of zone 1 is also easy. Zone 2 is still easy. This time your in a slightly different world. If you followed Sonic very much you'll know that Sonic has a world with familiar characters that appeared in past Sonic games much like Mushroom Land with Mario. Sonic Advance has a famous beach level seen previously in the Dreamcast demo disc and Sonic Adventure. But the game also has other zones like the lava stages seen in the 16-bit generation. The game doesn't stray too far from the other 2D Sonic games because they are all timed, the game features 3D bonus stages, the game has the final encounter with Dr. Robotnic. The 3D stages look better then the Genesis version of Sonic 3D Blast! I find that the control on the GBA controller is hard to work with when doing 3D. Although the game is still one of my top GBA picks next to my personal favorite Super Mario Kart - super Circuit. The level design is better then most GBA games although the 3D platform Sonic the developer also makes for Gamecube is out of date and needs considerable updating. Summing up Sonic Advance

Has scrolling background, looks like flash on the Internet. Everything is sequenced to happen the same way at the same time in every game. But Treasure has some nice 2D artwork. I admit that the bosses are cool looking in 2D shooter 3D form. I really like this game okay. It's next to genius. All levels flow at a good frame rate. There is a lot of color including my favorite, the opening level. It's like Super Mario Bros 2. Except Mario or Luigi don't go loop for loop or in a spiral like what Sonic does. The backgrounds are so bright and are in high resolution when they scroll with each frame that goes by. You don't get low resolution artwork that makes other games only average in comparison.

9.0

I don't really know about the Games control. I doesn't deserve a perfect score because I've seen what Super Mario Advance is capable of. But in this 2D age the game either sucked or didn't suck. You can't measure the control in 3D like if the game had a 3D engine. The control is much like the old school Sonic games. The first Sonic the Hedgehog in it's day was a must buy because the control was pretty good and most people liked the gameplay. I'm not going to go so far to say that games aren't like they use to be, because this game is a good example of how a game that once was on a console 10 years ago came back into something that was worth buying at full price. Only in my own opinion though.

9.0

I couldn't give this game a perfect score but if it's not broken then why fix it. Remember the old Metal Slug games by SNK. I mean I've played it on a emulator and it was enjoyable. Reminded me of Metroid. The series just continues. The levels are really well constructed partly due because the team that invented Sonic the Hedgehog 10 years ago made Sonic Advance and Sonic Pocket Adventure. Not many developers keep their original license that long.

Sound

8.0

Unless you got a Gameboy player for your Gamecube, you don't have a very 3D sounding game hear. Nothing can compare with that of Final Fantasy or Golden Sun. It's just is that, the game has no 3D sounding music on the GBA. Most games don't have any sacrificing 3D sounding on the limited hardware that the Gameboy Advance can generate. I haven't heard of any MP3 technology before on Gameboy Advance. But midi can if done carefully should sound just as good. You have the original Sonic the Hedgehog 1 & 2 music which is excellent idea although the majority is okay. The infamous ring chime does well on the GBA I thought.

Replayibly

9.0

It's funny how emulation can steer you always from playing the same game twice. Because your not forced to play it twice. With emulation you have many choices. This game though is fun. I like it. You should find the ROM or buy it at a store. The game has a save option which is needed in all GBA games. But like the old school games before it, it's probably best to play the whole game through one time. This game is a BLAST to play!

(2003-02-22 00:34)

For all those people who hate to be inside, I know exactly how you feel. Wasting much your time infront of a computer surfing the Internet for new software. The question is not that there isn't any good games out there, its how much time you look for that one game. I found a couple games today that I've downloaded. One game called Tetrix. A tetris clone type game. Pretty ordinary and nothing special about it. Then there's

Kaggz 4.0

. This is close to SmileTris on Linux. Match the colors and they'll fade right away. Music is included, but I am not bothered by it. I had no one to invite over, much like yesterday. I played a little Dungeon Siege. I managed to build a farm girl up to warrior statis in 3 days. Pretty average, anyone can do that. Then I tried out Never Winter Nights. It is way too much like Baldur's Gate. The game got good reviews on the Internet. I was trying to play NWN online but my ping was really low. Although I do like the idea that you right click on a person to attack him. That seems to work out pretty darn well. I post my feelings about the games I play in reviews. I may be a while before I know what I'm doing in NWNs. The look of it makes me unsure about were to start and all that. I wonder how many teens think the same I do?

GBA - Mario Kart Super Circuit review (2003-02-22 11:59)| GAME FEATURES |

Developer : Nintendo

A.) Mario racing karts on Gameboy Advance

Publisher : Nintendo

B.) 32 tracks including all unlockables and battle mode tracks. This is a big game.

Released on August 27, 2001

C.) A practice area where someone can increase their skills at coverting to white shielding or black shielding in the game. A lot of practice will be needed for an average gamer to get past the C grade level at the end of the practice run.

D.) A co-op option letting a friend battle evil with you.

Type : Kart Racing

This is a game that I've played everyday at school in the 12th grade during brakes. Mario Kart invented the kart racing formula. No other game can match it's style and success. When I say this game rocks, I mean it's fantastic. Why, because I had nothing better to do, no one to talk to, and it was the only GBA game of two I own. The game not only has 4 tracks and 4 cups, but not intended also has all the SNES Super Mario Kart tracks for the gamer to unlock. I haven't unlocked any because I never had first on all four tracks on 150cc difficulty. The game is harder then Super Mario Kart 64 much because you play the game on a small screen. If only I had a Gameboy Player. Does anyone even care? I sure didn't think so Mario Kart Advance's graphics aren't as pretty as some other games. But it isn't bad. I'm not use to draw in graphics which the Gameboy Advance has. The game isn't on CD format so it can't load very detailed backgrounds, one disadvantage of having a 32 megabyte cartridge. It's average by the console's standards. I'm guessing that the Sony PSP will be more powerful then the Gameboy Advance although the Gameboy does have more games for it.

Since I spent more time on this game then any other game for the hand held, I thought the Grand Prix mode in Mario Kart was the best. Even if I could time myself in time trials. I don't see any point to the time trials. I mean the only way you can get better is to race the grand prix until your good at it. I am able to get 1st or 2nd place in the 50cc tracks. The 100 are less unforgiving. One mistake and your out of the race. Did I mention that you must get a certain number of coins before you can get a good grade. But since the GBA LCD screen is so small, you have to switch to see the Screen times. It's worth it though playing this game on the computer. Though emulation, you can of course blow up the image to full size. The game can click ass especially when GBAEMU has a multiplayer that can be activated through networking. A cool feature. The only thing that needs to occur is the host computer needs to be able to ping the computer your playing on. (article posted August 09, 2003 4:10AM)

Summing up Mario Kart : Super CircuitGraphics

The characters models are well done. Nintendo drew out the maximum amount of detail that the gameboy advance can juice out. But the level design is what's there. The game goes back to the SNES roots with backgrounds that stay still while the track itself moves around on an axis. Back in 1991, this was new technology. Know it's what's expected in a videogame. The Gameboy Advance wasn't created to run 3D games That's why the backgrounds are too 16-bit era. They don't have an hardcore feel to them. They don't look high resolution. It's not that complex like we see in other unintended games like Super Mario Advance 3. Fine so the graphics are really good, just not amongst the gameboy advance's best.

Control

9.5

The game is extremely challenging in Single Player Mode. You can have your friends all hooked up to the Game's multiport feature, but your biggest challenge is not against your friends but the game. I can tell that his game is harder than Mario Kart 64. Compared to most games, MK64 was easy. In the game you use the right trigger to slide while you use the d-pad to turn directions. The karts come in weight classes. Which I think is a good idea. Without weight classes every racer would be equal. Take Yoshi, the easiest to control of the bunch. Mario is the favorite and is medium weight. I would think that Luigi is a light weight because he looks so skinny, but he is also a medium weight like Mario. Donkey Kong and Wario are heavy weights. These karts can't be knocked around. And some times on the easier courses, these guys are best to pick. One reason is that they'll end up in front quicker and they'll stay more still than the others so if your timing is right, the heavy weights pick up all the coins on the track. My experience with Wario was best because I could pick up most of the coins in the track in the Flower Cup. That about sums this game up. It's still challenging. I bet that a lot of you grown tired of challenging games if you even picked this game up.

Originalism

9.0

Mario Kart is highly original. The idea to put Mario in a racing game wasn't a bad one, it caught on. I was once anxious to get Mario Kart 64 when I was 13. Now 7 years later I have forgotten mostly about that game and this game is the only Gameboy Advance game that I play. I'm glad Nintendo brought back the Rainbow Road race from the N64.

6.0

The sound is alright. Nothing really good about it.

Replayably

10.0

You'll be playing this game a lot because it's one of the most fun games to play if your looking for a 3D racing game.

Changed Geocities webpage again (2003-02-26 00:33)

Other news that happened this week and I got my midterm grade and it happens to be Bs. School's not terrible. I'm having fun in technology class. Chris Crow is very entertaining. His speeches do a lot for the room. I'm learning Power Point and Microsoft Word. What do you think of that! I still go to Indian Technical college in River Falls. I wanted to drop out, but that can't happen because I need the credit to graduate this year.

And when my friend, Chuck came over to visit and play games, I couldn't play Unreal Tournament 2003, so we played the Unreal Tournament instead. So at first it was this too gory for me, but I found that later on I got use to it. I found Deck 16 j[i] off the Internet. The map rules. It actually looks like the old version for Unreal Tournament. (Most popular UT map of all time)

Later that night I found the 3 disc set in my cd case. I wasn't looking hard enough.

Gamecube - Mario Kart Double Dash review (2003-02-28 12:43)

I don't mind what other people say about this title, perfect or not perfect, this is a must buy for Gamecube! It's been 5 years since I bought Mario Kart 64, and it's been a long wait if that. This game has a positive turn out because the tracks are wacky, but MK64 is known for it. One draw back is the music, but I'll get to this later. The game comes with 24 grand prix tracks, and 50cc, 100cc, 150cc. One questionable fact in the new Mario Kart is the player only gets to pick 12 tracks at the beginning. Only 12 tracks? While the original came with all tracks at the very beginning, and had 200cc (hardest difficulty) This by no means makes Double Dash any less difficult. The competition will give you a challenge. 50cc plays like 100cc in Mario Kart 64. 100cc plays like 150cc. And 150cc will play like 200cc. I'm suggesting that a game starring Mario is actually difficult for hardcore gamers. I mean at the very beginning.

Double Dash has the exact same features as Mario Kart 64. Although many gamers would agree, Mario Kart 64, which was probably the preferred racing game of any N64 game, didn't come as a bonus disk or unlockable feature in this game. I mean how hard can it possibly be? I'd just take the Mario Kart 64 ROM, and stick it on the mini-disk. The game disk has 1.6 GB. This did not happen of course. Rumor is that Nintendo is putting N64 classics on a game disk and releasing it. Okay, enough of the rumors. Double Dash is based on the same point system of Mario Kart 64. Okay, I'll explain:

If you get first in a race, you get 8 points. Second place 6 points. Third Place 5 points. Fourth Place 4 points. Win the races and you earn vehicles (like the Waluigi Racer), extra characters (like Toad) and tracks (like the Special Cup.) If you don't see the Rainbow track (seen in N64 as Rainbow Road), don't have a fit, it comes apart of Special Cup, once you've earned it.

This game is colorful, the character models look generic, but it's not suppose to have the shiny, shadow look. I mean if you take all Mario games, they are very clean, but feature Super Mario 64 style graphics. I can't say it any simpler. Ever since Super Mario 64 was a mega hit, Nintendo just stuck with the graphics style. They wouldn't make a cell shaded Mario Kart. (AKA: Legend of Zelda: The Wind Waker.) A interesting fact is Hal Labitories, the developer of Super Smash Bros. Melee, made all the characters more shaded then usual. This lead to make gamers believe that all future Nintendo games would indeed follow the same formula. Although it would be nice if this were true, I believe Nintendo wanted the New Mario Kart game to be the way that most people expected it would be. No details were released at IGN.com until mid-July 2003, but everyone knew that it would look a lot like Mario Kart 64 in High Res. It would be nice if Nintendo added extra polygons to the characters.

The game has this good feel, and makes it easily the top Nintendo game for Christmas last year. It is better than it's predecessor, I wished though, the game didn't use some content from Super Mario Sunshine. Super Mario 64 was clearly better designed than Sunshine, and it would be like that. Although, Nintendo fans don't know what's behind the highly classified game in the works, dubbed Super Mario128, and if it's going to feature the same level design as Super Mario 64. And if Luigi will join Mario in 2 player mode or at least be a unlockable character first featured in the 1985 game, undeniably the best NES game ever which made Mario and Luigi immortal stars, Super Mario Bros.

Double Dash comes with four average Battle Mode maps. They aren't bad, but they could of been more. Clearly, Nintendo was more interested in making Grand Prix mode better than average, so other "minigames" got a little similar. The bottom line is that I believe the Super Mario 64 (if you've placed the game) were better. Why Nintendo did you get rid of the maze idea, that was an in-genius idea I thought featured both in Super Mario Kart and Mario Kart 64? So many features in Double Dash rely on Grand Prix mode including Multiplayer, Time Attack, and Mirror mode. Hell, it's still fun, it comes with 5 cups. No Mario Kart 64 fan would expect anything less in the main game.

The graphics, this game isn't the prettiest game on Nintendo. It's kinda showing its age already. This isn't the games fault, it's just as game consoles improved, the older games just look more pixelly. This is what some gamers call "The Cube Factor." The older consoles were based on sprites while the new consoles are 3D and use polygon. The cube factor goes stands against the newer games because it leaves out the classic formula that either made the game a hit or a lackluster in the past. Why do people still play NES? The cube factor draws them in. Games long ago that were as beautiful as they were simple. Back when all games were 2D. I believe the older games were sometimes better because they didn't use a joystick. The d-pad, and a couple buttons were all gamers needed to play the game. Not since characters can move in 360 degree radius they need a 360 degree stick to accompany it. Thus with a 2D layout, level design can be focused in 2D, camera angles are not a factor although some gamers say Final Fantasy, Metal Gear Solid, Super Mario 64, Goldeneye, and Grand Thief Auto 3, and Vice City were perfectly executed the camera. Camera angles aren't considered a big issue in racing titles because the camera is always behind the car, and it follows the same pattern in every lap. Same case with First Person Shooters. The camera is your eyes, and doesn't need to follow the character at a trillion possible bad angles. The graphics are prettier than any Playstation 2 game. Metal Gear Solid: The Twin Snakes is coming to Gamecube, so gamers can't say Metal Gear Solid 2 has better graphics. Gamecubes graphics are usually superior to Playstation 2 even if it's just a small amount. Which do you think has crisper higher resolution graphics, Final Fantasy X or Final Fantasy Crystal Chronicles? I am not ripping on PS2 at all since I own one, but sometimes I just get this feeling that Mario Kart Double Dash 'higher resolution' graphics beats any Playstation 2 game on the market. Okay except for Grand Thief Auto, which looks better than many Gamecube game ports that also are for Playstation 2. Bottom line, I think this game looks better than 97 % of PS2 games. PS2 gamers, you know you'll just say how superior Playstation 3 looks to Gamecube. And I know this because it's also going to look better than Xbox. But PS3 will also nudge graphics of many PS2 up like PS2 has done with PSone games. Tell me that great games like Gran Turismo 2 and Final Fantasy 7 look upgraded on PS2.

To conclude my review I give Mario Kart an average of 4.5 out of 5.0. The game works pretty well on the Gamecube controller. The controls are precise, and tightly adjusted. I happen to play this game often, and it's still fun after you beat it. (I haven't beaten it yet, but I will someday. This game will be a #1 pick in my Gamecube collection so I'll be playing this game long after Gamecube's predecessor is on the market.)

PC - Elder Scrolls III Morrowind review (2003-03-02 12:03)

Elder Scrolls 3 - Morrowind (PC GAMER 2002 RPG of the Year)

Morrowind is a role playing game with vast environments in a 3d world that can either first person or 3rd person. It looks like it takes place in the 14th century. I can tell why because the buildings are dated back to who knows when. It has the same group behind it that was on Elder Scrolls 2 in 1996.

Exploring

I have both Tribunal and Bloodmoon, so I have an extended version of the game.

Your character comes equipped with a dagger in the beginning, and you go out exploring. What is unique about this game is when you steal something; you'll be reported to the authorities immediately. Stealing is half the fun in this game because you can get away with it. Don't think you can walk in with the same clothes as one of the guards and not get noticed.

The other half is leveling up your character. The easiest way is to become an outlaw. Outlaws in this game are fine, but they don't get along with people to well.

Weapons

There are 100s of weapons in this game. Some are downloadable in form of mods. The weapons look blocky though.

Graphics

This game isn't state of the art, but you'll need an 800 MHz machine to play decently. You'll have to deal with some major slow downs though.

The game has pretty backgrounds, unparalleled to other PC RPGs like Diablo 2. There are visual packs on the Internet that'll enhance backgrounds. This game was first meant to play on a 500 MHz machine, but that'll just make the game run slowly. Everybody has 1 GHz of speed now-a-days.

The sky is bitmapped and days come and go. You'll see stars at night and white clouds in the day, and storm clouds both day and night. It needs at least a TNT 2 to play, but you'll get a lot of lag, your pc will load new more areas slowly created a lot of lag during actual play. It wouldn't be noticeable on a 1.5 GHz machine, Bethesda said.

On super computers, about 2.5 GHz, and a 256-MB Geforce 4, you'll get some awesome graphical effects. The detail, already compressed, will look cinematic like it does on Xbox. The graphics still look really good with a 128 MB Geforce 4 on my PC. Who knows how this game will be affected on newer processors?

Faces

Faces are above average and there are many Morrowind mods that'll change the faces and make them better. They won't look simple after some of the mods update data files that control faces.

Atmosphere

Takes place in Renaissance period it seems like. There are super natural enemies in this game like skeletons and ghosts. But there are a lot of different races too. Races that hate each other are only apparent away from towns. But in towns, your race doesn't mean a thing.

Drive Space

This game takes up less then a Gigabyte of hard drive space.

PC vs. XBOX

Microsoft Windows vs. Xbox. With a console having so much on board memory, the XBOX was an easy choice for Bethesda Softworks. The Xbox has particle shading that looks better then the PC game. But on high end PCs, there isn't any difference.

Conclusion

Morrowind is a good game with plenty of quests. You can just about talk to anyone, and go on a new quest just like on Xbox.

Xbox may be running smoothing, but the pc version can be modded. This game is great.

Review of Elder Scrolls III – Tribunal

Tribunal is suppose to be a good expansion, though, I won't know until I get this far in the game. Review up soon.

Review of Elder Scolls III – Bloodmoon

Bloodmoon is the latest expansion that Benestha developed, probably the last. The expansion loads with Morrowind, and Morrowind installed with Tribunal. It has a lot to do with werewolves, and vampires. This is the first RPG since Vampires: The Masquerade that allows vampirism. Vampirism and WereWolfism are allowed outside Bloodmoon.

Never Winter Nights

top

| GAME FEATURES |

A.) Very Stable, and very playable RPG. Latest patch is v1.29.

B.) 40 hours of adventuring.

C.) Battle system which improved over Baldur's Gate franchise and became a 3rd person prospective with a free rotating camera to boot.

D.) Dangerously addictive quests.

Never Winter Nights has been worked on for 5 years. One of the reasons that it's graphics has come outdated in the process. The game off cd is very buggy so I would advise getting patch update ver 1.20 off the Internet so you can run the game without it crashing. Bioware came up with Never Winter when they tried to create a real 3D version of Iceward Dale long ago, also made from Bioware. Except Neverwinter has an involving combat system. You have to constantly be aware of your characters statistics. I doubt that the Neverwinter Nights is trying to starve your character, the game is b focused on combat. This game is far beyond Diablo 2. In Diablo 2 : Lord of Destruction, you have 5 character classes including Sorcerer, Paladin, Barbarian, Amazon and Necromancer. However in this game, you can be Half Elf, Human, Half Orc, Elf, Dwarf or Half Dwarf and carry magic abilities. Which makes leveling low level characters an art in this game.

This game is ranked #1 for "Best Role Playing Game of 2002" by Gamespot and PC Magazine. Bioware shown me this how deep the story goes. The story is basically saving Neverwinter from the Plague. You can take several steps to level up in this game. Your character is saved to the game, so you can start your adventuring from the Academy through the city of Neverwinter, whether it be the Docks or Peninsula or Barracks, your character does a lot of quests for people. The game is definably rescuing people and knowing who your friends are. I know, from the first chapter, that being kind is how you get the rewards and being mean is just meaningless. I like to loot everything I get. I found some awesome armor by bashing locked chests. Try bashing doors inside towns and gain access to secret areas. Bioware has spent 5 years perfecting the battle system. The game has more in common with Dungeon Siege then Baldur's Gate II. This would be a plus for me because I was a Dungeon Siege fan most recently. Although that game was a favorite of mine for the past few months, I started playing this game instead, and will continue to play it for another few months. So far, I like the backgrounds in this title. They are really detailed. Don't let though's reviews tell you that they aren't, because they know they don't care as long as all graphics are in high resolution, which they are. I think people under-estimate how beautiful the game looks from a distance. We have running water, a lot of tiled stones and decent eye candy. Eye candy is special effects that comes with magic special effects. This game has the famous ice and fire rings appearing in battle. Found in all RPG games, first appearing in Final Fantasy, I think. This game looks a heck a lot better then Dink SmallWood! This game is bug free now with the latest patch Bioware handed out to the public. I give this game a perfect score of 5 for it's addictive gameplay.

Online Gameplay

First of all I like the online play because it's much less laggy then Dungeon Siege on a modem. Plus you get to talk to people. The game is free online and runs through the Gamespy network. You can do a lot of things in this game. Set and talk, drink beer and have sex. Really so, it's hilarious. People find the default female human character with long blue hair sexy. Anyone with the time should play online. I you have broadband, then the isn't affected unless you have someone using a modem within a 10 yard radius with in yours. Most people are either human barbarians for the fighter type. One skill that's worth having is the ability to weld your own armor together. You can sell it to someone and make money.

Cheats for NeverWinter Nights

Shame on you for clicking on this page, but nonetheless now that you're here in order to enable the cheats, you must first go to a file in your NWN folder named nwn.ini. Open it with notepad or any other text processor and add the line "Debug Mode=1" (without quotes). That the first part done, now when you're playing in the game you hit the button (left of your 1 button at the top) and a > should appear near the top of your screen. Now your must type "DebugMode 1" (without quotes exactly like that) and press enter and you might see certain areas on the ground highlighted, they're just triggers and stuff. Now you follow the table below and REPLACE any # with the desired number.

Note:

In order to turn debug mode off, type "DebugMode 0"

> Pressing tab right after will display a set of commands that can be used

Note the effects with *s on them means that it has a chance of rendering your character invalid and illegal making it unable to be used when advancing to the next chapter or internet play

The effects with + indicates that it will not render your character useless

| GAME FEATURES | A.) Updated version of the Unreal Tournament. Since it is preferred then Unreal 2, UT2003 is the stand alone.

B.) 25 deathmatch maps, 10 counterstrike, 10 domination, what more can you ask for?

C.) Emensely graphical. Your talking about state of the art graphics that you before only saw on consoles.

D.) improvements in map design. Maps are larger, more open

I remember playing Unreal Tournament three years ago. The remixs made exciting off the wall music. No, they weren't exceptional, some were very goo

d. Others were ok. A few were dull. I liked some of the soundtracks so much that I found the mp3s version of those somes, one example is "Run!!!". Unreal Tournament was a highly enjoyable game, I think, and the only game that I was able to play on 2 computers using the same disc. That game and Half-Life. I think that Castle Wolfenstine comes second before Half Life. I never really liked Quake III, which was a blood fest to say the least. I wasn't a fan of Quake III.

Then I bought UT2003 in November. Unreal Tournament 2003 is suppose to take off 100 years after Unreal Tournament. Unreal Tournament has different characters with varied skill sets. It doesn't much matter when playing the game. This game is real pretty from start to finish. The frame rate never drops, plenty to look at, and outstanding sound too boot. The music is very interesting to listen too. I don't care much about the announcer, though. UT2003 runs at a solid 60 frames per second, like on mine. That is 30 frames on some older computers. Unreal Tournament is a prime example of what a first person shooter should be, next to Halo and next to Metroid Prime, in my opinion. UNreal Tournament also comes with a single player mode where you try to complete missions in each game. Multi-player is like the old Unreal Tournament. The concept never changed. I play this game when ever I have friends over. Got to get in time fragging with at least one friend. I don't play this game much by myself. I really can't stand playing it more then a hour at a time. After that, I lose my concentration. I lost interest with a lot of my games I buy over time. I stay interested usually when I download 3rd party maps available off the Internet. It's unbelievable how much quality people can come up with. Two/Thirds of all maps in UT2003 are worthy of play. The 1/3 that aren't usually weren't because they couldn't support a large amount of players. And it was a very frustrating game when playing in a small map in Unreal Tournament. You get smuttiered way too many times. The weakest point of a 3rd party map is usually that it does have enough pretty backgrounds to support their creation, all of these maps are bug free from the get go. A new standard that Digital Designs had put in UT2003. I doubt that the sequel will accumulate as many maps as Unreal Tournament had. Over 400 new maps, including bonus packs. Most of them, you can't download anymore. I recently downloaded the UNREAL TOURNAMENT 2003 Bonus Package, the only official bonus pack online. I'm glad I did. I give Unreal Tournament a perfect score of 5.

PC - Dungeon Siege review (2003-03-05 12:06)Dungeon Siege*March 14, 2003*top*| GAME FEATURES |

A.) one gigantic universe of in game scenery (an almost endless game)

B.) ability to create maps using the Siege Editor

C.) Many many people to talk too on the way to make the game look interesting D.) Free Downloadable maps including Yesterhaven, the official expansion pack.

C.) 2 full maps, Kingdom of Erb, and Ultraean Peninsula each worth 10 to 20 hours of game play each. Depending on your skill level.

Dungeon Siege is the popular game from Gas Powered Games which has 100s of thousands of people hooked because if it's incredibly simple combat system. Yes you would have to be a fan of either Warcraft, StarCraft, Everquest or Diablo to qualify. But what you want to hear is that Dungeon Siege is a better game then Diablo 2. Dungeon Siege what I am playing now on my PC. Diablo 2 being my second favorite online game. I can't really say how much detail graphically went in this game because my PC (Even with a Nvidia Geforce 2) slows down to a crawl during my single player game playing one of six people in my party. Take that Diablo 2 single player mode. With a few mods and and trainer the game couldn't be more fun. I spent 3 hours and not even seeing 1/5 of the whole game.

Hacking enemies to death is not boring due to the party's ability to handle most enemies. I defeat a small army and go onto the next. This is the heart and soul of Dungeon Siege. P.S. I find that any sorceress's in the game is the worst. Having a sorceress join the party the first time slows the party down some what because sorceresses have a hard time leveling up using spells. The character's intelligence is hardest to gain. There are so many pipe sized army ranging from moderate to very hard. Again the game is graphically demanding, even a 1.3 GHz machine can get a heavy work out. At 800/600 there is a lot going on. The capacity of the game can even go up 3 resolutions.

Besides the fact that having a LAN running the game with a trainer would, to me, be the best thing that could happen to me. Not being able to join games on the network with out satelight internet or broadband would this kill the enjoyment of the game. The only possible way around this is joining a 2 person game with a modem in the same town. That way it won't cost you 30 dollars in long distance bills. Even though it would lag a bit it would be about the same as any FPS direct connection out there.

At the most basic level, it takes no thinking or standardizing to get what you want to happen in this game. If your party isn't able to take on a variety of enemies. You'll know it very fast. If you want you can try to "find ways of living longer" or most commonly known as "out thinking your opponent." To me however "out thinking your opponent" would be the same as me being a deer against a man with a rifle. So it is really a waste of brain power. Even though I like warcraft too. I have a very hard time with it because I have to think and rely on myself which gets me killed 10 times over. So I really appreciate ability to choice party members in single player mode.

I know it, everyone else playing this game knows it. Buying basic supplies is cheap. Most the time that's all you need. I find all my armor and weapons on the battle field. Because the elves destroyed and took suppliles from these towns, most of the humble towns people this want to get by so they sell you stuff really cheap. I like this because one of the essentials, the pack mule, only cost me a little bit. I can't recall what town it was - I don't remember names.

Dungeon Siege Quests, I have to say I enjoy questing as much as doing nothing in the whole game. Part of the game is knowing where to go to complete the chapter. If that makes a whole lot of sense. Characters in the game ask you to do things that are impossible. For an example in chapter one the town's blacksmith asks me to find his brother when perhaps I couldn't find him any ways because he was killed by a ugly orc.

Hmm. If you take notice in this game you'll realize that you can be playing it all day without looking at the clock. This includes picking items off the ground and adding the better ones to our party. The rest of the time hacking and slashing enemies. Spending all my time doing quests covering large amounts of land doing each one is hard work. It makes me want to drink a lot of pop.

Want to level up really fast in Dungeon Siege? There is a favorite that every likes to call the Chicken Level. With the use of the trainer your character will level up 3 times faster then he normally would with out dieing. Sadly this level can not be played in single player mode. Unless you want to import your story mode (aka single player mode) character over to your LAN party using the transfer option. Neat-O.

I'd also advise people to build up a multiplayer character. In single player you only get to play the Kingdom of Erb. Which is still long, and top notch as role playing is concerned. The Ultraean Peninsula is also a huge map with all new characters, and landscape. Playing the maps from the beginning is no fun so Gas Powered Games came up with the idea of opening progress points throughout the game. You gain access through the multiplayer setup and going to game settings, clicking on the map. Then selecting what town you wish to travel though. Online there are extra downloadable files that will make Ultraean Peninsula a Single Player Mode option. Download it some where at Siegenetwork.com.

If you have a computer fast enough I hope you buy this game. Its my best gaming experience I had since a friend of mine introduced me to Diablo I. If you plan to play alone and don't have access to broadband, the story mode far outceeds the online experience. The patch really doesn't do much good. The game still runs good without it.

YESTERHAVEN EXPANSION

As many Dungeon Siege players know, this file is not only the most fun map, but also the only expansion pack made by Gas Powered Games. Some people can't download this huge file. Once downloaded, it is well worth the time. The size of Yesterhaven is maybe 1/3 size of Kingdom of Erb. This map isn't the longest map available to download, but it does comes with a decent story. You transfer to a location of a town called Yesterhaven. You and your character defeat wolves, snowmen, fire demons, necromancers, and such in 3 levels Ice, Dark and Fire. In the ice stage, I see a lot of trees. The landscape is smooth. You'll find a lot of reflections off ice in the cave, coming later in the stage. In my opinion I like the one with the skeletons the best of all of them. You have the best looking demons that I came across. Low level characters can level up here. In fact, because the stages can be completed with in 10 or 20 minutes. You character can buy extraordinary items from a skeleton dude which appears in all three levels. On my computer, Yesterhaven runs at a reasonable 40 frames per second. I am sure that the frame rate will rise on faster computers. The frame rate does drop when dealing w ith a lot of enemies on screen at one time. When I finished Yesterhaven, I like it a lot. I give Yesterhaven a 5 out of 5 in level design. This map isn't too hard, but not overly easy. To bad this map couldn't of been longer. Not that it was short, Yesterhaven is plenty long, and will take you atleast 2 1/2 to 3 hours to complete. In the end, you'll be awarded with better armor.

Chicken Level

Attack of the killer chicken is a prime example of this level. The small chickens that once were afraid of you, start flocking at you. In the latest build, chickens can easily peck low level characters to death. You must have 400 health and 300 defensive body armor if you even stand a chance out lasting the giant pecking mother fu __. As you go on, the chickens double in size. The hit points increase even more and their attack is stronger. If your character can get past those chickens (I advise retreating to more able ground) you go past this dragon that takes up the entire width of your monitor. In the end, you get to defeat "Diablo" That's what I call him. He's an exact duplicate of Diablo. He's not a chicken, he's red meanie and in charge! He does mega damage! The final boss does more damage then a large size chicken. I never tried defeating him alone before. Thus, the chicken level is purposely made for a group of players. For that reason I give it a 3/5.

Hyperbora v2.0

Hyperbora is a independent map made by a development team in Holland. I seriously doubt these people got payed for putting this game out. On the site, the publisher said that he and his development team spent 5 months on creating this level. (building, debugging, stabilizing the level for deleting unneeded scenery, etc) I haven't got much into it. However, I do know that this level is really long. Hyperbora has towns like Kingdom of Erb did. Except that all towns sell shit for items. It is also tougher then either Kingdom of Erb and Ultraean Peninsula. Some say that the map sucks. I say it doesn't. The majority of people will a gree with me. I tried it out with my high level character and it works fine in the beginning. I would suggest downloaded this map at Siegenetwork.com. I guess I'm giving this game a 3.5 out of 5 cause it's an above average map from start to finish.

PS2 - Jak and Daxter review (2003-03-09 12:22)

| GAME FEATURES |

Developer : NaghtyDog

A.) A new Crash game that plays like Crash Bandicoot but isn't him.

Publisher : Sony

B.) A lot of objectives.

Released December 2001

C.) Silly characters

D.) A lot of Dialog

Type : Platform

Jak and Dexter is a pretty platformer for PS2. I know that PS2 is getting obsolete, but the graphics just seem a little jagged in this game. It's marvelous to play. The jaggedness is easy to look over because Jak plays well. Jak is the main character, he looks like an elf, and Dexter is a muskrat who Jak teams up with. The spoken dialog is mainly aimed at children, but the tasks, which are set up like Super Mario 64, are variable. I don't know, I feel like a child when I play this game. It gives off a good feeling though, like you accomplished something. This is harder then Super Mario 64, but I marvel at the Jak's maneuvers, they are precise. I started to play a game called Ratchet and Clank and while this game compares well to Jak. Jak is notably better. The gamer gets to do objectives which are highlighted in the beginning of the stage. You can repeat or change the objective. Jak is definably a Super Mario 64 clone, one of the best clones since the N64 game.

One reason is the game's developer, Naughty Dog is also known for developing Crash Bandicoot. The first Crash, I heard was the best in the franchise, sold over 3 million copies. The Crash trademark was then sold to Universal Interactive where it became an average game, Crash 4, never to be seen again as a recognizable mascot in the videogame industry. Naughty Dog created a new franchise that took off again. The 2 year project has lava levels, green levels, towns, and water craft. The game has 10 objectives for each stage in the game. This alone brings the game's to-do list to 120 objectives. Jak closely representing another platform game, not as well known though, Rayman 2: The Great Escape. I like Jak a lot, and it deserves a high review.

Remember Jak is completely designed after Super Mario 64. SM64 was a good game. I didn't know it was THE BEST PLATFORM GAME EVER CREATED until I found out from numerous review websites. Latest Rumor on the Internet is that Super Mario 64 is coming to Gamecube bundled with Super Mario 128 which the gaming community knows little about. It's suppose to be better then Mario Sunshine. Jak brings dialog and funny scenes to the genre. The camera angle is nice and doesn't get bad, ever! IGN.com gave this game a 9.5 out of 10. I recommend going to a place I like to go called

The Sims Deluxe

Playing the Sims is my new favorite over playing Metroid Prime for Gamecube. This is about 6 months after I've stopped playing Diablo 2 Lord of Destruction for the PC. The game has a great graphics engine if your computer can handle all the bitmaps that account for Furniture and the house itself. The characters of course are live action 3D models that really need a 32 Bit videocard at least. I use a 64 bit ATI Radian 9000 in my PC. The Sims is game were you get to control people and determine what personality. Every sim has a right to be happy. Sims start out happy. It is easy to keep your Sims happy if they have something to eat, music and a job that pays for their bills, furniture and food. I like the Sims because it is original. Some Sims get really bored and do nothing. But that's when you get to start over and make adjustments to your house size before you spend $15,000 out of your $20,000 on the home, then run out of money for personal items like kitchenware or beds and dressers.

The houses you can build are endless. You can even make gardens and keep them in good shape.

Your Sims start out at 0 work habits, 0 creativity and 0 skilled. Each time you learn to play the guitar or bench press you earn 1 level skill. Sometimes you will be doing so much that you won't have time for friends but don't forget your friends or they won't be your friend anymore. That is, unless the other guy is as lonely and bored as you are. Gamers will find that part out very quickly. Minutes fly by like seconds. Hours fly by like minutes. The day goes by very quickly. So you'll always have something to do. There is a learning curve that your Sim will learn. He/she will eventually learn to take out the trash by himself or shower himself or work out himself and if he really is happy he'll go to work without you clicking on the car. Ingenious system isn't it.

There is really no leveling up in The Sims like in Role Playing Game but like RPGs you can be playing The Sims for a long time. Most of it's uncomplicated. Buy the 2002 version of The Sims Deluxe. I recommend this game to anyone.

PC - Diablo II - LOD review (2003-03-14 12:07)

Diablo 2 - Lord of Destruction

Type - Role Playing Game released on June 30, 2000

Controls - 4.5/5 mouse and keyboard are very responsive

Graphics - 4/5 Diablo 2 is for low resolution computers

Concept - 5/5 Perfect. The story which took Blizzard 4 years to create was modified for that many years.

Stability - 4/5 near perfect. Battlenet has kept the game online except the few times attempts of hackers, disconnecting of modems and people who ping you who don't want them in their game.

Sound 4/5 - good orchestra music with decent quality sound effects and great acting.

Diablo 2 is fun and addictive. The game includes 7 characters and 40 locations and climates. The sequel takes after the original when the dark-angel lead a human to free Diablo, what he didn't know is that he wasn't the Protector and was killed. You are the character who plays the story up to the death of Diablo and the defeat of Baal.

I have played Diablo 2 for almost a year and the playability always got better. Each new patch has worked better than the last. And beating the game is no easy task but once you reach the 60 level, anything in the game would be easy except for that quest in Act V where warriors come at you on top of this hill. That is extremely hard, but if you beat that the game can be rewarding. There are a couple bad things about it is that like all games run my modem, their are always slow downs which may get you killed. But a party can conquer finish a few quests in an hour. Battlenet is free and their are no long distance fees.

Over Diablo, Diablo 2 LoD has specific weapons for each character class. The expansion allows you to create perfect gems and unify it into your armor, weapon or shield to make the good even better. I have a level 77 sorceress that masters in fire and lighting. My character can wipe of another character 10 levels up (as long as it isn't another sorceress.) But you will find that once your character gets too powerful, you may this grow tired of creating new characters, which isn't bad, this it makes you feel that your lvl 80 druid or lvl 92 barbarian is this doing nothing, so it is something to think about if you play it all the time.

Concept - 5/5 You play an American trying to get out of a German fortress.

Very cool. Very real. In fact extensive research was taken to make the game the best experience a player could have without making it difficult.

Stability - 5/5 the game is fluid and has had no freeze ups.

Sound - 5/5 German speaking Nazis, nice script, and realistic gunfire makes it up their with Unreal Tournament and Half-Life. The gunfire is in surround sound. The best part is that Id Software had this sound location mod that came with the game so it don't really use the sound-card at all..

The new game is a recreation of the first Wolfenstine back before Quake was released. The original game looked exactly like doom with the low resolution graphics. Return to Castle Wolfenstine is the same game with many Germans, great graphics, and an urge to play again and again. In my opinion this game is as fun as Goldeneye. This game doesn't exist in a fantasy world where hell has taken over (Quake III) The fact that the concept is world war II based is enough to buy the title. Another new trend in the game is that the single player mode and multi-player mode are cerate. I like this a whole lot. You can be on the Wolfenstine server in matter of a minute. It looks as if this game will soon become the next Quake III. Id has free level editors on the web already (Uses the Quake III editor) . New maps are popping up on Wolfenstine fan-sites, already. I would highly recommend this game to anyone.

I haven't played this game since it is too bloody. The graphics even though have been surpassed looks like it will run on Windows and be a favorite amongst gamers for 3 more years. By that time Unreal 2 will of hit stores. Digital Extremes made Unreal Tournament simply a perfected version of Unreal. I own both games and Unreal Tournament looks the same to the first Unreal. Both games use Unreal ED 2.0. The level designer in Unreal Tournament. UT is a massive First Person Shooter with tons of developer support. One reason to get the game is that there are at-least 5 or 6 new levels that come out on Fileplanet every month. But I wouldn't know since I haven't played this game for weeks. The AI is variable. The levels that come with the game have very good to decent. I like the castle lvl the best and that ship lvl the worst. The harder the level the more hit damage. The game is very clean and is very stable which supports both OpenGL and Direct3D.

PS2 - Final Fantasy X-2 review (2003-04-01 12:19)

Final Fantasy X-2

| GAME FEATURES |

Developer : Squaresoft

A.) Take this game as a Final Fantasy X sequel.

Publisher : Square-Enix

B.) A lot of objectives. This game will keep you occupied for hours.

Released November 11, 2003

C.) Comes with some of the best FMV ever created

D.) A lot of cutscenes.

Type : Role Playing Game

Here is my review of the first sequel to a Final Fantasy game. Final Fantasy is notorious for being a solid, and well-liked game on any platform.

The story takes 2 years after Yuna defeats Sin and turned Sphira into Eternal Calm. The developer, Squaresoft, took the original code of the first game and put it in X-2. Everything that was familiar in the first game is here in this game including all the characters. Squaresoft managed to improve the physics engine since their last title. This is not Squaresoft's first project since Final Fantasy X. The first game to be developed was Kingdom Hearts, released last year, which combined Square's most detailed engine.

The game opens up with Yuna a Summoner turned pop star. The game soon after reveals the plot on the Gillwing Airship.

Yuna, Rikku and Paine as the three main characters are now Sphere Hunters. The Sphere hunters were created by the Youth Group and the Al Bhed to locate all the former technology that was created 1000 years later. Yuna is using it to find a look a like of the main character in FFX, Tidus. The game is already set 2 years after he started looking for him. Like the first game, Yuna finds Spheres which recorded the past.

That's the plot of the story. And later, Yuna meets a group apart of the Youth Group called the Leblanc Syndicate. Leblanc, the leader, can change herself to look like Yuna with a special sphere. However in the beginning of the game, Yuna gets that sphere back.

This sphere might have something to do with the ending of the game, although the story is really foggy. Yuna is part of the Gillwings now. The Gillwings are neutral to New Yevon, a democratic country that owns most of Sphera and the Youth League and New Yevan are against each other in their ideas on how to rule Sphira. Later in the game, Yuna will have to make the overwhelming decision of befriending once side. Final Fantasy X-2 has three ending movies depending on the way you make the game end.

This adds more replay value, because you can play the game over to see two alternate endings.

The plot does take part in the story. But most of the RPG is about completing missions that are acquired by jobs. There are small jobs and large jobs. Such examples are the Marriage Mission that spans all the game. One thing positive about Final Fantasy X-2 is that no mission is required to be done immediately.

With the use of the Gillwing Airship you "fly" to any location that you want to, and back track to locations on the globe that you've already been too.

Final Fantasy X-2 is not better than Final Fantasy X - although it is a sequel with similar characters and locations. Instead of keeping the Sphere Grid, Square changed the battle system to a Garment Grid. This grid allows any main character to change abilities or as the game calls it....jobs.

This selection screen can be accessed in REAL MODE, formally called Action Time Battle, in enemy or boss battles. Campaign Mode will always allow character to interact with their surroundings.

The Garment Grid totals 10 garments in the game. There is a gun mage, black mage, white mage, thief, warrior, paladin, sorceress type job too. There are more, but I forgot what they are called. Each Job has 6 skills that can be mastered as easily as just using the skill often. You also level up automatically as long as you use the same skill. Some skills are better to use in different areas. Although the default jobs for the top main characters, Yuna, Paine and Rikku are most likely the best overall skills to use. The game tells you how much further until the game are completed. I'm about 18 % through with FFX-2, and I seen no reason to switch garments unless there was some enemy in the game that was resistant to physical attacks, which you will see sometimes. It may frustrate a novice gamer because everything is so fast paced. Which is a definitely a good thing according me and most other RPG fans. Squaresoft has one prime purpose, and that is to create a fun, addicting game that RPGS fans around the globe enjoy. I don't think they ever had a game that failed to sell well.

The most obvious reason that people got this game was that the battle sequences where in full 3D. That part hasn't changed. In FFX and FFX-2 there was always a limit of 3 characters that could be on screen at once. However, since the sequel uses the same buttons as the original on the Duel Shock II controller, FFX fans will know which buttons do what. X is attack. Square is always find locations for activation codes for Macha and/or find spheres. Triangle can access is the menus screen only during both real mode and campaign mode. Circle is always cancel used to cancel any commands in the game or highlight the cancel. In fact during some long cut-scenes, circle can stop them by pressing the START button during one of them.

The graphics are better than that they were in Final Fantasy X. Remember FFX had FMV, 3D graphics and a solid REAL MODE. The game can push out a lot of polygons to make it look well close to, well Kingdom Hearts. Kingdom Hearts and FFX-2 could use the same physics engine.

My final comments in the game are

I have some personal favorites about this game too. I really bought this game to see if it stood up to it's predecessor. FFX was ground braking in the FMV department, the REAL Mode department and the experience department. It did have some catchy tunes. So far this game is pretty good. I'm really one of those people who played RPGs, and all Squaresoft games are essential. They started games including Parasite Eve, Xenogears, and Breath of Fire for other developers to continue. Just because they have so much experience backing them, doesn't mean that no one can create a game that outperforms games from Square. Namco and Capcom have come very close to creating large scale games that meet the magnitude of Final Fantasy and Kingdom Hearts. Square develops the highest percentage of Role Playing Games on current consoles. Although Squaresoft tried entering the Racing Genre (with Emotion Type S Racing) 1 Action Fighting Genre (The Bouncer), even the Baseball Genre (Japanese Baseball) they've come out average to below average on their attempts. Although Parasite Eve recieved good online reviews. They've managed to develop over 20 RPGs for PC, NES, SNES, Gameboy, Playstation, Playstation 2, Gamecube, and Wonderspan spanning 17 years of their existence. Perhaps down the road, with so many gigabytes available on DVDs, gamers might see re-releases of old games on future platforms. Squaresoft released all their old school Final Fantasy games on Playstation. Something that Nintendo is also notorious for doing on Gamecube - if you know what I'm leading too? If not, I'll fill in the details. Nintendo re-released the popular N64 game. Legend of Zelda Ocarina of Time and Master Quest expansion pack on Gamecube. They also included Metroid with Metroid Prime. Super Mario Bros, and Legend of Zelda included with Animal Kingdom. Nintendo is also bragging about the release of all Legend of Zelda games re-released called simply dubbed "The Zelda Collection" that'll will definably be a must buy for any RPG lover owning a Gamecube. Rumors say that a popular Final Fantasy game from the NES or SNES days is going to be re-released on Gamecube with a bonus disk or unlockable game in FF: Crystal Chronicles. This has nothing to do with Final Fantasy X-2. But it may mean in 5 to 10 years we might see a re-release of Final Fantasy in the future. Latest Rumors on the Internet say that Final Fantasy 7 will be updated onto PS2, but there are no details to it except for the new Final Fantasy movie coming out next year based after the events of Final Fantasy 7.

If you never played Final Fantasy 7 before or any other Final Fantasy game, I wouldn't worry about it.

Final Fantasy X-2 is a worthy title to own. I like it almost as I like the prequel.

The Australian brainfuck (2003-04-09 21:13)

I hate high school. I am the only right-wing guy in the whole academy. These classmates always had a car full of students with an Australian who is Labour (socialist). These students don't say the pledge. I was on my Gameboy Advance during lunch break. These kids were learning socialist politics from the fucking Australian. I was left to roam the streets. The "Whitest black person anyone ever knew" called me racist. I drew something awful and it was both a hammer and sickle and swastika and ran away from school a few times, because I couldn't make up my mind about Jake (African-American)! They brainwashed me out of politics. I knew one thing, they definitely wanted me to talk at the academy over staying completely mute.

I pretty much hang around Chuck Peskar and Shawn Worm, who were definitely liberal, but definitely weren't Australian Labour Party members. He was fun, because we walked to gether sometimes, and played Unreal Tournament 99 at his house online. He let me us it. He has an obsolete PC with Windows 2000 with a load of Mp3s on it like 2PAC. His Brother has a PC with Debian Linux on it. Montez was a Labour party person herself, because politics didn't matter as far as she was concerned. Carol Motez rule with a stick so it was weird combo (her/Australian). I graduated with a B+ GPA diploma; however, the dogs class really sucked. I knew the Australian family was getting away from the VAT tax in Australia. I didn't pass the Navy test so I'm not exactly going to try again. It was really hard to do that math. I learned a lot more at the private school called Calvin Academy in Moundsvew, Minnesota where I was a stray A student. It was a one-on-one education. I thought bullshit, it had everything to do with socialist politics and that the Afghanistan War is going to last for 5 years or more. The students were doing countries, and one did the Russia and he drew the hammer and sickle on his picture that one day. Another picked Germany and drew a Swastika on his. I think I can explain the hammer and sickle.

 Yep, I was alienated due to being right-wing.

PS2 - Devil May Cry review (2003-04-11 11:23)

| GAME FEATURES |

Developer : Capcom

A.) Upgraded Resident Evil franchise that shares attributes of Genma Onimusha .

Publisher : Capcom

B.) The game's focus is to challenge you, but with the guns you can have fun doing so.

Released August 26, 2003

C.) Mission based objectives.

D.) Power ups and resistances.

Type : 3rd Person Action

Game fact: Devil May Cry is a Resident Evil clone made by the same developer. If you like Resident Evil, then you will like this game better (^-^)

Devil May Cry assumes the role of Dante, a half man / half demon bounty hunter with a missing pass. This guy has been pierced with too many swords. That must be his darker half of his body. Chuckle. Dante starts off with a pair of guns and a long sword. Dante can use the sword very fast against his enemies. In the beginning of the game he encounters evil dolls.

Now think of Resident Evil when you enter this castle. It's basically a trademarked idea. Look for items to unlock new areas by defeating a group of enemies or finding keys. When destroying statues to open gain access to boss sequences for the most part, have to first know where it is.

It's pretty ironic. A lot of times you spend a lot of your time searching for a key item and you run into the same enemies over and over again. Just like in Resident Evil when zombies come alive.

They become stronger the second time around. I did say this game is an upgrade of Resident Evil. It reminds me of the dark police station in RE2. The game uses still, fixed camera. The very beginning or Mission 1 of the game isn't hard. Dante can easily overpower any enemy with his sword. In Mission 2, Dante gets a brand new sword. This is after he puts a magical staff on a statue. This sword is twice as good as the first.

The mission 3 is kind of hard with the scorpion to start the level off. Beware his fireball. But of course you can shoot the fireball with a shotgun and take hit points off the beast.

Dante's control scheme is much like Resident Evils. Unlike Resident Evil you're not under equipped. Dante is very athletic. He has many guns to play with along the way of this adventure. He can jump off walls to get to new areas. He can be shielded with energy (L1 on duel shock 2 to toggle) Dante has special moves when he is using guns or different ones when he's using a kick ass sword.

At the end of each mission, you get mission results. These results are timed based. If you aren't totally lost (I use a FAQ when ever possible) Dante will finish within a 30 minutes from the beginning of the mission to the end of the mission.

If Dante can zip through the mission when he is replaying a mission, then it's likely he'll spend 10 – 15 minutes on the mission. It's really not any bother how much time you spend on the game. It just makes your score go higher.

I try jumping around. I try not staying in the same place all the time. I know I'll press the right button at the right time that something will happen. I just will have to fight more enemies who will regenerate each time I go pass a certain area. Having a shotgun equipped is fun though, and keeps the game interesting.

PS2 - Xenosaga Episode I (2003-04-13 11:24)

| GAME FEATURES |

Developer : Namco

A.) Great Voice Acitng

Publisher : Monthsoft

B.) A really questionable battle system

Released August 26, 2003

C.) Confusing misson objectives

D.) Power ups and resistances.

Type : not your typical Role Playing Game

This game is the prequel of Xenosaga for the PSone from Squaresoft. I haven't played the original, but from the reviewer ratings, the game sounds really good buy. This game is a little dated now released on a dated system we know as PS2. But what they hell they said, Playstation 2 is Playstation 2, the only console that a developer can score big on now-a-days. This game, with a development cycle of over 2 years, didn't come to a surprise to Square fans. The graphics were above average to begin with, the cinema is really good for a game of this type. The game is essentially one big movie with all the full motion video in it.

The Story

The game begins in 2022 when people discover an alien artifact in the ocean. They examine it, and human kind haven't scratched its technology. This makes us feel really good. Four hundred years later we are already in deep space with advanced technology so advanced that it's really been programmed in artificial life that is made to look human. Other Mech-Warrior type machines help protect the space ships of alien races. This race is highly evolved and their ships are composed of living organisms. A person Sharon creates an prototype artificial life form called KOS-MOS, which really protects Sharon where ever she goes. All the alien race wants, who can easy make humans look primitive, with their much more advance technology, want the ancient artifact humans had for centuries. Aliens, who outnumber the ships crew, eventually steal an emulator of the real thing. This emulator is not as powerful as the real thing, but the ship relies on it. We automatically realize that human-kind is on the losing end of the battle.

Graphics

I love the graphics, but their not like Xbox graphics which are razor sharp. With a talented staff, which Namco has plenty of, they can do something high profile. This looks like a clean atmosphere and a huge laboratory. The creatures need a little work though. I'm going to take a couple points off because I like Grandia monsters better then this one. Final Fantasy X even had better monsters then this game. The game offers a high polygon count put suffers prepared to many graphically updated franchises like Soul Caliber 2, Jak and Dexter, and Metal Gear Solid 2.

Aren't Battle Systems odd?

I gotta tell you that this battle system is no easy one. For one it's harder then hell to upgrade your weapons and mech weapons. There are no escape options in the battle menu itself, instead you use a "Run-Away Spell" The game relies heavy on your Ether Points (essentially your mana), and use then for special attacks and spells like the Run-Away Spell. Guarding during battles will reduce damage to your character and it'll put ether points on your character. I feel that this game is a lot of one character healing another character a lot while the attacking character gets all the damage. It's a lot of damage on some occasions it's frightening to know that your mech, which only Shanon can summon early in the game, does not REGAIN health points during battle, after battle.

I don't get this EMAIL THING. It's suppose to help me upgrade my mechs, but it doesn't help at all. Where do I upgrade my mechs? I don't have the adequate parts to upgrade my weapons. This game reminds me of Metroid Prime because throughout the game, one of your objectives is to find missing machine gun, plasma gun parts so that your character can upgrade, and without any upgrade, ouch! You might as well start the game over. It Sucks, Luckily it's is only horrid when you really need the hit points.

Game's Strength

This game is already a cult classic because it's going to be the longest running franchise in videogames. A highly original franchise with true sequels unlike Final Fantasy. Okay I take that back, Resident Evil may have been the longest. Or could it be the Street Fighter franchise?

Xenosaga: The Interactive Movie

Namco made this game so that you'll be watching cut scenes more then you play the game. It seems like with Namco really going to make 5 more sequels of Xenosaga across three Playstations, than this is a long-ass movie!

Music? What Music?

I have to admit, music doesn't make a game rock like this one. This game made it on the "Top 100 Games of this Generation" by Game Informer Magazine (The November 2003 issue) Music isn't one the main attributes of Xenosaga Episode 1. But voice acting in this game really, really stands out since all the characters have multiple speech patterns.

Even the little guy has his/her place in this game performed by 100s of voice talents. And you thought that only sport franchises had 1000s of key fraises

Xenosaga Episode 1 Uncut

Namco is re-releasing Xenosaga when Xenosaga Episode 2 comes out in 2004. The new final build of the first game has English voiceovers and new costumes, as well as a couple mini-quest

Unlike Final Fantasy X International (which was only released in Europe) Xenosaga Episode 1 Uncut will come to North America.

Conclusions

This is not your Final Fantasy. It'll be a challenge from middle to finish. I like the game because I enjoy watching the cinematics. Not all people agree with me. The battle system is okay, somewhat playable, but confusing when your enemy is immune to some of your attacks and spells. Why does the enemy have an advantage over your party? Why do you get your ass kicked so easily? Why must I beat this game to see the ending ... or teaser for Part 2?

I love the mech and graphics of Xenosaga. I love the character design too.

There's a lot that I love about this game, and too many things that I hate about it. (posted on October 30, 2003 1:38 PM)

Castlevania - Lament of Innocence

B.) A lot of objectives.

C.) This game that makes you thumb happy all the time. Seriously I haven't seen a time when this game will ever let up.

D.) A lot of cutscenes.

Type : Action

I was looking at many games at GameStop today including Midnight Club 2, Clock Tower 3, Rayman 3, Jak 2 and then the latest Castlevania (© 2003) I liked the Symphony of the Night so I thought hmm, this looks good, I going to play it. Castlevania is probably the longest running franchise in the horror genre starting it's debut on the NES more then a decade ago. Most remember Castlevania for the Playstation. The 32-bit recreation of Symphony of the Night originally out for the Super Nintendo. All Castlevania besides the Playstation ports, of course, used orchestrated midi as the background music, and it wasn't bad a-tall. The 2D games always featured a vampire slayer, sometimes half vampire at birth. Komami's 1st 3D sequel of the Playstation port of Symphony of the Night (Konami © 1997) . The game, reviewed by many, was thought to be the best flavor of Castlevania. The original game created the first horror action game. I believe the idea was created after Ghosts and Goblins (© 1986 Capcom) for the NES was a must have. It had everything to make people scared, had simplified, but repeative gameplay. It was also hard when the hero wasn't well equipped or low on health. The game doesn't let up when your low on health. I read reviews on many Castlevania games, and none were forgiving. This game may be the most forgiving of any just how it was executed. I should know since I already own Sythomony of the Night. Some people may disagree with me, but I think it's great that Komani updated the franchise in full 3D in Dolby Digital Pro Logic II. Lament of Innocence is specular in 3D with solid controls following the design of Capcom's Devil May Cry also for PS2. The game isn't so much hard as it is executing the commands. Your constantly hacking away at demons including zombies, ghosts, ghost dogs and all kinds of undead. My hands were getting tired after an hour of this.

I really wonder if Crystal Dynamics, who develops & markets Legacy of Kain (Soul Reaver © 1996 – Present), copied Castlevania's gameplay.

The game focused on Leon Belmont, a knight who comes to save a princess stolen from her castle by a vampire. I know, one of those, but as princesses are concerned, you don't go on this epic journey holding her hand neither , like in the game ICO. Leon starts out walking in the forest and he walks in a paralleldimension

The graphics are beautiful despite the hardware limitations. Lament of Innocence is very clean, and looks the way a game should look on a 3 year old console. I think it's amongst the best looking PS2 games available. Once the Lol loads at the beginning, you'll never see another loading screen. The visuals are already above average on a aging platform such as Playstation 2. Best of all, Konami made it run at 30 frames per second all the time, no slow downs. Not that the PS2 can't handle 60 frames (the best you can get – silky smooth animation), just that any graphics acceleration doing 300 MHz is limited for anything better then 30. PS2 is less powerful, when comparing to Xbox clocking at 733 Mhz, doing 60 fps easily, 95 % of the time. Lament has a lot of gothic detail, but it's also very lunar game. You'll play in a well designed castle dating back in the 11th century. The game was developed by Komani like the other Castlevanias so I really wished they used the Metal Gear Solid 2 engine. Maybe they did, I dunno, but MGS2 seemed to out class anything before it simply because no game can visually come that close. Gamecube and Xbox may have better looking games, but this game is exclusive to that of Sony. The game had it's two year developing cycle which should be enough time for any developer to make a decent game. Playstation 2 is known for it's games and in-game cutscenes. Leon stars in a lot of cutscenes which add flavor and a solid storyline to the game. This game is a pussy cat compared to Resident Evil and Silent Hill, you'll see much less gore, just blood mostly. A lot of blood. This is the age of videogames where every game, to be ahead, needs decent voice acting with well done cinematics.

Lament of Innocence does this, and is fairly good at it. The voice acting follows the footsteps of Final Fantasy X. Cutscenes with voice overs are abundant. Komani already makes cutting edge CGI video seen in Metal Gear Solid 2.

In my opinion, gameplay is solid. Komani knows how to execute gameplay, and they (the designers, coders, debuggers, and musicians) knew what is important in the game – the balance between the strength of good and evil. The result is second to none. I mean what is the main focus. Is it to do a lot of exploring? Is Leon going to be this guy who guards or will he put up a fight all the time? Will he be weak or strong in the gameplay? Some games like Metal Gear Solid will allow you to be stealthy, very difficult at times. This is why I think this game closely resembles a platform game. Leon performs a lot of moves including special attacks which he learns. When the time comes to execute one, they will be notice that makes a statement in the middle of the game. It also will feather advance in the game. I like this setup. I makes this game much less complicated in learning curve so I can focus killing demons. If I had a favorite action game, this game would be a difficult one to place amongst my favorites. It has many exploring options, also in platform games, and your constantly picking a fight. Blood is cool. Unfortunately for my hands, action can not, and will not ever slow down. I stop because I get dizzy after 1.5 hours of going all out all the time. This is what the game is about, you'll be on the edge of your seat all the time.

The background music is repetitive , but it's worth listening too. Especially when it's music is enhanced with Dolby Digital Pro Logic II. This is a slight, but noticeable difference between Stereo, and DDPLII Stereo Surround. I know for a fact that one guitar solo in Castlevania 3 (© 1992 Sega Genesis) called "The Devil's Lullaby " was one of the best game music ever. Evidence of the original tune is present in Lament. It has the right amount of movie quality dark orchestrated music. The game doesn't have one kind of soundtrack, which is good, and I think that most reviewers over look this. A game like this is a good example of how variety in the game's music makes a difference! Every boss in this game has their own theme, which is awesome! The music doesn't disappoint.

Conclusion is this game is mainly a serious hack and slash title. If you are a big fan of Diablo, you might prefer this game over others. The music is great. There are a lot of cutscenes. The graphics are above average for PS2 and you'll get plenty to do. I can't really tell you how long it is. It's truly modeled after Legacy of Kain (Soul Reaver.)

[Prelude]

I went out the other day thinking that I would buy Virua Fighter 4 - Evolution for PS2. I changed my mind and got this game instead. I was fortunate to buy this game on PS2. I didn't know whether I should buy the PS2 version or Xbox version. The Xbox version has Spawn guess star I read on the Internet how this game kicks ass. It's practically in every message board on the Internet. Since all the 32 bit fighters were re-born on the PSone, the PS2 is no different, correct? Things have not changed since 1995 in terms of the controller you use. The GameCube and Xbox controllers are not so good with fighting games. The PS2 controller is much smaller and can better support fast paced action. In case you weren't familiar with Soul Caliber, it was originally a damn cool arcade coin-op game. I've played it a couple times. I don't see why I don't see more of it. I mainly played the Soul Caliber for Sega Dreamcast. It is suppose to be the best fighting game for Dreamcast until its demesne. The coin-op machine is 7 years old by now. But the joystick hasn't changed. This game would be stellar on a 2 player joystick pad.

Soul Caliber 2 was in development for 2 ½ years and Namco already had a basic idea of what it should be about. All of the same characters are playable on it. It's not quite like the awesome graphics of Dead or Alive 3 for Xbox. All they had to do is make pretty graphics, high polygonal characters, and new arenas to play in. I picked the Soul Caliber 2 PlayStation 2 version because I knew that the controller would be better. Both GCN and Xbox have better graphics, but many people say, the PS2 duel shock is the best controller for 3D weapon driven fighting games. In Japan uses A, B G, and K while in the States, we use circle, triangle, square and ex. B = Y, G = B, K = X, Most of the time you can fight a few battles using only single style fights like blocking with X then hitting triangle to jab.

You can do this with moving the right joystick or dpad. I grew up with using a joystick in 2D and 3D fighting games. So I never use the D-pad ever anymore.

Hmm, I may not be far on my review. Many would say that this game is a pretty fighter with a tenacity to button mash through all the fighting arenas. But most of the time you don't get away with it. But the previous game was a game of chance. he music is wow! There isn't any difference between the Dreamcast and the PS2 in turns of sound. The game already sounds mega great. It sounds like the epic sequences in Lord of the Rings. Once I get Virua Fighter 4 Evolution, I will compare the two for all my friends.

[A little about the Dreamcast game]

The original was the first fighting game to go 128 bit. When the PS2 came out in August 2000, Soul Caliber vs. Tekken Tag Tournament was basically to measure the power of the Dreamcast against PS2. Some argue that the argument was unfair. Soul Caliber was on the top 50 games of all time posed by both IGN.com, Gamespot and Videogames.com. So naturally, the sequel should follow in th foot steps of the first. But everyone knew that Soul Caliber had more potential then Tekken Tag.

Not just it's graphics, it looked a generation a head of any Dreamcast game at the 9/09/99 launch. The game had a lot of stuff to do. Survival was where you fight against characters until you get defeated. Time attack was where you had so much time to complete a round before you Knock Out (K.O.) the opponent, or likewise he/she K.O. you. The Dreamcast game was a bit easier then the sequel, not much. Maybe in this game you can survive a extra round when you play Arcade. The coin op machine was based on score. The faster and extra attacks you've done you get a better score. I find one fault in this game that is pretty cool. You play Stephia (her character is the hot blond in the game) and you hit the Y button on the Dreamcast several times, and the opponent is defenseless most of the time. Jab. Jab. Jab. Until you feel that you jabbed your self to victory.

The game had epic music during the game, in my opinion, even more so then Soul Caliber II. (posted August 31, 2003 rev 1.0)

PS2 - Final Fantasy X review (2003-04-19 11:27)

C.) A very convensing story

D.) It's really over rated. People say the game is perfect. The game is awesome, but it's not perfect.

Type : Character Turned Based Role Playing Game

Prelude]

Final Fantasy X (FFX) is getting old, although it still has a repudiation of being good. Final Fantasy is the first game on the PS2 to be recognized as the best RPGs of all time. This, of course, DOES NOT mean it's will be the greatest, it only means in someone's opinion it is.

You can, however, argue FFX is the best Final Fantasy game ever. I went to Gamefaqs.com to get my game faq so that I can play this game without hesitation. I see Final Fantasy 10 at the top of the charts for the most popular faqs. Well I'm not alone because there's about 4 million other people who are playing this game. Squaresoft was known on the NES for making a great game, a game called Final Fantasy. It was the first RPG in America in 1987, and it sold like a new car. All Final Fantasy games had a good plot surrounding a black mage, white mage, melee fighter type of character that goes on a journey to save the world. All Final Fantasy games followed the same formula except for FF10.

Aside the fact that Final Fantasy 10 is 21st century; it does have a more technical achievement to it then any other PlayStation 2 RPG before it. If you haven't seen the PlayStation 2's enormous library of games, then you have seen a lot of RPGs that came after Final Fantasy X.

What is quite interesting is earlier in the timeline; the Espers were the only species whom could learn magic. Humans could only borrow the magic in form of eggs. These Mana Eggs could then be leveled up so that the mage could do a spell. A more powerful egg could do more damage with a leveled up egg then it would with a stronger skill at it's first level. Now games abandoned the idea of the mana egg, and now replaced it with real time leveling up which appears after the battle sequence. I guess it was a bad idea to carry magic spells with you, much like you carry spell scrolls in PC games. The first game and it's chapters had random battles and most of the time you have to save the earth from a dangerous object that will conquer kingdoms. Up until Final Fantasy VI, Final Fantasy all had a live action, time battle system. Nearly 14 years after Final Fantasy. Final Fantasy VII had a unique battle system where you slash enemies in real time, but you can not defend the normal way. Legend of Dragoon is much like Final Fantasy VII because you there is no option for multiple attacks, you have to time yourself and defeat the enemy in that way. Square changed Final Fantasy VIII again, having it mostly traditional, meaning it was a turned based system with random battles. And a new card game that has been in Final Fantasy games since then. It really doesn't have a name but it's kind of like Dungeons and Dragons. Final Fantasy IX was another Final Fantasy game that came around in 2000. Originally Final Fantasy IX was going to feature the same battle system that Final Fantasy XIII had (a turned based battle system used in most console RPGs like Breath of Fire series and Grandia), but it was going to be for the PS2. Well the game was already in development for being a PSone game with low resolution graphics so it was never upgraded. All effort was going towards the online RPG, Final Fantasy X. At first the online system did not work at all, so the online part of Final Fantasy X was dropped due to server issues and development time. Final Fantasy X was really overrated when it came out because it was suppose to have better graphics then it really did, I mean ground braking graphics for the PS2. But that did in no way say that it wasn't ground braking else where. By this time Squaresoft fans expected to have a 40 – 50 hour gameplay wise RPG every year to two years.

[More of the story]

Your main character is Tidus, a person who lived in a world with an extremely high-tech civilization, and then, he wakes up in a somewhat high-tech civilization 1000 years later except his city, Zanarkand, is beneath Although he's 18, Tidus must be 1018 years now. Maybe he's older or younger. However mankind has reached the stars by this time, 1000 years earlier. But Sin destroyed it. Sin is the Final Boss in this game. He happens to been who destroyed the old high tech world 1000 years earlier. Stone age compared to what man achieved 1000 years before. You're talking about when the Flintstones meet the Jetsons in this game!

I read a head and found out that Final Fantasy X has a sad story, see Tidus dies in the final moments of the game. I'm only a couple hours in the game. This game is sort of a story of choice, if you know what I mean? See this game is like Legend of Dragoon, the last RPG I got into. You talk to people and they give you choices which may or may not change the story. Either of the main characters, whether it is Dart or Tidus really love the hottest character in the game. In this game it's Yuna, a super hot girl.

But Tidus may love someone else if you don't watch your words.

The last Final Fantasy game I've tried was Final Fantasy 8. Final Fantasy 10 stays close to Final Fantasy 8 except it doesn't have anyone from a high tech civilization. Why, because it looks great, except in the PSone, all the backgrounds were pre-rendered.

I thought this game was great so far

The story line is a little unclear in the beginning. Everyone talks fine, but at first we only knew that the Final Boss would be Sin. But as things clear up, I realize how much effort really went into the voice acting. Not uncommon with many games of next generation consoles. This was a new feature in the long history of Final Fantasy, which goes back a long time.

As the story goes, your boy hero, Tidus, is going to this huge Blitzball tournament. He scores a few scores in the super high tech city of Zanderland. I wouldn't know if this place is in fact apart of Sparta back then, or was just a new name for the country that exist 1000 years after the destruction. You have very short time in the pass in this game. Sin appears out of now where in the globe and levels Zanderland. When suddenly a time warp portal appears out of know were taking both heroes, Audron and Tidus forward in time. For a sort time Tidus is alone in Spara in the same city in Zanderland. The city is a ruin. Tidus soon finds Rikku and Al Bhed who rescue Tidus from death when he floats in the sea. The Al Bhed are bounty hunters in Sparta. They do service for someone. That's when Sin again attacks the Al Bhed ship and after they temporally defeat Sin, Tidus is thrown over-board. He finds himself helped by Wakka, a tribe member who loves the game, Blizball. Wakka and Tidus go together to Wakka's hometown where the both meet Yura, a recent summoner. A summoner is one who uses magic. Anyhow all three know each other and they go on a journey to defeat Sin once and for all.

Tidus, I think falls in love with the summoner, Yuna earlier in the game. Common with RPGs of this time. But about 11 hours in the game she kills the one that's she's suppose to marry. Which, changes part of the character's direction entirely. To Mastur Seymour, who is evil. I knew he was evil because he had a crazy look on his face. Except he wasn't crazy, he was just evil. Tidus figures out that he isn't suppose to like Yuna. What happens then? It least I know that Tidus somehow disappears because in Final Fantasy X-2, Yuna tries to find Tidus. So we already know that Yuna is going to use magic to get rid of Sin. I know nothing about the upcoming Final Fantasy XII, but I wonder if there is going to be a third episode of Final Fantasy X. Then Final Fantasy X can already be a saga. Although there have been 10 chapters of Final Fantasy, all 8 of the ten are 10 completely different games. Two games in the series, Final Fantasy III and Final Fantasy IV are remakes of Final Fantasy VI and Final Fantasy II.

[Graphics]

The graphics engine in Final fantasy X is mapped after the emotion engine , an engine that Sony created to show off speculations of its PS2 demos in 1999. Actually its graphics score in the top 85 % of all PS2 games in August 2003. This game was a head in graphics area because Square already had PS2 figured out. In earlier times, developers had a hard time with anti-analyzing, which is what made PS2 graphics as smooth as silk in Grand Thief Auto 3, Metal Gear Solid 2 – Sons of Liberty and Summoner 2. FFX doesn't have as much bump mapping as I would like. This game was developed for PS2 prior to 2001 to sometimes look as edgy as any Dreamcast game. Dreamcast ran slower then the PlayStation 2, but the graphics were at 640 by 480 resolution, so the Dreamcast could trick you in sometimes thinking it looked better then the PS2.

This was before Sega turned 3rd party, supporting all consoles. FFX may have had it's hay day a year ago, but it's still is popular for one way only. The gameplay still rocks in this game. The PlayStation 2 has improved; anti-analyzing surpassed graphics of Final Fantasy X and Summoner 2 very quickly after those games were released. But I remember, and this is also why I planned to spend 200 dollars on a PlayStation 2, was because the games were already out including the already strong selling Final Fantasy X. I looked at the local Wal-Mart and it is always out of stock. I found it at the nearest Game Stop though and boy was I lucky. Again this game needs no introduction. I believe that most PS2 owners already have this game stored on shelves and they said it was from good to extremely good when they played it for the first time. The game play improved over Final Fantasy VIII and IX. This game is more detailed than a lot of games today and there are a lot of PS2 games out in 2003.

In the last paragraph I spoke how the gameplay rocks. Well I was into this game in 2001 when it came out. It reminds me about how at first I didn't like Legend of Zelda Ocarina of Time. But then once I bought it sometime in 2000, I realized how it was superior to all the N64 games of the time. Link with his sword and shield is just plain cool. I may of grown old, but I didn't stop realizing that the best game for the console was Zelda 64. Now that I'm entirely off the subject, I like to say that I liked Wind Waker too. Nintendo did everything right when they created it. I have felt the same with Legend of Zelda as I did with this game.

[Changes in Final Fantasy X]

Many would call Final Fantasy, flawless. Everything has been upgraded. This game doesn't drive itself on 10 year old concepts that could only been done 10 years ago. There are a lot of changes to Final Fantasy X, they improved the battle system and made it faster, almost spontaneous the moment you hit the X button on the duel shock controller. Then the other member attacks. The average battle sequence takes around 15 to 25 seconds. It's closer to many PC RPGs with no battle sequence than it has in common with its own franchise. They also changed the level up ratings your characters have, since you're in control. The massive chart is known as the Sphere Grid, never used in any RPG before. It basically looks like a star chart. Your character has a system where he/her has to level up some skills to get the skill you're looking for. Usually what I look for is vitality, but it is a little out of my reach from my current low level stats. Not uncommon to this franchise is the mana for special attacks. Mana is essential to leveling up any character. You do use magic in your game don't you? I mean if I am talking to someone familiar with Final Fantasy 8. Assuming you have played that game, then you will already know what summoners do. I guess I'll be talking about the original NES Final Fantasy. You see White and Black mages in this game like you did sometime 3000 years before. I'm guessing Final Fantasy came 3000 years before Final Fantasy 10 did. I wanna know how far down the timeline is between the games Final Fantasy 8 and Final Fantasy 10? Both games are hard to determine because both Squall and Tidus live in high technical civilizations. In real life we may be able to comprehend what 20 years down the road will bring us in graphics. But we may not have the slightest idea what's in store for us in 60 years. This game gives us another vision of a high technical civilization. It's like Final Fantasy - The Spirits Within. I think the high tech civilization in this game is believable because Squaresoft added a lot of technical art to make it so. I can't decide whether or not Xenosaga Episode I is more believable than Final Fantasy X. I have yet to play that game to see for myself. You're talking about a lot of power people had in the "old civilization."

.Final Fantasy X hasn't changed that much from the past on Playstation. The camera angles are still on track. The later Final Fantasy games are similar to Resident Evil. Resident Evil had all the angles that made it very long and very graphically well done all around. Although in Final Fantasy X, all the graphics are done not prerendered. The game runs at around 30 frames per second.

[Gameplay Department]

Gameplay in this game is faster than the previous episodes in Final Fantasy. If you like to hack the enemies to death all the time, then Squaresoft/Enix made it easy for you to do that. The first option, attacking, is always highlighted. And it takes 2 seconds for each turn to begin and end. Unlike Final Fantasy Crystal Chronicles, Final Fantasy X doesn't really display the hit points or even mana points of each character. It's not bad, it's just different.

Summoners in this game can summon a creature to do more damage to the enemy. You can gain new "Aeons" by completing mazes in temples. Mazes aren't too terribly difficult. Of course, I'm not maze genius either. It sometimes takes me 10 tries to get it right. When you want to do mazes you move pentacles and gems around in the temple to unlock or remove doors, obstacles that are in your way, fire, ice, elevators, stuff like that.

Since the Gameplay isn't just the controlling the main character in the game, I will go over other key features. In towns you are safe most of the time. That is unless sometime attacks the town. So the town isn't safe – no – there are no random battles in towns. In towns you don't have just one merchant, but several to choose from. The price varies, so sometimes you get ripped off, sometimes you get a really good deal, but if you need the potions, I would buy any way. I need these on my journey. In the game you use a lot of potions. The key is trying to be immune and have a high hit point rating all through the game. If you don't, it just makes the game harder. But if you keep your hp high, you'll pass 90 % of the time. It is usually recommended to keep several weapons at your disposable, but with water, lighting, fire and tornado attacks. Not all weapons are customizable in FFX. Most of the time, magic spells do damage. In the beginning your character has more damage, not in the spells, but in the straight attack. Unless you have overdrive. Overdrive is a command that can instantly wipe out a enemy, but can only be used for total 300 seconds thought out the whole game. All playable characters have overdrive.

[Sound Department]

The sound department is good too, something you except from a multimillion dollar project AKA the "Final Fantasy X project (1999 – 2002)" I heard that the music guys at Square hired the musicians that made music for Final Fantasy 8, made some tunes in this game. One familiar tune from Final Fantasy 8 turns up after the battle sequence in Final Fantasy X. Everything in the intro had heavy rock in it. But the real Final Fantasy game has the tradition Final Fantasy melody we known for years. The medially from Final Fantasy IX is in this game also. I have to comment that the PS2 sound chip is softer then the PSone since I have to turn the volume up to hear anything.

Well this is the first game that characters acted in the whole title. I've seen cut-scenes which characters fully voiced their opinions in Grand Thief Auto Vice City. But this game seems a little more down to earth. The voice acting is not annoying; sometimes I find that the main characters comments make him kind of GIMP.

[Characters in the game]

- Tidus - the main character from the pass. He's in the games focus all the time. His voice acting is a little strange because when he gets excited about something, his voice level goes up, and it is just a little odd for someone to talk his age. I find it amusing though that Squaresoft would have someone act the way he does.
- Yuna - a really down-to-earth girl. She has a soft voice. Her character rocks and looks very sexy. I had her wallpaper on my computer for 5 months now. She is a summoner, which means she can do magic.
- Rikku - I met her in the beginning of the game. She is the only one of the pirates that can speak English. She's at times more comical with her voice then Tidus. She hasn't shown up yet except in the beginning.
- Auron - The guy who teams up with Tidus 1000 years earlier in Zanderland. He is kind of a even speaking fellow. He's very wise and a lot of hands on experience with things. He seems to know when things are about to happen and knows what to do when this do start heating up. A good example of this would be in the first minutes of the game when Zanderland is destroyed by SIN.
- Wakka - loves blitzball, but hates macha (machines) He thinks the machines are what brought Sin to the world; it is Spira's punishment for advancing so much.

My favorite character in Final Fantasy X is Sir Auron, the guy with shades and a trench coat. Auron has a faster attack then the other Final Fantasy characters. He also has a long sword like Tidus (shown on the USA cover) that does the most damage on average. Although I still liked Tidus's attacks. I had him in all my battles since he rejoined the party. His overdrive attack is really cool. I tried to reserve enough for the final hit on Sin at the end of the game. Yeven wasn't really hard because he only had like 60 HP. I had Tidus finish him though. I felt kind of bad that he is a ghost (in the end all of us found out he was the walking dead) So he more then likely won't be back in the sequel set to release in 2004. I felt bad about that. Then I looked on a Final Fantasy site, and found out that he was the most liked character in the whole game. For some reason when Auron swings his samuri sword, he does it kind of like Samuri Jack, the cartoon character.

[So what about Blizball ?]

Blizball is soccer underwater. Because there is little gravity in Blizball, characters can do certain moves that allow them to define gravity. This is the first Final Fantasy game to have a minigame sports game. When you win the first game against the ___, well I forget what the teams called, but you can save your game and play Blitzball tournaments for the gold cup. You add your player talents in the game. If you were me, who barely knows Blitzball, will try to level up all the characters in order.

Tidus is our main character in the game and a pretty good Blitz ball player. He does his secret move, the spiral move, and that is the most powerful move in the game.

In Final Fantasy X there is only one stadium to play in, with 8 teams to play against. The rules are simple. Try to pass the blitzball to your team mates to score without it over taken. The goalie usually catches the ball. In the beginning your team is severely under talented. But that doesn't mean the goalie can't catch the ball. He can and he does it well. I find the best odds with me passing the ball to Tidus. I know, I have to pass the ball to other players too, because the HP is being used up when the guy with the blitzball is moving. Most of the time if you select to pass the blitzball to your teammates, you have a better chance of a teammate catching the ball. The most confusing aspect of this game is you don't know which way you're going. There is an arrow with two Goalie nets on opposite ends, but your character can turn the opposite direction in an instant, and that part confuses me. I can't tell which way to go sometimes. This mini game needs work. It would be better if the camera wasn't so close to the characters. Otherwise this game is awesome to play. I have an idea, we already know Square and Electronic Arts are merged, EA Sports should make a custom Blitzball game in Final Fantasy X-2. The chances of this happening are very slim. FIFA 2002 wasn't so bad. Maybe this Blizball game will be in Final Fantasy Crystal Chronicles. So I wish this Blizball will improve beyond what it is now. Although the concept is great, just needs a-bit touch-up. In the end I think this is a great game to play. It's not as difficult as Breath of Fire V: Dragon Quarter or Grandia Xtreme.

Final Fantasy X's ending wasn't that great. In my opinion, FFX glorious ending wasn't long enough. It's not the greatest FMV in the game. It sucks really. I was expecting more of a ending. Yuna praises the land as it enters Eternal Calm. The ending was great looking in Full Motion Video form. What can I say about it – Squaresoft, being an experience movie making company (After the computer generated characters in Squaresoft's first movie, Final Fantasy: The Spirits Within . After the gamer watches the credits (which didn't bother me, FFX has this love song playing at the end) Tidus swims up to the screen and then you have the closing screen. It was just a 10 second video after the credits. The game should have had more FMV on Tidus. Sure there was some FMV on his father through out the game, but not every FMV was on him. It will be interesting if the next RPG I plan to play, Xenosaga Episode 1 will exceed the FMV of Squaresofts FFX. The "Xenogears" franchise was originally from Squaresoft before Namco bought the franchise.

Xenogears is another game that I own, but haven't played yet.

My favorite FMV in the whole game is the wedding FMV. Of course, the most popular cut scene was the opening fmv in the beginning showing Tidus with the Blizball team scoring goals just before Sin attacks the city. The special effects were spectacular. I could almost feel the rumble of the crowd. The laser light show was also amazing.

The city depth was very vast. I see why every one likes it.

Summing up Final Fantasy X

Graphics

9.0

I like the graphics. Yura is a hotty. I like her. Yet all the characters are well shaded. You can see the muscle in all characters legs in the game. A concept unheard of in Playstation games. The background is pretty.

Control

9.3

The Sphere Grid is a good way of leveling up your character because it does use a like star system, like what astrology uses to map things in space. Your cursor can move locations when you lose points when you move, you gain them through out the game gaining experience. Since Final Fantasy changed from ATB (Active Time Battle Role Playing Game) to a Character Turned Based Role playing game and Square made it faster. The long battles of the past only appear in major boss fights. The menu system is upgraded to not just a plain feel anymore, it's really colorful, but at same time very clean. The character option menu uses many solid colors. It does what you expect from any RPG. The ability to change your weapons and armor. It allows you to keep up on all the key items you collected.

Originalism

This game is probably the best and most realistic role playing game I've played for Playstation or Playstation 2. It though doesn't seem as long as Final Fantasy VIII or IX for the PSone. Maybe that's because the RPG was filled with full motion video. I dunno.

PS2 - Grand Theft Auto Vice City Review (2003-04-20 11:29)| GAME FEATURES |

Developer : Rockstar Games

A.) 10 maps which are huge to drive in.

Publisher :Rockstar Games

B.) Everything that makes GTA popular (guns, cars, motorcycles, and blowing up things) What ever you can ride, you can steal and destroy. And this is the fun part.

Released sometime in 2002

C.) A very long list of cheats

D.) The comments that people make on the street and various radio stations are hilarious! This game is full of mature jokes and crack downs from the main character

Type : Action

I want to say this game rocks! Well I was either getting Grand Thief Auto 3 or Vice City. RockStar did a fabulous job on this game. Vice City is not Grand Thief Auto 4. I read on CNN.com that GTA Vice City was a big improvement over GTA 3. I got it because a guy at GameStop told me that he'd recommend this game to any PS2 first time owner. Some games just have too much to do. The Playstation 2 in the past had a problem with anti-glare and jaggedness in it's game like early in the systems life. Since I got a Playstation 2 yesterday, I haven't had much time to see why it's the best. The PS2 controller has the best feel of any controller I've experience. (although I found out that the duel shock for the PSone works with this game as well) One reason this game is the best is somehow Rockstar Games managed to put 10 tracks for over 15 radio stations. This game dates back in 1986 in Vice City (a crime infested Miami.) So you get everything from gang warfare to grand thief auto. In fact my favorite part of this game is using a golf club to whack certain people out or just kill them. Just don't knock their head off, it's nasty! Kidding you can do what ever you want. Have fun, it's a fun game and you should you things like that, just not in real life.

Crazy cab drivers I tell you. They run over pedestrians for no reason. Cab drivers just pull in front of you like you weren't there. Did I mention that stealing a police car is fun, but you get arrested if attempt to steal it with a copper inside it. I just had to try even though it was dumb thing to do. The best way to pull this off is to open the passenger-side door and come in on the opposite side so if you lucky, the copper can't open neither door and you make a clean get-a-way. The police still know it's up inside the police car. But you can say that you've done it.

Now how about those high speed chases on the street? Everything is easy until the police send in S.W.A.T. then you better have a machine gun / shotgun or your good as dead. That's what Grand Thief Auto Vice City is all about, stealing the right gun to do the right job (without cheating) OK so R2 + L2 on the duel shock isn't cheating (quick reload) The hardest thing to do in this game is to steal a tank (your invisible as long as you are moving)

All your fast cars in GTA auto like the rare supped up bangie in GTA3 is in this game, but here it's common. Most of the time you can find it has night. One thing that is an awesome ideal vehicle in high speed chases to seek out in the game is the bangie (a supped up all terrian vechile rarely seen in the last game) that they are stable and you can drive moderately fast with it. If you want to go really fast get a Cheechta, because they are ;)

I'm not a good driver sometimes, and I do run over people. Of course it's going to be a hit and run from my point of view. When this happens your police record gets high and you have to get into another car without getting caught. Duh! Right? This part is fairly easy. But I have a problem of being reckless on the road when I park.

When you drive, there isn't any gradual acceleration, so you have to push the X button on the PS2 controller many times to go speed limit. The game has tons of street lights. One thing, that often makes the game violent is that you can crash into other cars, have junk car rallies in parking lots, pick up a gun and shoot.

[What did my friends think of this Game]

I brought my PS2 over to a friends house, and we had a blast. I wasn't to great at stealing cars. The point of the game is to steal a car and shoot cops. Now that Justice mentions it, there are a lot of pimps in the game. Walking around with speedos and their fat. This game is based on real gang life in the 1980s. Some places the gangs have no weapons and are wimps, while others have guns. Most of the time, you have a fist fight to the death. Now that was funny scene! This game is great.

Summing up Grand Thief Auto : Vice City.

Graphics

9.0

Grand Thief Auto Vice City looks very good. There is a blur that I'm not use too. It doesn't matter. All the cars are photo realistic although it GTA may not be the prettiest game on PS2. CNN calls it "live in the fast lane" I call it "Drive fast, don't get caught" The game was also made for the PC, but that takes a lot of power just to run the stupid game. A Pentium III 1.1 GHz with a 64 MB videocard to even play it decently. At night you get all the nights of Miami compete with neon lights, traffic lights, city lights, and the dreaded police cars. Not as frame rate and as high resolution as Gamecube or Xbox, but we have a 3 year old console running this game. To simply put, this game is smoothed out and has a terrible frame rate. It's good that everything else makes up for the games only flaw.

Control

9.9

The control is very smooth. Even if the PS2 controller is loose. A a lot of times you find your self getting away from the police fairly easily with the exception of getting chased with the helicopter. If you have a helicopter chasing you, there is no escape. But then you can start on foot and shoot everything in site. The control is very good. Plus Rockstar added scopes and fire cross to all the weapons so you know exactly who your shooting at. Everything adds up. If you hear from people that this game is one of the best available, the control is better then many games could hope to be. I would like to speak out this one last comment, "The control rocks!!!"

Orginalism

8.5

GTA created the cop car against gangster car game. GTA 3 took a gigantic leap in the franchise, and Vice City is the latest and greatest. I can't begin to tell you that the game is successful in places where other games are not.

Sound Effects

10.0

The radio stations are awesome!

Replayibly

9.5

A lot of replays. I highly recommend you go out and get this game.

PS2 - Winning Eleven Soccer 7 International review (2003-04-27 11:41)

You're probably wondering why I didn't review these games separately? My answer to you're question is there hasn't been much anything that changed from WE6 to WE7 besides some minor graphical improvements. Let me explain my reason.

From a popularity stand point Winning Eleven 6 was the most popular soccer simulation in Europe and Japan and Australia. While it may of not looked state-of-the-art and let me explain what that means in my view. If you take sport games, you may realize that EA Sports has made graphics improvements in Madden 2004. Madden 2004 is the prettiest game on Playstation. It has the most polygons in any sports game. The game used Renderware, which is middle ware for game developers, and worked with Komani's two Winning Eleven Soccer International soccer games prior to W11S7. Okay to keep this short the crowds look really good. You can tell apart their faces (they aren't blobs like in early PS2 sport games) The frame-rate is smooth. The announcers are nice editions, they have athenaeum in their voices. Love the athenaeum! In my opinion they sound better because they don't repeat 2 phrases for each action like in EA Sports FIFA 2002. It is understandable that no sports games have commentary guest speakers and if they did, they would have one paragraph of something about the team that repeats itself over and over at the beginning of each game. We have DVDs now. I don't understand why Konami couldn't have real videos of the previous season. Yet that is understandable because in exchange you have a 99 % accurate roister to play by. Unlike Madden Football 2002, Winning Eleven Soccer 6 and 7 have the ability to instantly change your player's stats. Such as if you want you're whole team to have 99 % balance, or 99 % style points. Your pick. I like it. You have a choice, either up your team stats or lower the difficulty.

The Difficulty

The difficulty in Winning Eleven 7 is very similar to Winning Eleven 6. So much so that you can just pick up and play with no new learning curve! This is a good thing. One problem I found (this could just be because 7 is harder than 6) is when I want to score a goal and press Y on the duel shock 2 controller, sometimes the game will pass to the closest teammate instead of scoring the GOAL! Now I got really pissed off on that. I learned that the easiest way to score a goal is by pressing down on the right joystick. I don't know. You have to be really close to the goal to use Y button. And with 11 guys around you, it's not likely to get in. But let's look at the game of soccer...if a team is lucky, they will score 3 goals in a whole game. So naturally if you score 5 or more goals in a game, I think your difficulty isn't high enough. Okay, lets set the difficulty to maxium setting. What you get? A lot of red cards. (if you don't know soccer to well, that means your player is out of the game) A lot of interceptions, a lot of injuries, a lot intense action. Okay something is wrong hear. Computer's aren't suppose to think for themselves, but this game is kicking the crap out of my guys. Okay there is 11 guys on each team in the game of soccer. 21 of them are computer controlled. You control one of them. The game switches teammates by the use of the L2 and R2 buttons.

If you even had a chance to play Winning Eleven Soccer 6 than you'll realize that in 7 players make a lot of mistakes. This isn't the games fault, this was done intestinally to give the game a more realistic feel. Minor details such as when the other team steals the ball from you, your player tries to catch himself. Real life soccer players do some real mistakes in a room and they're hitched up with computer equipment so their actions become the same reactions in the game. Game's got it down pretty good. More noticeably in Winning Eleven 7 than as Winning Eleven 6 do players look very life like (I'm talking about moving).

If you are having difficulty, both games are good at giving a precise tutorial complete with sample movies and a narrator to talk it over with you as you play. The tutorial couldn't possibly get any better in 6 because it was already top notch. The tutorial also will teach you the rules of soccer, not just how to control your character. Every soccer game does that now-a-days.

Controls:

The controls in Winning Eleven Soccer 7 are exactly the same as they were in 6. What changed are a few enhancements in the character's movements. The game is quite smoothly, though it seems that game is too fast for your reflexes. I could just be me though because when I first play a game I usually suck at it until a few playing sessions.

Learning curve is about 30 to 60 minutes. Faster if you upgraded from Winning Eleven 6. They feel about the same.

Navagational System:

Good news. I find that Konami kept the same console style menu they used in Winning Eleven 6. No complaints here! When you start the game with no modifications, you can just wiz past 3 menus to the loading screen. After the loading screen you get the tiny intro of the opening game and a television type HUD. When the game starts, you get a score board in the top left corner. Some circles that represent the character you control and that radar system that shows all the players on the field and their locations. Your team is the blue dots, the other team is the red dots. I don't use the radar at all so I just turn it off in game options.

On feature I like about Winning Eleven 6 and 7 is the camera angle use in replays. It's gotten very professional like. The game doesn't stop there either because you can control how the camera moves in replay mode. A feature not in EA Sport's FIFA 2002 which I am very disappointed in. Until I owned Winning Eleven 6, relatively short time ago, I skipped the replays. They didn't excite me much. Sometimes I like replays because when I compete against Bob or Randy, it shows how stupid the AI was, and that the ball somehow got in the net. Most of my goals are from accident. They are normally caused by the other person cut off guard or day dreaming until one of us just so happens to score. Of course, I am a casual gamer, and my friends who don't play the game at all, usually beat me because I've only played the game for a total of 8 hours.

Sound:

The sound is very European like. Some mellow trance tracks in the game. Though it sounds cool. Unlike EA Sport's version of Soccer, you don't get vocal music. But the intro was very cool. The intro's in very cool. Remember Final Fantasy, The Spirit's Within. I swear, there hasn't been any different between the Opening FMV and that. Both Winning Eleven 6 and 7 use the same style cell-shaded FMV as the intro.

Drum role please.....my conclusion

Winning Eleven Soccer is very rewarding. When my friends and I get sick of Winning Eleven 6, we will switch to FIFA 2002 or Winning Eleven 7. I have to say FIFA 2002 is much less demanding than Winning Eleven 6 or 7. I'll repeat, if you want a less of a challenge go with EA Sports brand, if you want more challenge, go with Winning Eleven Soccer. I don't even touch 989 Sport's soccer game, or Sega Sport's soccer game, I know SEGA make one heck of a NFL videogame. Sega now is using ESPN's logo and announcers. If I had a pick of favorite soccer game, I'd go with the latest Winning Eleven Soccer videogame from Konami. There you got it. No wonder it is topping everyone's list this summer as a must have PS2 game. Take your pick, both are excellent games. Winning Eleven 7 is only 40 dollars at Target, get it while the game is hot! Winning Eleven 6 is only 20 bucks.

Good luck on your decision!

Xbox - Tony Hawk 3 review (2003-05-01 11:30)

| GAME FEATURES |

Developer : Neversoft

A.) The best Skate boarding game out there. And it's not just skating. It has a lot of competition that friends can play against

Publisher :Activision

B.) Play as all the "Pro Skaters"

Released sometime in 2002

C.) Better then Tony Hawk Pro Skater 3

D.) There are over 100 mini games to play in this game. Some easy, some hard.

Type : Extreme Sports / X-Games on the Street

This game is the first time I tried a Tony Hawk game since Neversoft put the legendary Tony Hawk Pro Skater on the Sega Dreamcast. I would like to say that Tony Hawk Pro Skater for the Dreamcast was a decent port, but I can't say that now because so much people on the Internet say that they hate the Dreamcast (never would own one even if it was dirt cheap like it is now) Does the new one rock? So far yes in a strange kind of extreme way. I'm not an extreme person. But I know of not so extreme people who played Tony Hawk who liked it. Why else would it be the standard in extreme sports of this generation. Everyone with a half a brain likes Tony Hawk Pro Skater? Every Tony Hawk game sold a million copies since the Playstation debut in 1999, sold even more copies when it went multiplatform. The game is more popular on Playstation then any other console may I might add. I don't ask people how much . It would be impossible for people to describe it without setting down and playing it together. I don't get many visitors so I can't really explain this very well. Fans of the series would have a easier time with this one. They know exactly what they like about in Tony Hawk the game. . The bikes ride the rail forever and the game is so easy that you couldn't even trade it for a cool Tony Hawk game without paying 15 dollars extra. I never even thought I like it until I played it. Neversoft now specializes in extreme sport games. They release a new Tony Hawk game like clock work (every year now since 1999) Since then they've put all games on competitive platforms. If you seen the original Tony Hawk Pro Skater on the 100 Greatest Videogames of all time polls, I promise you that that is just because the control scheme is better then most sport titles on the Playstation 2. When I normally think of the 100 best tiles of videogame history I think of Final Fantasy III and Super Mario Bros or Metal Gear Solid.

What I am most interested in is how this game got the Teen Rating? For those who aren't familiar with this game and think "its another one of those dumb mediocre skating title like those BMX titles on Playstation. But then it wouldn't be so legendary, know would it. Know I understand those people who recently picked up a console of this generation and were in the dark since Super Nintendo and just happened to pick on of the best videogames available today out of curiosity. Although with the Internet and word of mouth for 5 years that would rarely happen. That happened with me. I got I first videogame in 1997, and it wasn't a Playstation. If I didn't buy a Gamecube or waited so long to get an xbox, I probably would have a Tony Hawk Pro Skater game for N64

This game is good because it is big. You can talk to skaters, listen to the latest rap music, do tricks, find items, out play your friends and play any song that will download to your xbox hard drive. Did I mention that the game is out for the PC? Who plays THPS with a mouse and keyboard? Some games aren't meant to be played on the computer. Why? The console versions are so much cleaner and playable. That about sums it up right there. Did I mention that Tony Hawk Pro Skater 4 is a little better then Tony Hawk Pro Skater for Dreamcast. After a while their comes a time where a game can only be very good once. Anything better then the original, anyone else would give it a 10.0 because that game was a mere monopoly and no one could tell that the ultimate conquer was its own successor. It's true. Look at Metal Gear Solid or Legend of Zelda and how the sequels improved upon the prequels while not taking away from other aspects of the game which made it great to begin with. I'm not a skater, okay. I'm a race car driver. But I bought it anyway because I got it cheap. I was wondering why some reviewers gave this game a 9.0 out of 10, 10 out of 10. I got the good stuff out of Tony Hawk Pro Skater. But it is still extreme skating. You know skate ... do tricks ... fail ... draw blood. Repeat this process again and again until you feel light headed. Well the 3D animation is really good, doing the same objectives over and over give me a headache. Be sure to check back in 2 weeks for my Tony Hawk Pro Skater 3 review. (article posted Aug 01, 2003 7:00 PM | revised once)

Summing up Tony Hawk Pro Skater 4

Graphics

10.0

Looks like Pyro on a skateboard in the game Halo! You know when Komani put Snake in a skateboard level in Metal Gear Solid 2 for Xbox / PS2. The only reason that I give this game a perfect score in the graphics department is that I've seen the Playstation 2 screenshots online. Some reason the PS2 version doesn't look washed out in the character models I mean you might have smooth animations, but you don't have a lot of bump mapping and hex shading. In Xbox, the game has all three. How many times can you have a perfect shadow when doing anything. I don't know how a small developer like Neversoft can push out this much pixel animations on the buildings, shadows on all the ramps, cars, rails and buildings.

Control

The character control is very smoothed out. An example of average control is loose and flimsy while still retaining the stabilization to be able to do tricks. The 100 tricks aren't possible without some foundation of turing, jumping doing mid air combos. It has to work and it does and has worked since the first Tony Hawk Pro Skater. If it ain't broken why fix it then. The tracks are huge and are filled with a lot of trick zones. While the first Tony Hawk Pro Skater I and II were indoors, THPS 3 and 4 are outdoors. One thing they should include in Tony Hawk Pro Skater, which they didn't is the original tracks from the previous games. Like the original had skating arenas from Minneapolis to Miami based on real locations. Neversoft didn't upgrade. They should know that people will always buy the latest Tony Hawk over the last installment. Why don't they just have the same levels and add more levels? They don't and there are plenty of levels to skate around in. Things have sure come a long way since Skate or Die on the Nintendo Entertainment System.

Originalism

8.5

The game is America's favorite extreme sport which airs on ESPN twice a year called the X Games. This show needs no introduction. Anyways, this game has an introduction. A career mode, free skate mode, multiplayer mode are all cool. Instead of having one player do nary tricks, you have two!

The next Tony Hawk Pro Skater should have unlockable Nintendo characters on skateboards. Not multiplatform though. Perhaps since Neversoft did make a Spiderman game they could put Peter Parker on a skateboard. I think they already have. I'm not sure which number of the Tony Hawk franchise had it. The point is it would be funny to see Mario, Yoshi or Captain Falcon on a skateboard do mid air tricks. Microsoft needs a mascot. I wouldn't want Billionaire Bill Gates himself skate boarding in my game. That would be cruel and unusual. Though I wouldn't mind having some anime girls skating in the next Tony Hawk game as long as they were cute. Xbox has had so much recognition with Tecmo's Dead or Alive III and Dead or Alive Beach Volleyball.

Sound Effects

10.0

The music including rap is some popular songs that come with extreme sports. This game feels like a rap game. This game is a very good example of pop culture we have in America! The next Tony Hawk Pro Skater, Tony Hawk Pro Skater Underground is going to be much bigger, have a lot of skater speciality shops and be very street based.

Replayibly

8.5

Good. While the replay is almost obvious. How many games have a combo of great replay and pretty good game play mechanics. You can visually look at the game when these guys are doing tricks and memorize the tricks and go out and see the real thing and know what some of the tricks are. They could might as well be perfect because I'm not a extreme skater fan. All I know is the control sceme feels pretty good here in this game. This game has every staker trick known to man, unless Tony Hawk himself creates a new trick. You can deconvor it from the very beginning. It's good. But I'm mostly into racing and first person shooters. Although some of the good first person shooters and racing titles for xbox are a little slim.

Xbox - Elder Scrolls III - GOTY review (2003-05-03 11:32)

| GAME FEATURES |

Developer : Bethesda Softworks

A.) Being one of xbox's largest games. The first being Shenmue 2. Developed with the best attentions.

Publisher : Bethesda Softworks

B.) Play as any Dungeons and Dragons characters including Elfs, Orcs, Human.

Released sometime in 2002

C.) One of few first person RPGs seen only in Heroes of Might and Magic, DEUS EX.

D.) Quest around in a massive world doing favors for people. Although, some of these favors are from evil outlanders who don't look evil at all. For example, all aristocrats in this game are evil because they've got their hearts stolen from evil elves.

Type : "Massive Offline Single Player Role Playing Game"

Elder Scrolls III Morrowind is the sequel to Daggerfall. There is absolutely no comparison to the two games. Daggerfall was released on DOS in 1996 by Bethesda Softworks. The graphics best compare to Dungeon Keeper or Hexen for the PC. If you want to see what Daggerfall really looked like

. DaggerFall first introduced a huge 3D game with entire lakes, dungeons, lands, towns, roads and country making it up. Much like what Diablo was when it first came out. Expect Diablo franchise from Blizzard didn't improve as much as this franchise. At the time in 1996, Elder Scrolls II was really awe inspiring. Anyway it's really old now and few people play it anymore. Seven years after the release of Elder Scrolls II : Daggerfall; Elder Scrolls III : Morrowind became a state-of-the-art RPG with a huge world to boot. And it wasn't originally released on Xbox. I could of owned the game either way because both my PCs can handle the graphically demanding PC version. I have never played a RPG in first person before except if you count Legend of Zelda 64. Morrowind is also the smash hit PC game. I guess I wasn't the only one looking for an Xbox RPG. Except I waited it out one year after the game was released. I don't have the PC game. But from what I heard the Xbox version look better and I wanted to play a RPG on Xbox. Although I've seen some nice textures on the PC. Regardless, Elder Scrolls III is a huge game. The closest game that comes in comparison is EverQuest.

So first in the game, you go through this process. You've just got out of jail and they want you to decide on what character your going to be and then they make you answer a lot of questions just so you have a signed release form saying you've passed security. Now for the fun part. The part where you get to create quests and take what you want. Much like Dungeon Siege. The bigger / stronger the enemy, the more expensive loot he has on him. So you can loot anyone whom you kill. Except people / alien races aren't dumb in this fantasy world, the minute you steal something, who ever you steal it from will want to kill you. Except the aristocrats are amused and still try to kill you. They are amused only because their heartless fous who got their hearts stolen from evil elves (the game tells me so...) Which brings me to my next point, the character your playing is wiser then you, so check the journal often. You might even discover what ways you can set apart a good elf from a evil elf. Your job is to kill all the evil elves. The journal is usually right. I almost wonder if this game will be similar to the upcoming World of Warcraft. World of Warcraft stepped aside from war strategy foundation and stepped up into the realm of Massive Multiplayer Online Role Playing Games.

One thing that the PC has is Patches. This is relatively new to console games. Mech Assault is the only game that allows you to download new patches from the Internet to the hard drive. Even though the game is well designed and has amongst the best graphics on Xbox, it has slowdowns. The game usually goes a long the lines of 30 frames per second. That won't cut it for just any game, but I've been arrange by the size of each level. There just isn't any boundaries in this title. It's a very large world and it loads along the way. Which is OK. This makes me curious how Gas Powered Games managed to make Dungeon Siege a huge game without any loading times. It has something to do with the balance between backgrounds loading when some disappear. Everything in a 200 feet radius loads simutaniously. That's how the game engine works.

The infamous example of the half orc in Neverwinter Nights "He may be strong and reckless, but everyone tends to stay away from him because he's not too bright." This fact stays true with Morrowind as well. In the beginning, if your character doesn't have a very good score, that old guy won't say a word, however, if you are lucky to answer most of the questions right, he'll be overly friendly to you. The guard just grinds at you as if nothing seriously happened. But hey what can you do, you have no weapon.

There are evil creatures in this game like in all RPGs. In this game, the smart ones pretend to be friendly so they can lure you into a trap so they can kill you or just turn you evil. In this game, you have a choice of being evil or good from the actions you do. Your not evil when you fight back when someone is trying to kill you. The opposite is true. Some creatures are just born evil, while others become evil. This game gives off a whole new meaning of evil I've never encountered in a game before. Yes, there are many ways to die in this game, you can even die evil. An example would be, where a thief hands me a bag full of something expensive. Of course I'll take it! But if it looks like something evil, I'll just leave it. When you evil, there will be people who hunt you down to kill you. It's more trouble then it's worth. Don't think you can out last most of the guards from the beginning because guards are very well armed. Some evil in this world is better equipped with armor and magic then you. Once you have a weapon then you can explore the many towns. Some quests require you to go all the way back to the beginning of the game and explore a town opposite of where you are. Sometimes you'll bring items back and forth from town to town, while other times you'll bring people from location to location. Be careful though, some people will ask you to go one direction and you won't know what they're talking about? So when I offered to help this one person, it took me 45 minutes to find it. To be specific it was a farm near the coast line.

The level up system in this RPG is like others, in other words it's average. Most console RPGs have a high standard of it's level up system. In this case the new stats are displayed in text each time you level up. Instead of giving you stats points like in Diablo 2. The more your character uses melee weapons, the stronger he gets. The easiest way to get the weapon you want is to kill someone for it. Becareful who you duel because some guys are very well skilled. I tend to try to duel aliens with out shields. There are ranged weapons in this game, but 9/10 of all weapons used by everyone is melee. Glass type weapons are the most effective. All magical weapons have a green glow.

My favorite part is exploring the new world. I wonder if I compares well to Dungeon Siege. That was also a huge game. It had not 1 massive world, but 3 maps roughly the same size. From the beginning with a new gamer, the game looks endless. And the hundreds of quests makes it so you can cover the same ground that makes the game so huge several times.

Summing up Elder Scrolls III : Morrowind

Graphics

10.0

Elder Scrolls III Morrowind is a good looking game. It renders graphics that surpass any Playstation 2 game. In this case I'm comparing Everquest to Xbox's Elder Scrolls III. The game one Xbox RPG of the Year from Xbox Magazine. Baldur's Gate was it's runner up. Morrowind is huge. It's full of countless characters to interact with. The character models are average while, the world they live in is eye popping, like the PC version, although I seen some Internet sites say that the Xbox version looks better. The PC and Xbox versions of Morrowind are similar. The trees, plants are all 3D. And they look very high definition. There doesn't look like there's a odd placed pixel in the game. The water effects and reflections are awesome. You can even go swimming in this game if you like. Unlike some games where you just float, in this game, you swim for real! The game doesn't have smooth frame rate, a though its really good 90 percent of the time. Be worn that there is a lock up bug in this game wear the game locks up. But this could also be that Morrowind is way too graphically defined to be simple for Xbox to handle.

Control

The game is easier to control then most first person shooters. At least most console First Person Shooters. The only ones I think that stay par to Morrowind is Unreal Championship, Timesplitters 2, and Halo. The reason why I compare it with a first person shooter is that these games share the same controls. The left thumbpad controls forward movement while the right joystick turns the character left or right. It's simple and effective. The left thumbpad could be the keyboard arrows, while the right thumbpad can be the mouse. The difficulty in this game is medium. Like I said above, you can equip your inventory with stuff you buy or steal. If you steal, you must over power the person who is trying to kill you first. But if someone notices, then there is not 1 but 2 or 3 people trying to kill you. So if your planning to buy this game, it's great fun. But don't get caught killing someone in public.

Orginalism

I can now see how this game can come with high expectations from anyone who plays it. It's perfect and I thinking that Elder Scrolls IV is going to be a whole lot better in this area. The game looks like it been worked on for 3 or more years just by looking at it. The develo per, Bethesda, is new to me. I mostly known about Black Isles, Blizzard Entertainment and Gas Powered Games. I'm not much of a Might and Magic fan myself, so I never had a RPG in first person view.

Sound Effects

8.0

Morrowind has a less then perfect soundtrack. But the spoken dialog with every person you encounter makes up for the gap! Voice acting in this game is good.

Replayibly

???

Don't know yet. It looks fun and I've been playing it for a couple days, spending 3 hours at each setting. Not doubt, it's fun, just that this game is so huge.

New Metal Gear for Gamecube? (2003-05-03 23:32)

Some interesting Metal Gear Solid sequel news : Komani asked Silicon Knights to make "Metal Gear Solid : The Twin Snakes" exclusive for Gamecube. All I know is MGS2 was a top game for Playstation 2. The new game is suppose to look the same or better then the xbox version of MGS2. The new Sonic game is coming to gamecube, Sonic Adventure Directors Cut. I have the Dreamcast version 1.1 of Sonic Adventure. I've played it and the game was ok. But now I learned that Sonic Adventure DX also includes all the Gamegear titles to boot.

I took my road test the first time and passed. It's a good feeling to have that out of the way. Now I can go where ever I need too. Finally the day has come.

Suse 8.2 report completed (2003-05-06 23:31)

I haven't finished de-bugged this website yet. I know what I'll do I'll send a popup message saying you can't read this page in Netscape to warn users of errors. This website looks fine in Internet Explorer but some images haven't shown up in Netscape. Odd, but it shows up on Mozilla and Konqueror in Linux? Is that right? I am about to fix that sometime this weekend. I've added my SuSe Linux 8.2 Impressions to the Editorials page. This week is the last week of Intro to Unix college course. So I must hurry up with my source code and get it handed in before too long. At school I minded my own business. I'm thinking that should stop. I think I got to get out and talk to some people. Hmm what to say. I could talk about Linux all day but no one would care, besides I dont' know enough about Linux to appeal to even shell scripting students. Damn, I get lonely. I am always so glad I get home from school from the college. Not really to go to sleep, but get food in my stomach. I have really been going light on food when at school. For what you ask. A stupid game? I much rather spend my money on videogames then food. I was looking at that Nascar Thunder 2003 for Gamecube, honestly.

Note from the Writer : Some readers may view this page as Playderism. If you ever known about how open the Linux community is about their opinions, you do now. There are 100s of websites that review SUSE LINUX. So if you read off of LinuxNews.org or some of those first hits off Google, will you call those sites, Playderism? They don't list their sources neither. While I should list my sources after the sentences, I won't because I forget where I find the most of this information. If you still think that this article is playderism then leave. I don't want you here!

Suse Ltd was created in 1997 in Oakland, California. The four lucky people who created capital in Suse includes Hubert Mantel, Burchard Steinbild, Roland Dyroff and

Thomas Fehr. Suse went into business with the goal of distributing a better OS than Red Hat. Redhat publicly introduced itself in 1998, one year before Linux soared high on the stock market. (source : "Revolution OS" on IFC) Redhat has been making commercial versions that weren't sold in stores until 1998 (Redhat 6.1). So it came together by a group ownership. With SUSE's Germany operation(s), Suse was able to create something competitive to Redhat's OS. Suse bought the Jurix Linux source code and renamed it to Suse making a much improved interface. By this time Linux was well established. Since the operating system was commercialized, it quadrupled in size. Now we are at version 8.2 with version 9.0 around the corner. Recently Suse went 64-bit instead of 32. This improved the interface, it booted up faster and did more applications than it has done. Suse has a office sweep specifically designed for Suse Linux.

If you haven't read my Red Hat 8.0 editorial, you should read it, I mean I put weeks into that project. I described how Redhat looked a lot like Windows. I don't know about copyright laws, but Linux in general has moved up the bar and broke laws. Windows applications are able to run on Linux! I think that is so cool. I talk about this later. Red Hat has recently been keeping up with the industry, surprisingly. They have both Gnome 2.2 and KDE 3.1 on their desktop. Red Hat supports both operating systems! KDE is entirely commercial in its looks and its performance as a desktop shell. I knew Redhat is good at what they do now. But I realized that their competition have had some interesting ideas. Suse, who is entirely profit driven, is unlike Redhat who goes more towards the GNU Project. Both operating systems use the same KDE Desktop and it comes with all the applications. But Suse Linux is priced 20 dollars less than Redhat. I choose the Personal version because it was cheaper.

Suse is already faster than Redhat. The bootup is faster. I like this much better. Instead of commands being compiled, Suse has an upload statistic bar. Opening applications is as fast as Windows XP. I have a 1.8 Ghz Athlon XP with 386 MB of DRam with a ATI Radeon 9000 video card. My processing speed is plenty fast. When the industry lowers its price for 3.0 Ghz processors I'm going to upgrade.

style="font-size: 20pt;">The X factor [rating 9.5/10] face="Charter">X as in Xwindows. Xwindows seems much stronger in Suse 8.2 then in Redhat 8.0. Suse has a system were the MS Windows C drive is displayed on the KDE desktop. I shrugged at this massive lang="en-US">accomplishment , for I have never seen the c drive on Linux before. Whether this option is in Redhat 9.0, I don't know. But it makes it highly flexible to save things to the Window's C drive through Linux. Infact the C drive is listed on /root for easy access. You have the stability of linux to do your work without it crashing. I can do multiple stuff on the c drive that I couldn't of done in Redhat 8.0. Personally I listen to MP3s on Linux that's on Windows. The sound quality is as good as it was on Windows. The drives for Redhat 8.0 will also pop up. If you saved work in Redhat 8.0, it'll automatically work in Suse. It was really weird, but it was really awesome. I know Suse did one thing right, they've added a full directory listing to Kstart so that you can directly access /root directory through the gui. I suppose I went sur-crazy for a mere 10 seconds. It's that cool. I don't have to make cdr each time I go on the Internet like I thought I had too.

style="font-size: 20pt;">Installation [8/10]

Installation (YaST) has a lot in common with Redhat. No doubt it is a excellent and well set up Installation effort done by SUSE programmers. I liked Redhat's latest installation wizard in version 8.0. By default, Suse 8.2 comes only with KDE desktop. What we really need is both Gnome and KDE. YaST will help you through the installation. If you have this by default. KDE runs faster then Gnome, slightly. Gnome has even more programs then Redhat. All programs are installed in Gnome show up in KDE. The Professional version of Suse comes with 5 discs instead of 3 disks and can add up to 3 Gigabytes instead of 2 Gigabytes. The source code has been shorten in the Professional version and helps the computer load software faster. But the Personal version, what I have, has the exact same properties, but alittle slower. The system will have to re-partition your current Linux partition whether it is Redhat or Mandrake because Suse has to use the same partitions to create it's basis too. It's the damn competition way of saying, " You bought me, now you have to use me instead of Redhat" So at least Suse is kind enough to show file progresses that are installed to the Linux partition. Put this can easily be reversed by renaming the partition to a different Swap drive and have Ext 4, 5 and 6 for Suse or vice versa for Redhat. There is an option that allows the superuser to check gnome, too. With gnome you get another desktop. The installation takes 15 minutes. It takes anywhere from 1 Gigabytes to 2 Gigabytes of hard drive space. KDE and Gnome are both 700 Mbs each. With the huge and cheap options with hard drives these days, it should be recommended by anyone for the full installation of both Shells.

The YaST asks the user to check his modem. The modem is connected in the COM1 of my computer (bottom socket of the motherboard) The only modem that'll worked in Redhat is the common 3COM Robotics 56K Fax Modem. YaST needs to be updated further. If you have a Win modem, it won't work. So I went back to CompUSA to get an External Modem called the Creative Modem Blaster. That time it worked. Sometimes I think that PCI cards aren't viewable since they aren't in use unless you stick something in the serial port such as a external fax modem. I have had a odd connection viewing my fax modem inside my computer. There has been news off the web that Suse doesn't have the proper drivers for PCI modems. YaST will ask you if you want to download a patch for your Nvidia videocard. I know most people will go and buy a Geforce II or IV. While others will go with ATI Radeon series. This patch will give your card compatibility with OpenGL.

Suse Personal version automatically asks you if you want to become a workstation in a LAN. Since most people will only own one computer, this isn't possible. So workstations work fine. Like in all The installation recognizes all 2003 hardware components and earlier (video card, hard drive, monitor, mouse, sound card, speakers, processor, modem, network card, fire wire ports, usb ports, etc.) When Suse is installed I like to use Partition Magic 8.0 to create free space so Redhat can detect it and install according to it. I haven't seen a way that Suse can do that. No problem though.

The difference between SuSe

8.1 and 8.2 are noticeable. I don't know.

I've never used Suse. So I heard: A lot of the bug fixes that comes with shell development are now fixed. Not so much a new release of the two desktop shells, but rather improved use of memory and small application fixes. Suse 8 can now recognize newer hardware. Suse 8.2 never crashes. That's good news. To prevent extra work. Suse put more updates on the Programs on 3rd disc. I never needed to use the third disc.

style="font-size: 22pt;">The Internet on Linux [rating 8.5/10]

Unix has much Improved in the Internet field. Netscape Communicator has been whipped off the face of Linux distributions! This OS comes with Konqueror, Mozilla, Opera. Out of the three, Konqueror is the most advanced browser. It can open any webpage without a problem. Not to say that Mozilla or Opera don't have that ability. You can't read most javascript made by independent users that work exclusive for Internet Explorer seen on both iMac and Windows. Gaim is still the premiere instant messenger for Linux. It has everything : MSN Messenger, ICQ, AIM, Yahoo, IRC. And is very reliable. There is more drivers that allow automatic detection like you see in Windows XP. That annoying "Hardware Found" icon on the Windows taskbar is in Suse 8.2. I don't know how long Suse had the technology though. It comes with Opera 6.0 and Mozilla 1.0.2. Opera and Mozilla are award winning programs. Both browsers use Sun's Javascript in bedded into each. This allows you to see some basic html javascript like popup menus and slide shows.

style="font-size: 22pt;">The Word Processor / html editing / programming [rating 9.0/10]

I recently talked about Open Office on Redhat, and it's so good, that it's back on Suse 8.2 version. It is the preferred office suite of all KDE and Gnome operating systems. KDE makes it's own version of Koffice. And Gnome makes Abiword. But these word processors, although close, don't have as many features as Open Office.org Office Suite. One enhancement is that it highlights your typing in blue and while you type, displays the end result as you type. That's cool. Now I don't have a problem of missing words. In OpenOffice.org 1.0.1 for Redhat, OpenOffice.org crashed once every time I use it. The only thing that kept me from getting mad at it is that it periodically saved my files to `/home/students/` directory. It's better in Suse or Linux in general.

If you want to edit html, you have plenty of options. Linux comes with Mozilla Composer. It has much improved over the Netscape 6.0 composer. MC can view both gui style and html script in the same program. Then you can use Open Office to create light html pages too. There are some free downloadable software like Bluefish 0.9 and Coffeecup HTML editor. Both a command line based html editor. People can use the Kate for easy access to their html script. It highlights different code in color so you can easily find your code. It's also used for Pearl, C++, shell script and Python shell script. Best of all, when your system crashes, Kate will keep your work for you till you log in and open Kate again. I seen this work in different Linux OS, and it isn't new to Linux.

One thing new aboard linux is Python 2.2 programming client. Python script looks like shell script, but has MSDOS commands are built into it, and some simple commands. It's available for all Linux distributions. The script is simpler than shell script for Linux and looks the same. Not like Korn shell. That's what the terminal uses now. What is Korn, you ask? Korn is a more advanced shell programming structure than Bourne Shell script. It's a hybrid, to be exact. Python is included with SUSE under the programming tab of the language bar.

The Multimedia Software [7/10]

With the ability to see Mp3s on windows partition, you can use a program called XMMS (looks exactly like Winamp) and play your songs. The XMMS can read all Winamp customized zipped skins. It's about the highest quality mp3 player out for Linux. XMMS comes with equalizer abilities and a range of sound adjustments. I really like. XMMS is in Redhat 8.0 too. So it's a Linux thing. Sometimes XMMS will play, but not show up and then crash with the music still playing. At least XMMS is skinnable. Mplayer can show DVD movies not very well, but the idea is there. I haven't seen this program in Redhat at all. Mplayer can read avi and mpeg off DVDRs, so that's a plus. It's not as buggy as the Redhat version of its media player. Suse comes with Realplayer. Realplayer reads MPEG off cds, but also doubles as an Internet radio tuner and streaming video client.

Picture

clients are cool. I like Kuinkshow better than Image Viewer in Gnome. This program will read graphic files off Linux / Windows and scrolls through them as you scroll the mouse wheel. Esc on the keyboard cancels Kuinkshow. It has many similarities with Irfanview. One thing that I find difficult in Suse makes its file system so you can't bring up Kuinkshow first, and look at your photos, but have to find them on the desktop or even cut / paste directory shortcuts to the open window. I look at Kuinkshow so I can easily page through my artwork I made in Windows.

Many games have the same problem with Nvidia cards that use Direct 3D. Suse has an easier time using the video card to its advantage, but SUSE stop supporting Nvidia drivers for whatever reason. The focus for Linux partitions is OpenGL, an open source graphics accelerator which should work as well as Direct 3D and doesn't. OpenGL improved some since 1999, but it still doesn't look as good or have as good as frame rate as Direct 3D. However I was able to get a Geforce driver off Nvidia.com, which improved graphics acceleration slightly.

Video editing can also be done on Suse with "MovieActor 3.7." The Linux version of Microsoft's Moviemaker software and still more filled out with options. It is still very basic. Some features that properly describe it is that it can move mpeg video around by cropping the video and export it to mpeg. It can add still images and add slide transitions too.

style="font-size: 22pt;">New Games [7/10]

All the games are stable in Suse 8.2. Gnome's game package grown bigger in this version. Racer is a 3D Car Simulation (a 250 MB game) The game is much like Midnight Racer for the PS2. At least we know that 3D racers are supported by the operating system. There is also Fool Billiards , a pool game for Linux that uses real nice 3D acceleration. href="http://www.loki.com/"> href="http://www.loki.com/"> Loki makes some affordable commercial versions of Neverwinter Nights, Civilization 4, Simcity 3000, Quake III, and Unreal Tournament 2003 for all Linux OS. There just isn't games to go around in Linux. I found a large selection of free games off linux.tucows.com. Chronoium is a good 2D shooter, but it requires OpenGL. Should Direct X be on a Linux operating system, that will be the day. The frustrating time comes when 3Ddiag doesn't work with Nvidia's latest driver. The driver can come in a compact 1.3 tar.tz format or a very large uncompressed .run format. Quadra is a new Tetris game put in Suse. It wasn't in Redhat's distribution. It's fun, but Ksirtris is more fun and it has somewhat better level adjustment. Quadra is impossible to keep up with after level 3. Grometris is Grome's version of Tetris. It's a basic game at best. KDE had come up with Kbattleship after the boardgame Battleship. That is alittle fun too. The buttons in the game have been updated to look rounded and shady that went well with the desktop anyway. This wasn't possible 5 years ago. Desktop appearance took a giant leap in the Linux department in KDE 2.0 and 3.0 AisleRiot is the only solitaire game on board Suse Linux. That sucks! Katomic is a fun games. It's a well known game in the Linux community. I am good at it. The game is about matching balls which move and stop by hitting a wall. Then they have to be in the order of the matching screen to go on. There is 50 levels in this game. There is plenty of time to fool around. The higher levels are unreachable by the average person, I believe. Linux is about having fun. The more fun your having, the more you are educated about Linux, and that is the best part of using Linux. Patience is another solitaire game. Solitaire is relaxing. Thus, Solitaire is the bomb! Everyone agrees with it.

I've played Tux

Racer and it's a good game. It has a catchy jingle to it. It's more of a Penguin Grand Prix then a racer. It's a nice game though. A good effort. As a player, you can race 6 tracks. The tracks are better then most racers. It has various shades of tree colors and snow cover. Good background artwork. It runs in high resolution. I wonder if KDE or Gnome plan to add Doom 1.1 to their 3D games. If so it would be awesome. If not, that's ok, I'll just download it off the Internet. If only I had a videocard that excepted OpenGL.

There was one game that worked with OpenGL well called Frozen Bubble. I love this game. It's new and it's cool. Frozen Bubble most resimbles the N64 game, Bust-a-Bubble. It's simple, it's stable, just line the bubbles up with the color and there it all goes down. Do this all in time to move on. This game has 100. Newer versions should have more then 100. The program comes with mp3 music that is apropraite for this style genre. The music isn't that cheesy. Redhat didn't come with this game. It was top rated on the web for most enjoyable game on Linux. So ... I rest my case. This is one of the best games for Linux off the Internet, period. This game deserves a 9.0/10 user rating. If you don't own a brand new computer like me, you can even lower the graphics quality so it'll run on your videocard. You'll see once you find it.

If you like to download a lot of games, I advice you to download the compressed format .tar or .gz. Then you won't be missing files and a lot of times, if your games come pre-compiled, you can get away with it. So download the zip format of your games. If you don't have an unity, which you should have if your running Linux is ARK.

Desktops in Linux improved slightly in the last 2 years. Linux has a good os shell recovery system (something that occurs

kernel.

Applications

can't crash as they would in Windows. It's a Linux standard and gets better in every release of Suse / Redhat / Mandrake. In the industry, there is an argument whether or not the latest versions of SUSE, Redhat or Mandrake are as stable as they were 2 years ago. It shouldn't been true though, the kernel

up more then a 100 public releases since then. All of these curtacy

of the GNU Project. These companies release a new version every 6 to 8 months every year.

They're always trying to put something new in there OS. I mean ,in Linux, SUSE took a more drastic turn then Microsoft did when they went from Windows 98 to Windows 2000. Now you can go to your folder, right click and do renaming, moving of files to any directory. Use the terminal or use of the gui to make adjustments to your files is quick. If you right click on the desktop itself you have a broad view of many options. By the way, I found out all the screen savers that Linux is known for is in Gnome. In KDE, you get a scenic black screen that will enlighten your Desktop. You can change your resolution to look like Windows, Change your background image. I tried this on my mom and she thought she was using Windows XP. It was so funny to watch. She did see something different about "Kstart."

I didn't say anything. Like in KDE 2.1, you could change your titlebars to look a lot like Windows 2000. There are a lot of Desktop backgrounds that come with Suse. Really cool screen savers

appear when you don't

' use the desktop for a length of time. I seen these in Redhat, though. Every thing has a minimum quality, for all screensavers have to look cool and not crash. Linux also has an option where you can reserve energy by putting your computer into sleep mode. Sleep mode doesn't make much since to me when you can turn your computer off.

Installing

programs are varied. RPMs usually don't have the the system files
 I need to install what I need. RPMs are the install wizard similar to EXE for Windows. Some programs come compressed in tar.gz format. I don't like these as much because there harder to work with. YaST gives me errors saying that the packages need to run the wizard is unavailable. A lot of times you need to be signed in as root to allow any rpms to be installed. Sometimes you can't install new versions over the old version (such as Mozilla) so you have to delete the directory Mozilla and install the latest version over that. Suse has an uninstall wizard, but I have no idea where it is?

style="font-size: 22pt;">FIN : The End Result

The end result is that I much rather have Suse on my Desktop then Redhat.
 Although in the future, I'll use redhat for school. I can have what I feel more comfortable with in Suse 8.2. I like the ability to see the Windows hard drive
 it gives me more options I never had. I like Redhat's smooth features like the screensavers. They both run the same version of KDE and Gnome. But, Suse runs faster then Redhat. So I have to like Suse more then Redhat 8.0. I'll see what Redhat 10.0 is like in 2004. But until then, I like what I have with Suse. Suse.com doesn't have any selection of drivers for hardware what-so-ever. But they do have a toll free 1800 number to call for tech support.

Xbox - Halo review (2003-05-07 11:33)GAME FEATURES |

Developer : Bungie

A.) great co-operation play

Publisher : Microsoft

B.) A very long game. Your advantage, having a squad of your own. However these guys are only moral and if not careful, they'll die in front of you in the beginning.

Released on November 15, 2001

C.) many cut scenes describing the story in a lot of detail

D.) Four species of the Covenant. The small guys are easy, but there are species that carry shields who are twice as big as you are.

Type : First Person Shooter

This game will be coming out for the PC in two months and will be Microsoft's giant Multiplayer, amazingly 3D, first person shooter. Only because it is Microsoft's only online first person shooter. Halo is already has some amazing co-operation both by squad members and extra players. This is what the developer, Bungie, hasn't forgot. When you die, the game is never over, you just sent back to the last checkpoint in the game. I find having the television volume up is the best way to stay alive. For example, you can hear your teammates saying commands or taunts over the radio. It's really helpful to hear what they have to say. In a lot of ways this game is a above average military (co-op action genre) game which so happens to be a first person shooter.

STORY

You and some remaining colonist have just survived the illnilation of a small planet and your ship called "The Pillar of Autumn" want some pay back. Halo isn't any name of a planet or commander of the alien army. Halo is ground zero for your launch of super explosive hardware on a small deserted asteroid belt. The Covenant are keeping you successfully planting a bomb in their mothership on Halo. Anyway these aliens already know where Earth is and want to destroy it so humans don't exist and wind out like many other alien species, extinct like the dinosaurs. And this spawned a trilogy of games, Halo (2001), Halo 2 (2003) and Halo 3 (2005.) The year is 2525 and we've only colonized space for a 100 years.

2001 Game of the Year

In the game you pass some awesome scenery. Getting "The Game of the Year" in 2001 would have been already awarded when Halo came out. E3 (Electronic Entertainment Expo in LA) holds "The Game of the Year" awards in October. Bungie would of easily stole that award for best action game of 2002 if Nintendo haven't released Metroid Prime. Both games are really good. Ahead of it's time in 2001. Probably the only honor achievement Microsoft had with the Xbox. I heard of this game a year ago and gamers have said that Halo was the game to own on Xbox. One year later I had a chance to played this game. It is good. The military tactics are realistic. Halo is a game that makes Rainbow Six look like a maggot. It has military tactics that the other Tom Clancy's Splitter Cell couldn't easily done. This would be over rating Halo because I've never tried Splitter Cell.

Campaign Mode and Multiplayer Mode(s)

The game also has Multiplayer Modes. Almost all First Person Shooters have a Deathmatch mode. I've never tried Deathmatch. Halo also has Interlink cable where you can play 8 players in Deathmatch on four Xboxs. Halo is no different from other First Person Shooters, except that it has Co-op in the "campaign mode" The Co-op in campaign mode is splitscreen. The same idea Free Radical Design put into Timesplitters. Player 2 has the same armor and guns / ammo as player 1. Both go through the large levels in the game. In level 1 you landed on a deserted planet. Pyro

(you) and selected squad members of the United Nations Space Command go towards and warp portal which you beam onto a alien ship. There you are surrounded with aliens who use guerilla tactics against your squad. Then Pyro needs to open doors / activate elevators without losing teammates in the process. Very Easy is to Somewhat Easy. Easy is to good level. Normal is to hard. Hard is to Very Hard.

Now for those of you who liked to drive — The Jeep! — in Halo. The Jeep controls are as good as many driving games. Is it the power that makes you come back? Pyro can lose teammates in the process. However your squad doesn't feel as suicidal as Pyro does so they'll follow the red dots on Radar through out the game. Jeeps have machine guns mounted on top of it. So the right thumbstick controls the gun. It's easier firing at a distance then up close. Squad members don't get to drive Jeeps as much as you do. The point of this paragraph is driving Jeeps in Halo is fun!

Which each new level you get new recruits. But like the 3rd level, you get to drive a Jeep, but your recon is lying dead somewhere just because the Covenant forces are too strong. Pyro must do everything, including destroying the majority of the covenant. In level 4 when you crash into the mothership, but e racusally

Pyro survives being rammed against the outshell. Inside is the coveasant, and no recon. So it's up to you to go against really tough hunters with shields. Shields protect them from everything including plasma grenades.

Summing up Halo

Graphics

10.0

Halo has the Xbox hardware down packed. Like I said, this game won the 2001 Game of the Year award at E3. This game has a lot of particle effects to enjoy. Much like what guns look like in Unreal Tournament 2003. There are a lot of good looking enemies. The squad members have clarity in their faces instead of a washed out look that you'll see in games of this kind on Playstation 2 and Gamecube.

Control

9.5

I like to say that controls are good. You can easily target the enemy. On the PC you'll get to play this game with a keyboard and mouse. The weapons can easily be sorted with the B button. A is for jumping. And naturally, the left and right triggers are for firing the weapon / tossing out grenades.

Orginalism

10.0

Highly original. Bungie got the feel of some of those games that Red Storm Entertainment (developer for Tom Clancy's Splitter Cell, Rainbow 6 Raven Shield and DEUS EX) has. You can even include Perfect Dark and Goldeneye in this category. All are the leading military action games which require stealth as much as teamplay.

Sound Effects

10.0

Halo is full of mature taunts and a radio with real military commands. Whether you follow them is your choice. Sometimes if you follow the commands of your squad, you'll see how valuable they are to you. The main point of this game is the weapon fire and the music. Yes, the gun firing sounds like a M-16 assault rifle or a double barrow 20 caliber sniper. The music is good and atmospheric for Halo. The game features futuristic industrial tunes.

Replayibly

The main game is long. But what makes this an ideal xbox title was that it wasn't rushed in the production. The co-op game play was well thought out. The graphics are great. You'll have fun playing with a squad in campaign mode or deathmatch in multiplayer mode because of it's slick control.

My second project absolutely done at the University Check it out here. I'm done cramming all work I had yet to do before the Linux program was done for the year. It was cut. People must hate programmers at that school. Everyone must think we're not doing anything. Eating donuts, not caring much about worksheets in class. WE'RE PROGRAMMERS, WE DON'T CARE, WE DON'T DO ANYTHING UNLESS WE'RE TOLD TO DO IT! We learned mostly about how to come up with good shell script on how to ping each other. When that failed to work, we just used the GUI. When your in a large classroom, nothing is going to work. Jerry didn't count that against the class. Jerry is our Unix guy. He has over 25 years of experience in shell scripting. I paid attention in class. I'm not like the others. I had my graduation ceremony. I going to graduate from high school at least.

New vistors must of seen the enhancements I've done. Like the green and blue marble backgrounds. I came across these while surfing the Internet for backgrounds and they were perfect for my webpage then having a white background. Transparent Flash has came out this year. I knew it exists but I couldn't find a sample until today. I'll never put my background in Selteco Flash Designer again. Flash animation + background image = compressed animation (25 KB) instead of 103 KB I would have had if I included the background with the swf. Isn't new technology great!

I found a way to connect to the Internet through SuSe Linux. I bought a somewhat expensive external modem, Modem Blaster from Creative, it worked. It hooked up to my serial port. I recently had a US Robotics 56K PCI FAX Modem. The USB never showed up until I attached the external modem to the computer. Then it showed up. I used YaST to connect to my ISP. Then the USB modem does work in SuSe and I've spent a lot of extra money for nothing.

I found a game that copies the card dealing games in Final Fantasy 8 called Questra RPG Legends. I don't know why they called it that? Anyway it's the same game in FF8. I've been playing it. It's not good enough to put on my game list though. I get beaten most of the time merely because I loose a Diablo right way. Diablo is a good card in this game.

Xbox - Unreal Championship review (2003-05-16 11:34)GAME FEATURES |

Developer : Epic Games

A.) good graphics, the return of Unreal Tournament

Publisher : Atari

B.) 14 levels to play with in Deathmatch, however this is small comparison with UT2003's 30 levels with a growing amount of new maps on the Internet.

Released on June 22, 2002

C.) Smoothed out gameplay. This is a fun game for lan parties. It is one of the first XBOX games that will be broadband able.

D.) questionable gameplay ????

Type : First Person Shooter

I played Unreal Tournament ever since the demo came out in 1999. If you haven't already played this game and seen Unreal Tournament 2003 for the PC, you know that this Xbox game is the exact same thing. Unreal Tournament is the only game that I thought would go through with my buddies and have a blast playing. Besides some old favorites such as Diablo II, or Goldeneye 007 (N64) and Starfox (N64) This holds true with this game, but just enough, because control in this game takes some getting use too. I am really use to be able to have a mouse / keyboard when I play Unreal Tournament. The Dreamcast was set up with one when the prequel came out for it. This didn't stop me from getting the sequel. In the sequel, the graphics have improved. It was in those years that games ran in low and high resolution. In 2003 everything is in high resolution. The game plays average to above average. I have experienced the same problem with the gamecube when you don't have lock-on battle systems, it makes it harder to stay on the other teams position for that Killer shot with the use of the most important crossfire on the screen.

One thing that I dislike about the Xbox is that it has 2 buttons, black and white, and in this game they allow you to jump and crouch. Your life depends on jumping. And the annoying enemy can get an extra annoying shot off you if you don't know how to jump !!!! The railgun isn't the most powerful weapon to use. In my opinion the weapon that inflicts the most damage is the machine gun and the flak gun. Both guns shoot random bullets which helps me corner a bot and kill him (her). I can close in for the kill but a lot of the time I will be counter attacked by his friends, and that isn't good.

The level design is really good. Some of the same levels are used in UT 2003. They all have good spaces where you do sniping. The guns stay in their spots throughout the game. So everytime you have to go back to get the weapon, hence the word, camping near the best weapon. But there are exclusive Xbox deathmatch levels, and capture the flag levels. The xbox also has this exclusive mode were you go through hoops with the ball. Through it I mean. Haven't tried it out yet. It sounds that it's not that great.

While Half-life invented Capture the Flag, Unreal Tournament took it to the next level. The polygons are far superior to the PS2's Unreal Tournament. But with the blazing new faster PCs coming out every month, the UT for PC looks better on those higher priced PCs. The capture the flag is really the most popular team based operation. I personally will play the game in Deathmatch, and such is because the action is there and the solution is simple, shoot down anything in site. If your use to the Playstation controller (those of you who played Unreal Tournament for PS2) know that the xbox controller is big and bulky. It feels like a cheap Gamecube controller. Which makes me wonder if Microsoft just copied the Gamecube controller so it could bring many Nintendo developers to it. While that can't be true, I think the part where the Gamecube controller is probably the worst controller for First Person Shooters simply because you have to aim one thumbstick to adjust while the other most right thumbstick is to aim. What the console counterpart should be used for is to play with Friends. People are starting to own their second computer. In my house, we have 4 computers ranging from 1 to 3 years old. Only 2 can run UT2003 decently.

Team Deathmatch

Team deathmatch is my favorite kind of mode (with no mods). In Unreal Tournament this is the absolute way to start your game. You can get skills in this mode to play in story mode (which you defeat bosses along the way with a gun) But Team Deathmatch you can also play with your friends, which is cool. Unreal Championship does not come with as many deathmatch maps as Unreal Tournament 2003. The reason, every map had to be good enough to be put on the Xbox. The maps are dynamic and very colorful. The game runs at 60 FPS so there are not too many slow downs. There are a lot of passageways in these Deathmatches, so you can not easily find the enemy because they do travel as a team. Once you track them down, then all hell breaks loose. The enemy can loop around the back and shoot you in the back as you advance forward and break their line, it's a squad that is lethal and you need to seek and destroy, much like Bombing Run.

Bombing Run

A new mode found only in Unreal Tournament 2003 and Unreal Championship. Some gamers will argue that this is the best mode of the whole game. On novice setting all your squad does is seek and destroy, much is very straight forward! If you team has a ball, their be this indicator which shows who has the ball. The objective is to get the ball to the other teams place. AI is pretty good. Your the squad leader so it's your choice to either stay back and perfect your zone or go out and attack. I say definably go on Defense. The chances are that the other team is doing the same thing. It's not stealth like in Tom Clancy's Splitter Cell, but is actually the opposite.

Summing up Unreal Championship

Graphics

10.0

Excellent graphics. This game excels in the graphics department. No game looks better on the Xbox then the Halo franchise, but this game comes in a close second. It has vast environments. The character models are pretty good. However the bitmap textures has been smoothed out a little on the character models. Epic games did an exceptional job on this game in this area. No game besides Halo and a few others are able to stand up to it.

Control

8.5

The Xbox has 2 joysticks. One is to turn the character at a 360° angle, the other joystick is suppose to turn the weapon at a 360° angle. Together Epic Games created a decent gameplay experience. I don't like reaching down for the tiny black and white buttons below the diamond shaped button pattern on the xbox controller. It sucks.

Orginalism

9.0

Quake, Unreal Tournament and Half-Life are all the same when it comes to multiplayer. They all have Team Deathmatch, Deathmatch, and Capture the Flag, the 3 main essentials in a first person shooter. UT Championship is no different from these. The gamer can get health packs, weapon powerups, adrenaline for his fighting fury as he progresses through the levels. First Person Shooters are such a solid concept and aren't dying out, in fact their getting more popular then ever before!

Sound Effects

9.0

The mature gamer might not be bothered by the gore in the game, or the extreme Ahhs and getting hammered with a machine gun. But the game does have bad language in it. IF you have this game at a higher volume, which I know most of you probably will, you just don't want teammates or the enemy crying out endless amounts of profanity at you. You can always turn the option "Mature Taunts"

Replayibly

8.0

The game in the end is questionable. No doubt that Unreal Tournament is a good franchise to own. But Unreal Tournament came short in maps and playable characters. What you have is well developed. You have plenty of wide open spaces to have 1:1 duels. 2:1 duels, 3:1 duels or purely mass suicide for yourself. And the enemy will outsmart you by running away. Of course a lone player controlled by the computer not wounded enough is going to find their teammates and then I say "Ouch!" Some AI controlled players in this game will stand it out and bring death to himself.

Xbox - Sega GT 2002 (2003-05-17 11:35)

| GAME FEATURES |

Developer : A2

A.) Enhanced graphics over Dreamcast's Sega GT Special Edition. The xbox version is a sequel to that game.

Publisher : Sega

B.) Ability to listen to songs off hddrive is cool.

Released on March 20, 2002

C.) 12 tracks to play around with. Tracks can be mirrored to add to the gameplay experience.

D.) Sega's only car racing game of 2002. Crazy Taxi 3 isn't a racing game.

Type : Racing

Sega makes one hell of a racing title. So this game is above average. Every game I buy is above average. I don't know Xbox too well so it was a catch 22 to pick the right game. I'm not rich, I can't sample all the Xbox titles at once. This game was made exclusive to Xbox. If you know of Project Gotham and McCollens Rally 3 for Xbox. This is the other high profile racing title. It's been developed by a developer's house at SEGA. It has Japan written all over it. Although Xbox is made in America. The once popular videogame maker. Eh, getting popular videogame maker. Sega is not out of the race, they are here to stay. They have the money to deliver state-of-the-art videogames.

The cars are still very polished. It's hard to debate which game gets a perfect score of 10 in the graphics department. It'll probably be the upcoming Midnight Club sequel for Xbox. You can tell that the game was developed near the end of 1st generation xbox games. So in English, the game looks better than the latest demos for the Gamecube. The first generation is graphics that the Xbox had when it first came out on September 15, 2001. Microsoft didn't see a direct effect on microsoft sales due to 9.11. It was way better than the PS2 in terms of graphics from the very beginning. Both consoles render differently and Xbox has 4 times the Bus speed in its cache. Sega created a game that was well compared to Project Gotham, the other game that I have. The background is really cool. It has sun spots that are more realistic than PS2s. However since the Xbox does have extra graphical power (every gamer should know this) and the Xbox does a cleaner job with the sky. As you can see I got the second version. The game disc I own had some bug fixes. So far the control is loose. You have to apply the brakes in all tracks. I like loose control. How fast does your car turn at 200 MPH? Same deal in this game. You can't turn very far at full throttle. Sega GT has all the tracks at the start. Some of these type of racers have locked tracks / cars. This only has unlocked cars. In arcade mode the simulation. There are a lot of cars. Who cares where they come from, I can drive it. If I can drive it, I'll have fun! Somehow, Sega managed to out all of those cars on screen without slowing down. This is stellar as it is right here. The game runs at a blazing 60 frames per second all the time.

The soundtracks are purely European. Professional dance remixes. Not exactly trance, but it doesn't sound like rock neither. Not the kind of music that belongs to our pop culture. Some of these songs are even good in a scary way. I am sure that Sega got these songs from somewhere. They be genius' if they would of mixed it themselves. They've must of taken it from the top charts in the UK / Europe and put it all into their game. In English though, it's gran tranismo music. Most songs have a good beat to them. I give the music a 10/10 since you can also put your favorite music and have it play during the game. The game even shuffles the music for you. The music can be in MP3 or WAV format. Summing up Sega GT 2002

9.3

Excellent graphics. I am a new xbox gamer so I'll probably think that all those graphics are really cool regardless. But yes, the difference between xbox and Gamecube is noticeable. This game has a lot of high resolution art on xbox. It hasn't quite reached the 2nd generation type xbox games. (The ones with more effects on screen while still supporting more pixels in the animation) So in English, it looks the same as Gran Turismo 3 A Spec for the PS2. Ok, so that's great!

Control

8.5

It is easy to control the vehicle. But it's hard to master it. Aka. skidding all over the place is bad. This game features what is called the draft effect. When you're directly behind a car you get less resistance between the two, so you become closer.

Originalism

7.0

This game is definably a genuine rip of the PS2 game "Gran Turismo 3 : A Spec". But Sega does an excellent job at it.

Sound Effects

8.0

Nice engine sounds. The sounds of the engine are excellent Soundtracks are ok.

Replayably

Good section of maps and cars. With 25 soundtracks that come with the game alone! It's a good game. Not the best. The best so far is the Dreamcast title Test Drive V Rally. I love that game. But defiantly look at it. The game has been out for a year. The price of this game can always go down

Wow, I really got in. Amazing. My website must mean something to someone. I would of got the certificate if my dad would of gave his credit card out. Because of credit card fraw on the Internet he wouldn't of done it. But that is amazing. Look at the Golden Web Awards of the month of May to see my webpage listed.

I found this awesome Anime page by "Wings of Trinity" Something about the html that has been bothering me. It looks nice, but all the photoshop animation is much more superior then mine. What's up with the audio soundtrack? How did she get it so compressed? I haven't search for fan art for a long while. I forgot how good it's gotten. I've also been at IcyBrians.com. All the good artists in the world have drawn spectacular cartoons on the Internet. His collection is pretty good.

A.) enhanced gameplay over last years version

Publisher : EA Sports

B.) Better soundtrack then last year .

C.) Play (and Unlock) all Winston Cup drivers. Plus play my favorite driver Dale Earnhart, that's right it's like he never died in this game.

Type : Racing

Nascar Thunder 2003 feels different then Nascar Thunder 2002. When your on the track and in your turn, you'll realise that the game is looser then before. I've own Nascar Thunder 2002 for only a short while before I gave it to a videogame dealer for cash. So this is the 2nd Nascar game I've own. The other is Nascar '99 for the N64. And you don't get as much comment and music in Nascar '99 then on laserdisc with Nascar Thunder. However the N64 counterpart was so solid. Both games covered the same features. They both had a involving single player mode. The N64 game was realistic for a N64 title, but cars don't crash then take flight for 3 seconds from a head on collision of another car. Inside you get the more realistic bump and loose control scene in the game. Personally I did not really like Nascar Thunder 2002. It had country music in the title. Although it didn't make me croak, I did seem to like the modified standards EA Sports put in the car before I took it for a test drive at Daytona or Darwin International Speedway. The game gives you the best medications for your Nascar. Like in 2002 it took me 2 tries to go in first place in Rookie mode in Single Player Mode. Everything was set up exactly how it would be if you had a chance to win. Rockie Modes easy. So I tried changing the settings, and since I don't know jack about Nascar medications, I did worst on my runs most of the time. It's a fun game, obviously visually things got better from the N64 game to the Xbox. More effects on screen. It is just to bad that EA Sports had the Nascar Thunder 2003 Edition at it's lowest common denominator. Thus it looks a lot like the PS2 version of the game. Do buy it though, it's the top rated Nascar game ever on a console. Just because it's newer and has flashier graphics by no means mean it's the best in the racing genre. Though Nascar Thunder 2003 runs up there in the one of the best. If I had a choice between F1 2003 and Nascar Thunder 2003, I would pick Nascar Thunder 2003 merely because it is an American Motor Sport and I've been paying attention to Nascar more then World Grand Prix. But then again there is "football" errr Soccer that I really enjoy playing game wise.

Summing up Nascar Thunder 2003

Graphics

8.5

Nascar Thunder 2003 looks as if EA Sports took a backstep towards the game that came out in 2001. In the game, you get pixels in the animation which shouldn't of really been their. But it looks like they've added pixels and for scenery onto their game. Example would be the people. they look like small puppets in this game and the other game, but somehow the crowd looks more lively and more realistic. So now your asking me does the game look better or worst then Nascar Thunder 2002. I would have to say worst. When we say that EA Sports taking a back step, I saying it still looks above average still after 2 year gap between the first and second Nascar game for XBOX. I doesn't look as good as Madden football or some exclusive racers for Xbox.

Control

9.0

It is easy to control the vehicle. But it's hard to master it. Aka. skidding all over the place is bad. This game features what is called the draft effect. When your directly behind a car you get less resistance between the two, so you become closer.

Orginalism

9.5

I haven't seen Nascar games in my home since 1999 so I would like to say that this is ingeniously created franchise is number one in my book. Even more then Project Gotham or Sega GT 2002.

Sound Effects

10.0

The engine sounds sound more realistic then any Nascar game I've encounter. In my option the sound effects are perfect.

Replayibly

8.0

I'm don't follow Nascar as much, so I become disinterested in this game. The game is cool! But I like the street racing that comes with Sega GT 2002. Seeing cars that go around on a track isn't as interesting as curving, real replicas of Touring car tracks else where.

(2003-05-22 23:29)

I'm working on a flash animations through Swish! again. Finding templates off the web that you can edit has become rare. I am without any good animations. Except for the one that I already have. I was looking for a high tech banner. However I found a program called MixFX and this program unlike counterparts makes decent images with the speical effects it has with it. Two days ago I've downloading both Jasc Paint Shop Pro 8 and Selteco BannerShop Animator 3.0. Both are state-of-the-art image editors. PSP8 has add-on packages that are big in size. I don't know when I'm going to download them, but I will eventually. I've updated the cracks.zip too. I added my class pic to the gallery. Sorry about the low resolution. I had to make it small enough so people could download it within 2 minutes.

Xbox - Project Gotham review (2003-05-24 11:38)| GAME FEATURES |

Developer : Bizzare Creations

A.) 4 tracks already unlocked. 4 cars to drive and a 6 paint options. See more in the review

Publisher : Microsoft

B.) The 4th best looking racing game on Xbox as of today.

Released on Sept 15, 2001

C.) About the same exact gameplay in SEGA GT

D.) Poor selection of songs.

Type : Racing

The good old Dreamcast had some amazing titles on the racing realm. For example, I have Test Drive Le Mans and Test Drive V Rally. V Rally is the best racer I ever played. That's because I liked Mario Kart 64, then I got into Sega Rally 2. For a very short time I was into Tokyo Extreme Racer and now I got into Sega GT 2002. I disagree with the Project Gundam case when the game isn't my favorite. The case says "The best racing game for Xbox" Midnight Club II is around the corner and is looking good. But I like Sega GT 2002 better for Xbox. So what does Sega GT 2002 have that Project Gundam doesn't. More tracks. Better music. A lot of little things such as the lighting effects are exactly the same. SEGA GT 2002 came out 6 months after Project Gundam. I don't find the driving point system annoying. I just have a problem with it. I can average 430 points on this game. The game has obsyicles such as cones that you must avoid. If you don't you use points. If you ram the wall you loose more point. It adds up. I suppose you can ignore it and put in cheat codes. But that is missing the point. I just don't like it as much. It could be that the game is so well designed that I'm missing the whole prospective. I have been in console racing since 1998. Since then I went though 4 more consoles.

Summing up Project GothamGraphics

Excellent graphics. I've seen the sequel on the Internet so I have to say that these graphics are sub-standard in 2003. Like Sega GT 2002. Fortunately, there hasn't been any slow downs. This game features cone motion. The game is full of them. This is where the cones, when knocked by the race car, spin and turn. It's noticably good when the camera zooms in, it spins, then zooms out. The sun flare is also a enhanced feature that looks very good on the Xbox. This has been done for many years on simulation games. But this game makes it look really good. The Xbox is running at a higher resolution. Which means more animation on screen. In english. Microsoft didn't hold back much when they've created the xbox. Because Microsoft is a monopoly and has a net value of a couple billion. They have the money to spend on big projects like this one which costs 100 million to make. So 50 times 1 million is 1 dollar. So out of 5 the 5 dollars it cost to develop and package the game. Microsoft is getting 15 dollars or more dollars back. So Microsoft puts that into other expensive projects like Project Gundam 2.

Control

8.5

The control is loose like Sega GT 2002.

Orginalism

7.0

This is the aging concept of street racing. Driving for points gets annoying, but I can ignore it. Its not too annoying. It just tells you how good of driver you really are. The high scores are left blank. So I compete against myself. An advanced gamer could probably be able to play this game without hesitation.

Sound Effects

10.0

The engine sounds are great. The sound of the engine skips like a real engine would when you down shift. Plus the Dolby Digital enhancement makes the sound effects live and crystal clear.

Replayibly

9.0

Dispite the fact that I don't care much about the point system. The game delievers a awesome slow down and speed up drill that you repeat a lot in the game. It doesn't get boring. Using the hand brake to add points is very cool if it is done correctly. The game has a stuning replay mode which does all kinds of camera angles. Closeups are also equally eye popping.

(2003-05-25 23:28)

Nintendo has come to my attention that the company is going to release "The Ulitmate Collection" sometime later this year. This is extremely interesting to me since N64 games including Star Fox, Goldeneye, Super Mario 64, Mario Kart, Orcania of Time, and Banjo Kazooie. No these games won't feature great graphics, but they'll feature other enhancements that were bugs in the orginal N64 games. No such news. We know that Orcania of Time was released earlier this year. Now that game is becoming appart of the Ultimate Edition Collection. All these games will start at 25 dollars. It might me a long run, but Orcania of time could sell 500,000 copies added the 2 million it sold in 1998. Is this worth the dollar when you have the Nintendo 64 game already at home? I'll let you decide.

Guess what everyone. I got an Xbox today. I was excited for a little while. I got one with a modem in it. I was looking for a web browser but their isn't any for Xbox yet. So I also got 2 new games, used copies of Sega GT 2002 / Jet Grid Radio and Project Gundam. I am going to get Halo soon. I've heard it's an amazing game. Read my Xbox Review page. I've also updated my Dreamcast review page. I added Nintendo to the Greatest Developers of all time.

What do I really want to spend my money on? I am having money come in from offerings my parents give me on Lunch money for school. I do usually spend that cash on games. My latest xbox game Moto GP, I got for 14 dollars at the used videogame store. I am looking for more xbox games. Or do I want to reinsert a soundcard into my other pc. It got zapped with static electricity. That would only cost me 20 dollars to replace it. Or do I wait a little longer and get a Action Replay for Xbox. With that I can download saved videogames off the Internet and put it on xbox with use of network cable linking the xbox with my hub to my pc.

This week is my last week of high school. What do I do then? To answer that question, I don't know. Well I'm planning to go to a technical college in New Richmond, Wisconsin to see if I can find a CISCO class to continue being educated toward Unix Software Technican. CISCO is a company, I knew it was a network service that most Unix technicians have to learn before they enter a work placement. So CISCO and SUN Microsystems go head to head with each other to provide the best product. I think SUN is winning. Because they have copyrighted their own javascript called "Sun Java" and then SUN has the Solaris Operating System. So maybe when I get a job there. The world is full of opportunity. then When you loose your job from inflation, your life is then suppose to suck, because those companies are looking for inexperienced unix technicians with good GPA scores. These young adults pick up on more and do more for less money then most of the high positions. But a lot of times the lowest positions is the backbone of the company. The companies running software, like Redhat, look for new talent, which not everybody has. I'm not going to be those people with no talent.

Xbox - Moto GP review (2003-05-28 11:39)

| GAME FEATURES |

Developer : Climax

A.) 10 exciting, twisted, professional league tracks.

Publisher : THQ

B.) Nice looking graphics that take advantage of xbox hardware

Released on May 22, 2002

C.) Tight control seen only in NASCAR and grand prix games.

D.) The entire soundtrack is techno. Lame music. It is in high quality, but it's not the music I would look for in a grand prix game like this one. Not really good techno, but atleast it lets me listen to songs of the harddrive.

Type : Motorcycle Racing

I never owned a motorcycle racing game before. I've seen professional racing of this type on television. I figured that this game had to be a cross between Formula 1 World Racing and European stock car racing or "the Le Mans series" In MotoGP you get all the racers in the grand prix in 2001. The game features multible texture layers and looks more like the real thing. It hasn't become the ultimate racer for Xbox. But since xbox is low on high-quality racing titles, this game makes it seem all good.

Sometimes the Grand Motorcycle Championship can alter games to what it feels is morally right. For example, if you drive a motorcycle on slippery conditions and you lean to far to the right on a sharp right corner, it'll throw you off your bike 10 feet infront of it wasting valuable seconds and since your in last place in the championship, you only have 10 seconds to cross start after the leader.(unless your in time trials, then your time getting to start is infinite) gives you even less time when you cross the start lap 2. What I do in this game is on curves coast until I'm 90 % finishing with my turn before pressing A to accelerate. Sometimes brakes near the inner corner can save you speed and time just like the real championship races. But never brake too late or you'll oversee your bike which could mean fatal.

The training mode and the Grand Prix mode are the hardest modes in MotoGP. In training mode your bike has to swerve to the left (or right) to pass the cone and do a 180 around the last cone in 20 seconds or you repeat the process. This is not easy. In fact I never got pass it yet. It's best to do time trials until you can successfully stay on the pavement for 1 or 2 laps. The tracks, especially the replica of Le Mans, are full of sharp, dangerous, corners. In time trials, the game automatically loads your ghost (ghostly image that repeats the best lap time while you continue to race.) Racing yourself can be fun. When you leave your ghost by quitting, the ghost is saved on xbox's massive 8 GigaByte harddrive automatically.

Summing up Moto GP

Graphics

9.9

MotoGP has the best graphics I've seen in a racing title for Xbox. I seen Halo so I had to leave a point off ;) This game carries far in this area. It has cloudy days that look very detailed. The bikes themselves have several layers of detail on them. The game doesn't have any odd placed pixel or low resolution or deformed color. None at all! The rain can be really realistic while you race the game's 8 tournament tracks. It's incredible what the xbox can do. The sequel is also out.

Control

8.5

The control is loose. You must slow down before each curve to prevent oversteering. But this can easily be avoided in 3 to 4 hour practice in time trials.

Orginalism

10.0

This is the only professional motorcycle racing game I tried. It comes with a load of options. The dynamic intro is cool. And the menu with the film capture of the real motogp in the background is a nice addition. The grand prix mode is well layed out (other then that it's medium hard) It is possible to tweak your bike to make it faster / slower, turner sharper or brake sooner. It's not as hardcore as BMX, but it is still hardcore racing, European style.

Sound Effects

8.0

The game features great engine sounds

Replayibly

10.0

I could come back to this game all the time. The time trials are really exciting. It could also be that I own 3 xbox titles and got sick of my dreamcast titles. Being my choice on any xbox game I give this game a perfect 10.

5.6 June

Officially out of high school :) (2003-06-01 23:44)

I am officially out of high school. I feel like a free person. I can driver where ever when ever I want with the exception of cost of gas. First thing I'm going to do is get to know my xbox more. I went out today to get registared with CISCO at CVTC.

I also added all my work on my successful first & second website of consoles from 1999 - 2002. I did a bad thing when I took this webpage offline, I was getting some good readings on my hit counter, some 10,000 hits in one and one / half years it was online. It was my last website to be listed on Google.com and was originally on the first and second page of "Gamecube Reviews" results at Yahoo.com. Some of the viewers will find this quite interesting. This was a outline of the progress of Gamecube, Dreamcast, Playstation 2 and Xbox. I can compress my HTML to 1/4 it's size so I can easily fit it on this geocities account. To get my compression unity go to

HTML Compact's homepage

. To access just click on one of my links in the Red Dragon Productions (originally NDX Productions 1999 - 2001) section on the left menu on this page. These pages load very fast because their entirely text. Notice the effort I made with text effects and table borders. All my work went into them! Check them out!

Anyway I been looking up PHP forms to add to my site. This all started when I noticed my email form would not work, and I got it straight off geocities.com. So I tried having a separate html to show up on my email.html so that javascript of different origins won't effect the email form. It still didn't work. So then I got into php3 (a form of html script) in forms. I found a couple of websites that allow you to download their software. I want to sign up to a service like bravenet. But none of them seem to use a form of php. Php is much more dynamic then html message boards. My next version of my website may be written in php source code instead of all html and javascript. For now I can atleast make my guessbook and forums using php technology. I find that hosting your own message form is easily if you want to take up one megabyte of space. So instead of going through bravenet, I also signed up at ezboard. Unlike bravenet, you can talk to people and find forums easily through their database. My user name is

Graduation Party (2003-06-09 23:44)

I did a couple things in the last days. I've updated my first javascript menu since the one I had in 2001. Which was worthless junk and only worked in Internet Explorer. Now I have Xara Menu Maker and that makes really good menus. All I have to do is update to javascripts which I just have to load to my website. No changing javascript on my html. I went to my first session of Cisco at CVTC. This was alright. I spent 4 hours there. Congraduate me, not many adults can come out of high school and go straight into college. Hey, it's summer vacation. I did the usual. On that day I read this online tour, extremely well layed out. They have the entire class in Flash from 1999. Updated in 2000 I expected. But they had it online for 2 years. I took a test and got a 80 % on the first day I took it. It had a lot of computer terms. The tests are activated for 24 hour period and then it shuts off. Most of these guys taking Cisco are retired and are taking the class to pass the time. Two of them were Airforce Computer Engineers who wanted to say up to date with cutting technology. Next year I'm going to WITC in New Richmond and they have the State-of-the-Art computer lab and equipment for CISCO classes. I mean some of the techneques programmers do when connecting to other computers (LAN) or to the Internet (WAN) is state of the art. WITC must of upgraded to a full T3 Digital Cable Connection.

I also had a Graducation Party. This is were all the family comes here. Bob came!!! He's my best friend and we talked about mainly how each other were doing. This was mainly a family get-together. And my friend comes in the door. Bob's a real nice guy. I known him in Boy Scouts. He changed. He has metal sticking out of his head now. He a year older then I am and been out in the world of work for about 3 years. But he's a smart kid. Pictures of him are in my gallery page. Oh and I haven't mentioned Dan, my school consoler on this website before, he came too. My cousin David and his brother Brian came too. David's got into the Navy. He has a higher GPA then me. Although I graduated 18th in my class. Somewhere between 18 and 21. I got all As and Bs in high school. I took Economics, Algebra, Language Arts 11, My reading skills got immensely better. But I seem to have a bad memory. All my family members know me. So that's cool. See I'm usually more aggressive when I'm by myself.

Since Dad and I are going to Boston next Thursday, we had to go and see if I could get my camera fixed. Usually it has a higher resolution with flash. All my webpage pics are taken from that camera. The flash doesn't work, so I had a hard time getting good pictures. Luckily I have software on my PC that can enhance photos to a very good level. It's definally the flash on my camera though, we'll get it repaired after the trip to Boston. It's a Sony 4 megapixel camera so it's really reliable. I am waiting until 2004 to get a Sony 6.5 megapixel off the Internet where I can find them really cheap. It's already on my wish list. I'm also trying to get a 128 MB videocard (ATI Radeon 9500 FAST!!!!) off Tigerdirect.com to update my other PC so I can run The SIMS faster. Then I can update both PCs for 130 dollars. Both PCs have 386 MB of DRRAM and are plenty fast. I'm looking at updating to 512 DRRAM in a few months (also on my wish list) My monthboard can support 2.3 GB Athlon CPU. I'll probably one buy the end of the year I could be able to get one for 130 bucks. I can interchange the CPU that fits on that computer and put it on my other computer. Next thing I'll probably be doing is setting money aside for a faster motherboard so I can stick a faster CPU down the road. Then I have to make room for the Panasonic 24X DVD ROM Burner. It's going to be sweet to be able to burn my own DVDs.

e've returned from Boston. This is my first trip far from home since 2000 went two places. One in South Dakota to see Mt. __ and then to Michigan to go canoeing with the same school. That was all in the past. So what did I do in Boston? Dress up in a suit to go with my dad on his "Circle of Champions" meeting. Dad and I stayed at a hotel for 4 days. I brought my Xbox on the plane. I probably played Xbox 5 hours total when I was there. I played Moto GP. The hotel had a 32" television so I had a fun time playing my games on it. Dad got me Halo, which everyone knows as one of the best Xbox games available (Halo is coming out for PC in 2 months) I went to a couple open dinner / meetings. I seen the Boston Pops. They were good. Well they were so good that we couldn't even begin to make negative opinions about them. However the composer (who ever he may be) did some funny yet annoying taunts while he composed the musicians. We walked back in the rain after the last song. Boston Pops had 3 encores. You think the song ends, but it continues. Boston Pops were good, so I didn't compain about how much they've played. The wind currents keep the city from smelling like air pollution. The city had many old buildings that were remodeled into small businesses. I saw the USS Constitution (Replica of 1776 Vessel used to defeat the British during the Revolutionary War.) The replica was modernized and had electricity on the gun deck. I forget the name, but a real World War II destroyer was stationed next to the USS Constitution. I had a chance to go to the nearest GameStop to get Halo. Then on the way home I was randomly picked to be handed searched at the airport in Boston. I won't shut up, that's why I got picked or who knows.

Anyway I've updated this website in the Gamecube and Xbox sections. I've added new headers. What a waste of time, but I thought it'll look good so that's why I changed it. All headers are 1.5 KB or less. I did most of my updating right before I went to Boston. I don't really have time to add Cisco information. People go to college for that. They don't need to get it off my site. However, I'm going to update the javascript menu you see on top of this page with more links. The night before I traveled it to Boston, I went to Billards place /w friends in River Falls to play some pool. Luigi Pizza makes great stuffed Pizza too.

I seems like Sony has a death grip on Nintendo and Microsoft, but they sure not going away. Nintendo and Microsoft are seriously planning to release an Gamecube 2 and Xbox 2 in two years. I grabbed a lot of this information off SPonG.com. When will I ever be sacifide with what I have? Am I going to support the precessors of current consoles. Why?

I've been trying to get Satellite Interent a reality in my house. It's faster then dial up. So far I'm at least talked about it. But my parents want to wait. I said I would happily sacrifice my allowance to cover costs of Internet.

Boston, Mass vacation (2003-06-22 05:15)

I went to Boston for three days as part of a business trip. I saw the Cambridge side Galleria to eat California Pizza Kitchen and I bought Halo: Combat Evolved from a Gamestop. I saw a Boston Pops play. I either heard the Baby Boomer Bash or Pops Light Classics when there. I stayed in a Hilton hotel. All the time there, I played Xbox including Unreal Championship, Halo, Project Gotham, and Rallisport Challenge. The stay was okay. I looked outside and saw city night life. I went to one dance club by myself and his selection sounded average compared to European counterparts.

Blizzard Entertainment, the creator of World of Warcraft and Diablo 2, has increasingly interest me. I have been playing Diablo 2 for more than 2.5 years. I stayed off it for 5 months until I started up again. Yesterday I joined a big chat at Gamespy.com about World of Warcraft. Gamespy has a Warcraft Portal. I've been playing Diablo 2 and on a private channel on Battlenet I've been learning actually how big World of Warcraft is going to be. At first, I thought it would be "Warcraft 4" playing like Warcraft III would with war tactics, seeking and destroying military bases. Yesterday I heard that World of Warcraft would be much like Dungeon Siege where it would be both a massive Single Player mode game and have a massive multiplayer mode covering the same amount of land like Dungeon Siege. I like Dungeon Siege and is one of my favorite PC games, so naturally I would be driven towards World of Warcraft. World of Warcraft looks state of the Art, much like Dungeon Siege did when it came out. Star Wars Galaxies is coming out this year, and is another MMORPG (massive multiplayer online role playing game) Everquest 2 is another, but I'm not much into that game. So I've been checking the previews of that game and playing online with Diablo 2 the past 2 days.

I've recently got the Action Replay for Xbox. This allowed me to continue playing Halo. I can now download online saves (which was done through the Dreamcast as well) It's kind of idiotic for me to discover that when you hold down X on the Xbox controller that you can switch guns which were laying on the ground and I couldn't figure out how to arm them. I always had a hard time believing that I had no ammo in the middle of the game. Especially the one when Pyro goes into the spaceship (the end of level 2) has his to find another way out, before this team gets killed.

I've also added a slightly different design of my webpage. (version 3.3) I thought with every new version, I can change my logo with it. I've added Blizzard Entertainment to "Greatest Game Developers of all Time Page 2". I've added links to my menu drop down so check that out too if you haven't already. I found out that a major javascript bug is keeping my site from being seen in Mozilla and Netscape. That's the error message you get in Internet Explorer. It's not html code that's the problem! When I uncompress my html, it shows up fine, and show up in all browsers, but when I compress the html, half the graphics won't even work in either Netscape or Mozilla! That sucks. I know that compressed html helps the page load quicker. But no one is giving me feedback, so I don't know if people like compressed html or not. The compressed html compressed the hypertext up to 20 % of actual size.

I've made some interesting changes to this website. Whether or not you like this update a lot then the text layout I had a week ago. However, I recently noticed that this javascript was making Dreamweaver act funny. So that javascript text effects off entirely and added javascript menus. I hope you like it. I've tested the web browsers and It works on Internet Explorer and Mozilla for sure. One bug I haven't got out was why before in the last version I could compressed the html with HTML compressor and now I can't. It has to do with the banner. I must of took a wrong turn somewhere. I find a way to fix it in v3.3.2 :) I don't care much right now, because it works like it's suppose too. The webpage actually loads faster second time around in the uncompressed format.

I posted a message on my message board asking if you like the website one week ago better then this version. I passed the 13,000 hits marker and this site isn't even a year old. It's my videogame reviews receiving the most hits. I even have a pic of the old version (v3.2.1 60 KB) I have the old version saved on my harddrive. Just tell me if you like this logo or the other logo. This logo is in high resolution, the other one is medium resolution!

I've taken some time to go over to the college and it's good. When you first beat students, their all died quiet. I mean I dont' know, the instructor who laid out all the information wasn't that bad. I bolted, but that was from immaturity. I hate em choices where you sign up for yourself. So it goes.

Bob and I had a lan party at my house. It was ingenious. We were playing Dungeon Siege and it couldn't of been better. We both started out new characters. It didn't work out that way. I kept getting false connections. I had to copy the game's contents off one harddrive so I could put it on another. Then I wouldn't get error messages. I wish I though of that earilier. So we also played Baldur's Gate Deadly Alliance for consoles.

The Mouser Electronics Expansion project in Mansfield, Texas presented a unique challenge: The 231,800 SF project was built in close proximity to <http://bulldozer.comze.com> several hundred Mouser employees and several million dollars worth of sensitive inventory and equipment in the warehouse and administrative departments. This required us to employ creative techniques and expanded construction safety protocols to ensure that Mouser employees were able to conduct their business safely and without interruption, and to avoid interference to power, water and Internet/Telephone systems.

This technical paper describes how we addressed the challenge of conducting an extensive construction project in close proximity to ongoing business operations and employees to deliver an award-winning project.

I've changed back to the full text layout. The javascript I made with Xara didn't feel right. The Internet is full of text navigational bars with no java script, so there can't be much difference between this. I seen javascript used in navigational bars, but these are most popular horizontally. I think people like seeing what their looking at, not searching between gifs to find the right header. So why did I change it. Firstly I thought the navigational bars would look cool, but after I stared at them for a while, I realized how out-of-stake they looked with the rest of the webpage. Plus my page has errors. I had syntax errors ever since I've put in the top navigational bar. Some html script is IE dependant. If I made a simple webpage with javascript, it wouldn't be fun at all.

Besides, because we all know Microsoft is a monopoly in the Silicon Business, most people are using IE anyway. I checked up on the Bravenet stats again. The site tells me what parts of the country they've came from, how often they've visited, what browser they were using, etc. So I know for a fact that the majority is still using Interent Explorer.

I've been working on the Music page again. Added a couple bands while enjoying my recently upgraded pc(s). I've recently gotten Nvidia Geforce 4 Ti 5400 128 bit bus speed. I really thought I would see a difference between that and my 64 bit ATI Radeon 9500 and their isn't much difference at all. I image that I'm getting somewhere around 90 frames per second at 1124/840 on my Geforce 4 and 60 frames per second on my Radeon with the same resolution. The game I'm playing is Dungeon Siege. I've tried out that new Copperhead siegetand and I didn't like it. My friends thought it was cool. But I think it's not.

I'm trying to get caught up in CISCO classes, I'm behind. The course has been online for 3 years now. <http://cisco.netacad.net/public/index.html> is where I sign in. The page is rather uninteresting because theres not many links to access when your not a member.

Guess what everyone. I dug myself a hole and it'll be more expensive to I need to dig myself out of it. I hate myself for it. I had a technician install a new Athlon XP in it. And my screen boots up normally until the boot loader comes up (I have both WinXP and Linux installed) This motherboard that is installed is suppose to be compatible with all Athlon XP 2600. When you install Windows, it first loads a prewindows operating system so it can detect the hardware and install windows probably. My first guess is that when StarTech installed my new processor, Athlon XP 2.2 Ghz, that the operating system can't detect my cpu. So bottom line, I spent a lot of money so a experienced technician could properly install my processor and now I'm going to have to spend money on a 20 GB harddrive. Doesn't that suck? If the possibility of frying my motherboard, but then how could the Linux Boot Loader even show up? I'll know if Windows XP installation on a new harddrive installs completely.

If you haven't noticed I'm now in the beta of version 4.0. Everything is knew in v4.0. I like to keep tabs on website versions because it feels like your advancing in website appearance. I liked the simplity of it so far. My last version of my old website is now known as v3 Alpha or "Final Version" I did some work in "Ian's RPG Guild" The RPG Guild looks exactly like the front page. I wrote my own summery on Dungeon Siege and Neverwinter Nights on the front pages. I spent 3 hours on that part, I hope you like it.

Known Bugs / Sytanx Errors in My Website v4.0

- Xara navigational bar has limited compatabily, thus all the syntax errors. In all web browsers have to read html v4.0 and javascript on to be able to read the javascript menu. AKA IE4.0 can't view this website.
- my website v4.0 is full of meta tags. They are all harmless.

I started a new website at Internet DJ. This is a underground public access mp3 site created for members. It's free and you get free space to provide mp3s and a free static ip. I put two songs on there I did a remix of Super Mario Bros and Legend of Zelda with Acoustica MP3 Audio Mixer 2.46. I'm a Okay Disc Jockey, but their still work to be done. I can do this by recording various beats off other music and remixing it together on one program like Acoustica. I like getting low cost shareware tools so I do get jipped on retail boxes.

I was spell checking my website yesterday. It's a lot of time to spend on a webpage, but I have nothing better to do. So my Gamecube / Dreamcast / Playstation / Xbox Reviews pages should be more readable. I've added two reviews to SNES review page with Crono Trigger, Final Fantasy III, Secret of Mana, Seiken Dunsenue 3 (legend of mana 2.) Most of this you heard before. I actually do play these games, but through emulation. If you want these roms I suggest you downloading iMESH v4.1 and downloading the roms yourself. A good SNES emulator is SNES 9x.

Here are some sites for downloading some remixes of famous Videogame like Super Mario Bros, Diablo and my favorites, Final Fantasy I, II, III, V, VII, VIII, IX, X, and X-2. Once you find MP3s on the Internet like these, midi just fade away in my mind. Remix.Overclocked.org Chronicles - Crono Cross / Crono Trigger Music

I also added favorite games / favorite characters to my about author section of my homepage. They are of course going to be RPGs. You have to click on the link to find out what they are.

I recently been following up on Final Fantasy XI for the PC. Normally you won't see Final Fantasy title on other platforms. But now you see Final Fantasy XI for the PC and Final Fantasy Crystal Chronicles for the Gamecube. So the latest Information I gotten about Final Fantasy XI for the USA is that it's coming up next Spring with an expansion pack on it's debut date called Final Fantasy XI : _ _ _ . However the Final Fantasy XI and it's expansion will be simply huge, I had very little information on the game except for some screen shots. Go to this site if you want to find out a little about FFXI.

I'm thinking of building a Final Fantasy site. Or I can just add Final Fantasy XI to my RPG Guild. Look for it in the future !!!! Normally I would be fascinated with Dungeon and Dragons theme computer games, but Final Fantasy is a dream come true. To save some time, I'll just created a new banner for Final Fantasy XI. I originally planned to devote a new website for all Final Fantasy games. I guess I'll stick to what I'm good at and that is writing reviews. Like-wise it won't be a informational site. I've seen a dozen Final Fantasy oriented websites out there. I'm just going to re-direction this site to the best links. That's what RPG fan sites usually are. In fact I'm excited for World of Warcraft, Dungeon Siege 2 and Final Fantasy XI. Did I mention I got a copy of Final Fantasy Anthony for the Playstation. I've posted my review of Final Fantasy VI on Playstation Reviews !!!!

(2003-07-18 23:25)

Much has changed. Unlike at the beginning of the year when I really wanted to change my site into something that used dynamic html. I just wanted to make it more dynamic. I am being a little greedy, because of all the modications that make all the gaming sites state of the art, I want on my site. "I want to have some of that pie too." So my site isn't just about having the latest design anymore. Okay, so it never was that way, it's just hurts too much to say how much!

I still have many ideas for version 4.0. A month ago I thought it would be entirely in flash script. So what do you get is limited text with in a enormous download for modem users. Since gaming sites are leading the way in the html script department, I just thought that version 4.0 could be part php (which I legally took from Raget.com (has free php tempates) or look like the very nice, simple, fast loading website like Gamecube 128. A Flash template is out for now. I was playing around with Macromedia Flash MX. I find that the lack of internal effects is dumb. Again the flash template is too massive to be worth a download. I've been doing some searching on PHP setups on my spear time. I've seen php used in message boards mostly. I haven't seen any difference between php and html. Go look at some php projects programmers have done for multiplatform at Sourceforge.org. I went to sourceforge downloading message boards but I could not get them to work. Your suppose to download all the files in your server file and it's suppose to automatically be working. It looks cool when other websites have it though. One in particular EZboards.

I guess there isn't anything wrong with 3.0. I'm thinking of keeping 3.0 online. I am not a sell out here, I am doing this website with no cost whatsoever. The programs I'm using are free. AKA. "My html editor is pirated though that doesn't really matter now, people have access to Dreamweaver in class rooms where you can't say that people can't make their own websites, because they can." If someone makes a PowerPoint 2002 presentation or Frontpage 2002 template, people can export their hard earned work over the Internet as a webpage with all images compressed to size. Although Mozilla Composer has the same functions as Namo Webeditor and is free! I don't know if my visitors know that or not. It's worth the download! Mozilla also has a free irc client with it too. If you like IRC, I sugess you getting a modified Mirc client called GeniusXP. It has all the functions of Mirc but it has mods that allow you to say things with CTRL-A,B,C,D, etc. I haven't really figured out what it actually does other then it's a free Mirc client.

I've downloaded the NeverWinter Nights v1.30 beta 1 patch today. The patch is large (55 MB download) I've been planning to play NWN online over the modem. I found two websites that I've added to my javascript menu :

- RPG Gamer - a website that collects Game wallpaper. Also has a small news section that talks about the rpg industry.

- Theme Doctor - If you want any kind of Windows Themes, I suggest you come to this website for Diablo 2, Elder Scrolls III Morrowind, and Neverwinter Night brand themes. I've downloaded two themes and like them very much! Download the Neverwinter Nights Desktop Theme It's awesome!

The current project I've been working on is a version of php that I've downloaded from Rignsnet.com. It is perfectly legal. This project is called Ian's RPG Guild and I've created websites on Dungeon Siege, Dungeon Siege 2, Neverwinter Nights and Diablo 2 : Lord of Distruction. It will feature some fansites. I don't know what it's going to have. I know I'm still a RPG kind of person. <

I admit that I have no previous experience with strategy guides. I have plenty experience making Game Reviews. But ever since the games including Diablo and all the Playstation RPGs I own. Such as finishing RPGS without cheats including

Final Fantasy 7

(PS1),

Final Fantasy 8

(PS1),

Tales of Dystiny

(PS1),

Eternal Darkness

(GCN),

Legend of Zelda Orcania of Time

(N64)

Dungeon Siege

(PC)

Diablo and Diablo 2

(PC)

Skies of Arcadia

(DC),

Grandia II

(DC) and my latest competition of

Legend of Zelda : Wind Waker

(GCN)

I almost had a reason to buy a Playstation 2. I just found out that Chrono Break, the 3rd installment in the Chrono Series is in process of development. I think that is so cool! I've enjoyed Chrono Cross for Playstation. I believe with the new Final Fantasy X-2 and .Hack 2 coming out, I couldn't believe how much the Playstation 2 graphics improved since Grand Thief Auto 3 came out. I believe Playstation 2 is in the 3rd generation of development where games pretty much maxed out it's hardware.

I've also started games (but not finished) like

Legend of Dragoon

(PS1)

Baldur's Gate II Shadow of Aims

(PC),

Neverwinter Nights

(PC),

Elder Scrolls III - Morrowind

(XBOX),

Chrono Cross

(PS),

Final Fantasy III

(SNES9x)

Chrono Trigger

(SNES9x)

Secret of Mana

(SNES 9x),

Legend of Mana

(PS1)

Legend of Zelda : Link to the Past

(SNES)

That's a lot of Playstation RPGs

. I even own

Final Fantasy 9

(PS1),

Lunar II

(PS1),

Xegagears

(PS1),

Seiken Denestsu 4

(PS1 (Seiken Denestsu is Japanese for Secret of Mana)) and

Star Ocean 2

(PS1)

where I haven't even played them since I bought them. So I can call myself a RPG fan when I've completed 10 RPGs and started playing 9 RPGs, and didn't have the time to finish them. And then there is four that I own and haven't even started playing! If you want to hear my opinions, read my console reviews. <

America's Army is great. Not as great as maybe Quake III or Unreal Tournament, but still good. It's free for peeps sake!!! If your like me, you love free stuff! The game makes you feel that your at war with current Allied Ground Forces in action. If the US Army developed it, then why is it easier then most first person shooters? I'm not that hyped up for it like I am for upcoming Halo 2 for Xbox or Halo for the PC. But it has the basis of a first person shooter. Who's idea was it to develop this game? You can download it at their website for free. It looks a tad out of date, but it's probably the best full game you can download. If you have broadband you'll be fine, but if your dial up you'll have some trouble. I'm a college student and I like to work with wires, but on the my spare time I work on this small print makes me happy.

I added a one new section to my webpage, the Sega Saturn Review Section. It has 3 new reviews, Nights into Dreams, Shining Force III and Panzer Dragoon. I went to the used videogame store to see if therq was any copies of the old school shooter, Reliant Silvergun. Nope. No major new content. I decided I'm not going to make a dedicated Final Fantasy webpage. With the exception of Final Fantasy XI coming out, I really only beaten one Final Fantasy game and I do not know the series too well. I have an idea of the case of events that the Final Fantasy Saga takes place because of the Internet.

Oh I'll remind all mp3 attics that a new version of the popular enhanced audio addon (DFX) for Winamp 2x and 3x is out. Go to www.fxsound.com to download it. Then go to the crack site <http://keygen.us> to download the crack to make it freeware.

Since I didn't have a Win98 product key, a found a working key off Google. It is XJQ22-Y47QY-P8FH7-VJ9DK-HKWVW. So if you have any trouble with your installation, you've already gotten the key. Thank me later.

Back to the Internet. I've played Hyperbonia (a map off the Internet for Dungeon Siege) The map is much better then Yesterhaven because you can play in more then one difficulty. And the armor is better in this game. It's big, there is a lot of trees in this map. And some of the enemies are tough. They are really tough !!!

I found a couple MP3 sites off Google this time. MP3shits.com and Massive MP3. Both working MP3 search engines. Of course most of you know of Kazaa! What do I download? The top chart music. I downloaded the new Metallica - St Anger, and it sounds great. Oh, if you download from MP3shits.com be sure to enter »> copy metallica-st.anger.eds metallica-st.anger.mp3 in the command prompt.

What has been my last decision should of been by first decission. Ask anyone around and 90 % of them will say that they have a PS2 or want one. Well lets see me I own Dreamcast, GCN, and Xbox. I got all the cool games like Legend of Zelda - The Wind Waker for Nintendo Gamecube, and Halo and Moto GP for Xbox! But Playstation 2 has all those quality rpg titles exclusive to it. People should know about this because I'm not the first generation to grow up with videogames, their the number #1 toy in America. There is the PS2 but then there's the Gameboy Advance, the 2nd fastest selling videogame unit in America. I own one, but I haven't gotten a new game for it since 2001. I waited until 2002 to get a Playstation. Which doesn't mean much except that I waited until the console had 95 % of all the games developed for it. Right now I'm playing Legend of Dragoon. It's a pretty good RPG. I'm wondering after three hours, just when the first disc (of four!) will finally end. I'm going to have to re-write the review for Legend of Dragoon now that I'm more familiar with the game. I'm at the part where Sir Latiz meet with the King Albert and gets home safe. I only began playing it 2 days ago. I'll have it up with in the week. I'm planning to get a PS2 in January. Then I won't miss out on some unbelievable games. So what am I doing lately. Lately I ride my bike around at night. In the summer in Wisconsin, it's warm enough that you can bike without getting cold. The cool night breeze is refreshing. I have a walkman and a flashlight that I take with me. Good exercise too.

I'm only a analyst, but the Minnesota Twins went from a 8 games ahead of Kansas City Royals to 6 games behind them. The Twins also traded a power slugger to Toronto for a lead off hitter. I thought the Twins were going to do very well this year, but it back fired on them this month. The manager has managed the team too hard. He should back off a little.

I really don't know how I came across this page. I now realize that this site has the best NES and SNES reviews I've read in months if not ever. This guy really knows how to describe a game a lot better then I could. He really spent time to write his game reviews clearly. For some reason his sentence structure is so well written, that I think his game reviews compare well to that of IGN.com. Which is impressive. Check it out here. Oh and while you check out that site, you might as well check this N64 Review Site too.

I don't really go to CNN Technology section, but CNN has found it quite interesting that Disney is making a Videogame of the 1982 movie Tron calling the game Tron 2.0. I know about this a month in advance, but I don't think that Tron 2.0 for the PC is much a impact. I can always to be wrong on it. The graphics aren't state of the art but the game is kind of great. I also read that Nintendo is going to release specs on the Gamecube 2 next year. It'll be interesting which will be faster PS3 or GCN2 next Spring. Whoa!

Well I'm going to try to get a PS2 tomorrow with Bob. I'm am excited. Some how I'm going to have to find $150 dollars for a used console. I'm going to get Grand Thief Auto 3 free. But I plan to also get Gran Turismo 3 or Jak and Daxter. Sony Playstation 2 is in 5 has many homes as Gamecube. First I have to call Gamestop in Woodbury, Minnesota to see if they have one so I can reserve my copy. Then I have to go to the bank. I'm selling my PSone to Bob for 40 dollars. That should give me about 60 dollars of extra money if everything turns out. Here's hoping.

I am continue enjoying the game Legend of Dragoon from Sony for the PSone. I signed a pention at pentitionon-line.com to get the next game developed - I said

"I hope the next game is even more like Final Fantasy then the original. I want spoken dialog every cutscene! Have a female character lead the game next time. Incredible graphics is a must. Plz make it for the PS3!!! Oh yeah - hire either Camelot (Shining Force III) or Squaresoft to co-develop the next game because they rock! If there could be more then one difficulty in the sequel/prequel, that would increase the replay, but that the first game was long enough, so when I beat easy, I can replay the character I played again in nightmare when better drops when enemies are present. "

Anyway these are the games that I plan to get for PS2. If not the first time, maybe the second time I go to Gamestop.

- Summoner 2 - looks like a really cool RPG. The prequel was one of PS2's first RPGs which means it's also the best at it's time. But will I play it? I want a RPG other then Final Fantasy. This looks like a good one because it has pretty good graphics. It has a mid-evil look too it.

- Final Fantasy X. I started collecting Final Fantasy games, believe it or not, this year. I got a Playstation last year because I wanted RPGs. FFX has a unmatched gameplay combat system for a console RPG. I've been playing Dungeon Siege and Diablo 2 much longer then I've played Final Fantasy games and they have pretty good battle system. But the other games including Final Fantasy 7, 8, 9 do. Diablo 2 does. feature a ATB (Action Time Battle System) where Final Fantasy X waits because it's a turned based action RPG. Other thing I like very much is the spoken dialog in a RPG like this.
- Grand Thief Auto 3 - Quite possibily the best game for the PS2. Until Vice City came out that is. But I'm getting this game free anyhow. Have you ever stole a car before? I played GTA2 for the Playstation and it was Okay. I just heard this game is one of the best. Might as well try it out then.
- Gran Tranismo 3 - A Spec - I read the review on IGN.com and the article said that this game was packed full with over 20 tracks including 10 Rally tracks which I like since I like Rally (FIA World Rally and American Rally) and Formula One Racing games. The rest of the game sounds good too. I've played it once at Best Buy about a month ago.
- Jak and Daxter - I need a platform game in my collection and Jak and Daxter seems like a good choice because it was made by the same developer of Crash Bandicoot, Naughty Dog Software. I've heard about Jak 2 and it seems like an award winner too.
- XenoSaga : Episode I - Looks like a really cool RPG. It's like Final Fantasy X, has a real sequel with the same characters, and this saga doesn't suck like Unlimited Saga. The graphics are very good. The gameplay is better then Xenogears for PSone and the game is very long.
- Midnight Club - Looks like a really nice Street Racing title when it came out, the price is nice too only $19.99! It reminds me of Tokyo Extreme Racer for the Sega Dreamcast. Rockstar made this game so it has to have smooth control.

I went to a website discussing why PS2 is the better console of any. Click Here for Link to that page. I wrote :

"I agree with 'Gamer' to a point because a got PS2 today and I already own Xbox and GCN. Some games I gotten for Xbox are THPS4, Halo, Moto GP, Return to Castle Wolfenstine, and Project Gotham. (good racing game) I play all games listed above sparingly.

I like the Playstation controller mostly because I can play RPGs like Final Fantasy VIII and Legend of Dragoon and both are alright RPGs. The PS/PS2 controller is very comfortable. I got a Mad Catz ADAPTER that'll hook your PS2 controller directly up to your Xbox. It kicks arse! The Xbox controller is bulky like the Gamecube controller. I admit I like Moto GP for Xbox. I like the Xbox hard disk capacity so I can put my songs on it. Who needs to play songs on their console when theirs radio or cd players. I like the triggers on the Xbox though, the same as my Dreamcast. I suppose PS2 has those shoulder buttons. No doubt that PS2 duel shock is the best controller out yet. It's nothing new since I had a PSone for about a year. I'm a RPG gamer. In the last six months I beaten FFXVIII, FFXVI, Star Ocean II, Chrono Cross and I'm now on the second disc of Legend of Dragoon. So although I'm new to Sony Playstation, since then I was enjoying what Sony has to offer with their much bigger RPG category. I like Xbox more at the moment (Midnight Club 2 is out for Xbox and I have yet to get that game.) But I also paid royalty for gaming so I didn't have to decide, you guys know what that's like.

So I have all next Gen consoles. I'm playing Legend of Dragoon now. It may be another one of those save the world rpgs, but it's actually not all that different from Grandia 2. I bought Final Fantasy X and Xenosaga Episode 1, GTA 3 and Suikian III for the ps2 and I have yet to experience them. They all sound good from IGN's point of view. I was thinking of getting dark cloud and Jak and Dexter. I'm not into Metal Gear Solid or Silent Hill games even though one of them is the top 5 % action game of all time. I'll get back to this board once I "experience" the Playstation 2. "

New freeware games (2003-08-15 23:17) did a couple things added to my website. I just got a Playstation 2 three days ago. Why don't I do that. Well I got a bunch of CDRs so I can burn software on it. CDRs aren't really expensive right? So I can download as many as I want. So I found this website off google. Here are some top picks

- ParityShot 1.9

- A free side shooter with really good graphics for a free ware game. You play this girl on a broom and she shoots other witches and cats. If I didn't know better this game was based off Salor Moon. It plays well. Plenty of powerups. And the game is anime based. Game developed by Crane Software. It's a really good game!!! The first level is easy. The second level is a bit harder. There are 3 difficulties in this game. And easy isn't easy. Although it might look cute, it's really a hard game to beat on the hardest setting. Download it, you like it, honestly. Only problem is the website is in Japanese. So look for a link that says something like "parilyshot.zip" on it.

- Super Mario XP

- A Super Mario clone with has a pinch of Castlevania (looks like another Super Mario Bros Game except it's darker. I played it and it's really good.

- Little Fighter 2 - A combat game featuring fighters and you must be the last one standing. Much like PS2's, "Bouncer." At first you suck at it because the other fighters kick your butt but if you seem to know who to punch off first you'll get though stage 1. The ones who died are out which means game over for you..

I found some compression tools today. One did not work on Geocities though. One didn't work with my website at all. One I really, really liked.

1. Shrinker 1.2.1 This little program does a big job and works with all webpages because it doesn't zip any files like the others do. This means the page doesn't have to de-compress once loaded. I had trouble with de-compressing html on a iMAC because they were too slow to process. This is what I'm using on my webpage right now. For a long time I didn't use any html decompression and I realised that I only had 3.0 MB left on my server and had to do something about it. Shrinker Lite is the best program because it is FREE to use. The compressor compresses page on average 40 % on a normal webpage, 60 % if it's really long like my review pages. But how small do you want your html anyway. It will still take less time to load it then normal, no side effects. You can view the compressed format in Dreamweaver so to problem there. And it has no de-compression loading times like the other two I'm going to review although they compress up html 80 % their original size. I love this program. Webpage builders must have this unity. Only a 600KB download.
2. HTMLzip is adware meaning it'll put a banner on the bottom of your page. Not mad, when you compress just click yes and it'll be yours forever! This program does a good job compressing files for 60 to 80 percent the original size of the html. One problem is that you can't edit the compressed files because they are encrypted in compression code so compress these files in a different folder. I like this because it has more compatibility with html then any other HTML compression unity out on the web! But the compressed html it shows may show up invalid in some file transfer protitols like what Geocities has. But on a regular FTP Client it should work 100 %. HTML should de-compress in a matter of seconds after it's fully loaded.

After this was all done it cut a couple MEGABYTES off my server! It was well worth the download!

College started today for myself. It was a new experience. But seriously, how many people go to college, once in their life, right? And I am going to take Math, Writing Concepts, and micro operating systems. While college is going on, my play time is cut in half. I can't play videogames no more. Gotta get organized so I can pass Math. CISCO I and II starts next summer, which means because I took only CISCO I this summer and got a passing grade on it, I may have to take it again because I didn't quite make B+. He did say congratulations to me though. I'm still playing Legend of Dragoon. I got pass the Divine Dragoon on Disc 3. Anyone who played this game knows that the Devine Dragoon was hard, but I have put the best armor in the game on Dart, the Armor of Legend. All I had to do to defeat the Devine Dragon was to hack away at him and keep my health percentage high. Disc II seemed to go by fast, and disc III seems to go by even faster. I only spent 5 hours on this disc. I spent 9 hours on Disc two and 14 hours on disc one. Disc 3 is full of cinematic cut scenes. I went to Wal-Mart and bought :

- Gran Turismo 3
- Jak and Dexter
- Twisted Metal Black

Three days later I bought 4 games at gamestop

- Final Fantasy X
- Breath of Fire - Dragon Quarter
- Midnight Club

The Final Fantasy Xreview is already online, so read it. I try to make it flawless as possible. So far the game is really interesting. The game has more cutscenes then I've seen in any game before. The battle system is unlike other Final Fantasy times, which were slower, this one is faster.

I'm in Networking Electrical for one on my college course. And I realized that everyone there had previous hands on background with big machines. Our teacher isn't your average teacher. He gives us work that is easy to figure out. We're supposed to work with amps and volts when we currently work in, whats called the POP room or mainframe of where all the network wires go. This is going to be my job. Networks are very complex. This means I will have to deal with all these hot wires and the only thing that is between me and the wire is a circuit breaker inside a meter. It will be quite interesting what will be the turn out. I have yet to meet anyone in the class.

My own Laptop (2003-09-02 23:06)

Finally I get a laptop of my own. It's a slow bitch. The computer has a Pentium 2 CPU with 128 MB of Ram, a 4 MB video card, and 6.5 GB hard drive. It had the Win98 operating system. What was good to know about Win98 was that it only took 300 MB of my hard drive. WinXP takes 3 GB. I had trouble installing a new driver for my video card to make the resolution true color. WinXP fixed that issue at the cost of space. Which sucks to know. I stuck a bunch of Gameboy Advance Roms on it. I recently got a new book on network electrical. Network Electrical demands a lot of know how of the basics of touching a circuit. First there you have to put one hand into your pocket. Next, you need to check your gear. Then you touch the open circuit with a watt meter You can use level 2 amp meters, but you can use level 3 amp meters. Level 3 meters are nice, they are made of rubber, which all of you should know that absorbs electricity. I have to read a large text book on it. If I had it my way I wouldn't want a text book, I'd take my course online. Online courses have the context on screen before you. Web page content has many pictures so I can look at the pictures. A lot of the time it makes more sense because less words are needed to explain something. For example - electrons are apart of what we use. Us electricians (I'm not a electrician, I'm going into Cisco Networking) must know the approx voltage and pressure of a gas line or electricity. A humid and enclosed workspace is extremely dangerous. I have to know what to do when I work in these kinds of conditions. That's my Network Electrical class I'm in. Ahh, the Computer and Internet concepts. The class is easy at first. I'd would hold my breath because it can get more difficult. I took this class before eight months ago. I had to learn how to ping people, move files, delete files, create files, make Batch files in command prompt before. I just might drop the class I'm in. I might not, since I can learn all those commands again. (the computer, I feel, runs my life)

Nothing is new except I am more then 3/4 way through with Final Fantasy X. Final Fantasy plays great. But the voice acting isn't quite aimed at adults, know what I mean? It's what you expect to come from a teenager's mouth. Really, it's a good game. It is over rated and I know that a lot of 10 - 16 year olds play this game. Well most of them, just don't know how to think buying the game. The story makes perfect since too me, in fact I don't get confused. Square should of not had the characters speak. Speaking can void the quality of the game. Games aren't suppose to be a movie. This game is a movie. You watch the cut scenes, then your back in control of Tidus, then you get another cut scene, then you back in control of Tidus and so on.

I don't plan on making any major updates anytime (last time I said that I came out with a new webpage template) soon. I am working on a lot of college quality reports in Written Communication (I have to technical write my progress on networks and display the results.) I really don't know where I am in my writing. Everyone in that school can write. Everyone knows that it's not what you write that matters, it's how often and how much you write. That's my motto.

More as it develops

Red Dragon Productions Lite (2003-09-15 23:12)

Good day. I did some new additions to my website. I added a Playstation 3 since Playstation is cool. Xbox is cool too, but this so happens that I'll be talking about Playstation 3 today. I added the Game Archives that'll follow up on Playstation 3. I also made Red Dragon Productions Lite which will have better bandwidth for dial up users like me. But the original isn't too long to load is it? I read information off this Playstation 3 forum site, but it sucks. Everyone there doesn't talk about anything new on Playstation 3. This doesn't mean that their won't be any new news in the future though. I went to this website for some humorous jokes and I thought it would be good enough to put on my website Click Here I've been focusing all my free time on the Game Archives section to get it as much updated as usual. I will have a hard time finding out-dated information on Playstation 2 software or hardware on the Internet. I probably will avoid that since it's not worth the work.

Life is Okay (2003-11-29 12:54)

Original entry off Modblog on 11/29/2003

Here's for all you bloggers out there. I've got a load of PS2 games that I don't play. Some you may of heard this one already. I have both GTAs for the consoles. GTA 3 and VC are the best games for PS2 aren't they. I reviewed the game and I found it fun chasing criminals around in cop cars. Cool?

I am an ex-Diablo 2 player. Level headed online player who never duels. I learned that 50 % of the time, you don't get your stuff back, unless you're stuff isn't worth crap, and that guy who you dueled just left the game. I still play the game once in a while offline, but I always felt that I was getting ripped off when I sell armor / weapons to the elite classes. Most of the high level characters don't want you sell you anything that doesn't come off the ground! So I have never had magic find abilities on my characters and have never found or bought one of those eye of jordan stones that Battlenet players always want in change of elite armor / weapons. A guy like me can go bankrupted, but Diablo 2 is just that, trading the best deal for something someone else needs. I have some characters up there in the level 80 range. It's not that difficult to achieve after a week of online play. I stopped playing Diablo 2 when I owned a PS2. Okay so I played more then Diablo 2. I have a 2.1 Ghz Athlon to play games on. Hardware requirements aren't an issue except for the modem aspect.

So I got a PS2, what did I buy for it. Well, honestly, I have nothing to do yet so I don't do anything except play console games. I want to go to the mall. I want to buy stuff I need. I want to go to movies, and play pool (billards.) I want to some day jack up the car's sound system so you can hear it a mile away. But all my friends are working or going to school. I'm into platform games so what drived me to the PS2 was that it got all the ports of anything you ever want to play. Jak and Dexter is a good game. I'm still completing the game. Jak is a mute character, while Dexter is talking away. Do you remember Gex Enter the Gecko for the N64? Gex, unfortunately was a awful game, but it had one thing that if used properly, could of been something great. So I like the worlds in Jak. It had good graphics at the time. PS2 is getting dated know though. But it manages to have the best controller of any console. Want to talk about Final Fantasy, Diablo 2 or games in general, tag me, im me or email me. I'll get back to yeah.

My weekend was all and all pretty lazy. Not that I'm unemployed, not that at all. I'm on Thanksgiving Break so being lazy is a must for anyone with 168 (24 hrs x 7days) hours on hand of nothing to do. What do you do? I stay up all night until 4am, sleep in until 10:30.

I recently owned PS2 the game of the month, Final Fantasy X-2. I am currently 1.5 hours in the game. I say Game of the Month because I know there are always better games out for the system. In fact I know the absolutely must haves. Square always trills me with their new releases except for "The Bouncer" and "Kingdom Hearts." Nothing against Square Enix, but Disney combined with Final Fantasy would be a little young for me. Monster's Inc is probably the only exception. Although I actually thought of buying Kingdom Hearts, because it was made by Squaresoft and now only cost 20 dollars. Last month I owned Final Fantasy XI for the PC never being able to play it. I was hoping that it would be yet another online adventure, but my parents won't allow me to own a credit card when I'm not earning cash to back it up. All I want to do is buy things off Amazon.com, Tigerdirect and pay for Final Fantasy XI. All of these need electronic money to function.

I'm downloading DIVX codec for the first time! (2003-12-03 12:58)

Original Date: 12/3/03 at 12:30AM

I headed over to Divx.com and downloaded Dr. Divx for my PC. Not that I'm going to edit video soon, but I wanted to see DIVX decoded in it's codec in action. In fact Internet Concepts was talking about different Codec to encode movies. If it does work and encode in AVI then I can bring it up in class. Imagine if you had a uncompressed "Desktop Video" about 2 hours, it would be below 650 MB compressed. Now I found out that the most common desktop video codec was AVI. I ran AVI and it can store a minute of video, very small screen with sound for about 550KB. Imagine how DIVX could work with streaming video. It's about half as small as most MPEGs and you can record a whole DVD movie on a CDR. Imagion how much video you can fit on a 4.7 G DVDR!!! Playstation 3 is going to read DVDRs so maybe it'll be able to read MPEG 4 & DIVX. My PS2 makes screeching sounds when I play movies. It's like a version 1.1 PS2. The first ones didn't have a system fan, this one does.

Anyway I found some freeware software. The selection is a little slim I might add. There is CrazyRIP (<http://www.crazyrip.free.fr>) which supposedly detects a movie playing and rips it to AVI encoded in Divx. It looks highly customizable and you don't need extra software. Next is DVD2AVI. It looks simple and rips streaming mpegII or MPV. Next choice requires anyone to download several files that plugin a program called Claddvd. (<http://www.clonead.co.uk/>) I've been saving the best DIVx all-in-one package available off the Internet for last called K-lite codec pack. (<http://home.hccnet.nl/h.edskes/mirror.htm>)

School is going good so far, no problems really exist, or not the ones I wasn't to express on this page. Most of them are weak voices that I think I hear such as I know I can get every question right on my next quiz without studying in Internet Concepts. I like to think that I can but I really can't. It's the undeniable truth. Yep, I'm still downloading techno, country MP3s off the schools T1 server. What everyone else sees is my streaming audio, but I'm ripping that audio stream to the harddrive, and downloading it from the PC to my MP3 player I got on Nov. 01, 02. I must be a little odd in my game choices. I promised myself I wouldn't spend 50 dollars for a game that I would only play for about 20 hours then let it sit. This game from Urisoft (makers of Splitter Cell and Rayman) called Beyond Good and Evil could be my next investment. BGaE is a action adventure game that got good reader reviews for all platforms (that it's for.) It's has Zelda: Wind Waker like graphics and Zelda: Wind Waker type gameplay. I don't know for sure, but I'm thinking I just might own this title. I haven't really played Final Fantasy x-2 lately. I said I was going to be playing that game next. Remember I bought F-Zero GX for Gamecube 3 weeks ago? I haven't played it in about 3 weeks!!! That Action Replay set me back 20 more dollars then it should of. That sucks, and I can't return it because I opened it. Some of the newer games use a newer version of Action Replay. You all may laugh at me, but I cheated on Final Fantasy X-2. The saying "Cheaters never Prosper" applies here since my cheats make FFX-2 freeze. I wanted infinite items on my game. I doesn't make any sense because the codes were straight off Codejunkies.com!

Neverwinter Nights is a midevil computer role playing game released 1.5 years ago by Bioware, the creators of Knights of the Old Republic for Xbox / PC. I play online for the first time in four months. I bought the two expansions, Shadows of Undrentide and Hordes of the Underdark. Right now I'm getting into HotUD. There are some who prefer HotUD over SoU, but I agree with both of them. See, Neverwinter Nights is about a 40 hour game and most people play 5 hours online at the most (like me) which means they won't get to the ending unless it's their server. Both expansions have their own 15+ hour campaign. The game is as fun as Diablo 2 was - though I still play it online. It's wonderful not to have a game that crashes! I remember back in Version 1.21 (one year ago) that the game barely managed to work. And it's really fast on a modem now. Get this game it's really fun to talk to people – sometimes. Make sure that your computer doesn't get window popups because they'll bug me and you.

When I went to Wal-mart to get Shadows of the Undrentide expansion, it was too crowded. It reminds me on how bad this time of year is. And I live in a smaller part of the country with about 2200 people.

I told readers last month that I was an ex-diablo 2 player. Now I'm back online. It's fun for the amount of time I spent on it. I still see Diablo 2 at Wal-mart so it must still be popular. I bought by copy in 2000 and the expansion when it came out for the first time. I find that Amazons are the most fun to play. Although I like Barbarians too. They just specialize in Weapons and are the easiest to level I think. Now with the 1.10 patch, Diablo 2 has really accelerated. Within the first 15 minutes you're at level four. You noticed that all Dungeon and Dragons games are a like. It's not apart of the "Forgotten Realms" like all of Bioware's games are. It's much darker then Neverwinter Nights. The graphics are bad, but it's still playable.

New Webpage Template online (2003-12-16 14:02)

Date: 12/16/03 at 8:28PM

I just finished with a new template and checked all the links to make sure that they were working. I liked using miniwindows in my website. All my gaming reviews are shorter a least. This is what I want surfers to read first is my reviews. I continued to look at my webpage and made minor changes through out the day. This day is the last day of school until January 02, 2004. I feel that I should be on my PS2 because this webpage business is sucking up all my time.

Go to Link: http://www.geocities.com/nightwalkers101/v7_index.html

I headed over to <http://nwnvault.ign.com> today at school and downloaded 470 MBytes worth of mods. I also got Norton Antivirus so if I had any viruses on my computer. Before I had this bad problem with the Downloader _Trojon Virus. It infected 6 files on my computer. So I had Norton repair those files. After that everything went smoothly.

Neverwinter Nights is really cool, I go online and play, level up. I usually create a new character everything I go online. I hear that Final Fantasy XI is getting popular. To bad I don't have a credit card.

New NWN Mod I created, it's not release quality (2003-12-18 14:03)

Date: 12/18/03 at 2:20AM

Today, I downloaded the new Neverwinter Nights patch for Hordes of the Underdark. While I was downloading the huge 25MB patch, I went on my other PC and created a Neverwinter Nights mod called "Ian's Fantasy World." It's not release quality for sure. The mod is set in a forest with a 3 goblins grouped together set along a path. The graphics are nwn quality. My mod is meant for starting characters. But I made it easy for myself...I used someone else's mod to get started. That's the best part! I know, playing with mods is a waste of time, and perhaps I should use that time to play online. I never was much of an Unreal Tournament mod developer because I play few FPS though I keep updated with the new patches on all my games and downloaded the official map hacks if there are any. And then when I did play online, I died so often, and I just got boring. Believe it or not I was always on the upper half of the score sheet in UT1999. I noticed that lag got better with Ut2003. I could play first person shooters again online. But then theirs the awesome Call of Duty to play online. I don't have it. But I heard it's about the best WWII game out. I have Metal of Honor Allied Assault. I played the demo online at school. Their are a lot of gamers online that can frag a beginner. Everything is fair game, so that's another reason I switched to Diablo 2. It's much more fun to chat with people. Ya? I have all the official map packs for UT2003, and over 2 gigabytes of zipped maps for Unreal Tournament I've backed up on cdr. This was back when fileplanet.com was free. Why am I telling you this? I once thought I could play all of them, and be a master at Unreal Tournament – frag all my friends. After I found out that none of my friends played games online, I went the opposite direction, and became a big RPG fan both console and PC. At the beginning I was a excellent marks man.

If I was to put my new mod online, it would be located at <http://www.pressente...scampbel/nwnmod.exe>. I was playing Hordes of the Underdark a bit yesterday night, and then I was playing Diablo 2 for 8 hours straight today. I level upped 22 levels in one day. Playing the game is harder without the map hack I used before. I am now logged as *eyeofamarksman at USEAST Battlenet as a ladder character which means if I don't play once every 3 days, my account will be deleted. No, I don't play a PvP character or a level lecher. However, the new patch makes Duriel, Mophisco, and Baal harder. It would have been easier if I got further in the game, but party members kept dropping out of tight situations.

And I thought N64 was dead (2003-12-20 14:04)

Date: 12/20/03 at 6:14AM

Remember N64, the console that could have made it big if only the cartridge cost was less for the consumer. Nintendo is bringing N64 back in form of IQue. IQue is the Entire N64 gaming system packaged in one controller. It can be called the world's first 64-MB handheld! I wish it was released here in the USA. It's going to be released very cheaply in China, Korea and South America. I hope this Nintendo product doesn't flop like the Virtual Boy did. Nintendo also leaked information that their next generation console is coming out in November 2004, but I disbelieve it. I had my eye on a new PS3 when it comes in the USA in 2005. I might also get a NES5 in 2006 just because of the quality of the first party games. You know, when I have the extra money.....

Star Trek is beginning from it's roots (2003-12-21 14:04)

Date: 12/21/03 at 8:27AM

Many people may not consider me a Star Trek fan or "Trekkie" as they are now beginning to find themselves a dying breed. However, I have today familiarized myself with the Star Trek timeline at Startrek.com. Paramount Pictures has disparately tried to keep the Star Trek franchise a float entering the 21st century on their UPN TV

Network. Knowing now how outdated Star Trek in the 1960s was. I was a fan of watching the last years of Star Trek Voyager. Anyway go to this link, it's most interesting. Star Trek: Enterprise has, for sure, bent the rules just to stay current to what we know think the future will be. The link <http://www.startrek..../episode/121932.html> you are about to read is about the first episode of newest Star Trek TV series, Enterprise, which dates 90 years after the Enterprise-E was sent back in time in the movie, Star Trek: First Contact. It is about the best summary of the beginning of Star Trek that you can have or from what I ever read in my life. Back when human-kind was limited by Vulcan technology. We were only 2nd best. Even better the Klingons were even more advanced then we were! The Vulcans helped us come up with Warp 5 when we were still only capable of Warp 1 for the longest time period.

Action Replay Max is the way to go if you own PS2 (2003-12-22 12:57)

Original entry date 12/1/03

I am 100 % British. My name is Ian isn't it. I knew I had some Brit in me, Yot. I wonder how many Brits play PS2. What would be interesting, is if they played Xbox (which all of you should know is made here in US) What do the Brits like to do? Drink Tea? I hear Coca-Cola is big over there. Jolly Good! Take the quiz.

Jolly good, wot! Anyone for tennis? That'll be ten ponies, guv. You're the epitome of everything that is english. Yey :)

Hoist that Union Jack!

How British are you?

this quiz was made by alanna

All of you may of noticed the Devil May Cry banner on my page. Although I have that game, it isn't one of my favorites. I thought that Devil May Cry, the first one was very successful, would appeal to the hardcore gaming community. Dante was a good idea which appeals to the hardcore gaming person. People who look at Rob Zombie videos would like this game. You'll never catch me watching Rob Zombie, System of the Down or Marilyn Manson videos on MTV. DMC2 wasn't so good. The first one had better graphics, better gameplay. I read a head, and didn't buy DMC2. A good site is <http://www.gamerankings.com/>.

If you want to cheat for your Playstation 2. I advise getting a Action Replay MAX. I bought a ordinary Action Replay for PS2, and while the codes where OK, it didn't include games like Final Fantasy or .hack part 1, or some other codes that you can only get off Codejunkies. Codejunkies.com, the official Action Replay website, only accepts AR MAX codes, which have three sets of code separated by two (-) instead of one. The $19.99 price tag with PSone Action Replay disc and the memory card included is just the older version of the game enhancer. I wanted to complete such games like FFX, FFX2, Jak 2 and Castlevania in record time. Bottom line, don't make the same mistake I did, and get an Action Replay MAX for your next PS2 game enhancer. Don't buy a gameshark. Action replay max will read gameshark 2 (ver. 1, 2, 3) code saves! Gamecube owners don't have to worry about this. It's all the same with GCN.

I think that X-Port or Shark-port is a waste of my money with the exception of XBOX game enhancer, which can not use codes. If you want to get a game anyway for PS2 such as Metal Gear Solid 2, always get the PS2 version. I was thinking of getting MGS2 for Xbox, but I thought nah, it's not worth 20 dollars. Why? First of all, you can cheat on PS2 only. Second the bulky Xbox controller is worst then the Duel Shock 2. It's still good since I play xbox at home.

Horizons is suppose to be out today. It's a new massive multiplayer online role playing game for Windows.

Game of the Year quality. I had a friend who played the demo and immensely enjoyed it. He said it was a lot like the game Dungeon Siege. I think that any RPG fan should own this game because it could be long, and packed with features.

WinXP (2003-12-22 14:05)

Date: 12/22/03 at 3:18PM

Mood: Tired and lazy

In my opinion, Windows XP is a great operating system to have, but isn't Microsoft charging too much for it? I have Windows XP Home on one PC and Windows XP Pro on the other. Windows 98 was also the ideal operating system to pirate because you didn't need a crack to install it on multiple computers unlike that latest version of Windows. WinXP Home isn't that much, only 100 bucks. WinXP Professional makes you cash out 200. Is that fair? Microsoft also has its XBOX bundle for 170 dollars, and that'll cost me less than their Windows XP PRO. It's near insanity how much Microsoft charges for their OS. But I already own a Xbox so that problem doesn't concern me any. Most of you must agree with me on this. The big question I always asked myself is, Windows worth as much as it is? All the consumer gets is a upgrade disk. The full Windows Pro runs even more. The faulty deal consumers get when they buy Compaq or HP is that they don't get an upgrade installation disc with their PC. What happens if you want to reformat your hard drive? Even worst, what happens if you don't even own Windows 98? And if you want Windows 2000, which is actually an earlier version of Windows, you will have to cash out an extra 300 dollars. Sure there are cracks on the Internet that will allow you to bypass the activation code, but doing so is wrong. I haven't seen much difference between Windows 2000 and Windows XP. I play with Windows 2000 at school. I know there are some differences. Both both have NT file system. Windows 2000 has a better firewall, but I just use the Norton Firewall. Lucky for me, my dad had an extra Windows XP PRO lying around our house.

So, you forget Microsoft all together and run Linux open source OS with the latest free version of Winex, a program allowing you to run Windows Games on Linux by emulating the Windows kernel on Linux much like MS-DOS is emulated. WineX Website » <http://www.transgami...g.com/subhilites.php> « There is not much you can do with Linux except surf the Internet and play MP3s. All the cool software is available for Windows. I hope one day WineX can emulate all Windows programs (and games), and one day make Microsoft lower it's price on Windows because then everybody would soon realize Linux would be better. I take it that not all PC owners know that Linux exists. Now, Wine can only emulate 33 % of my Windows Programs, and still does a crappy job on emulating Diablo 2, but I can see that it does work. I wanted to see if Unreal Tournament runs good on it. I run Suse Linux 8.2 at home. I wonder what Project Greenhorn will be like? This is next generation Windows. This was why I did a Google search on it.

As for the rest of the day, it's gotten very boring. None of my friends had the day off today, so I downloaded a few desktop themes mainly Final Fantasy VII, one Counter Strike desktop theme and one Legend of Dragoon desktop theme. I change desktop themes every month. Stayed home most of the day. Worked on the mod some. It's coming along. I wish I had feedback on it.

Merry Christmas 2003 (2003-12-25 14:06)

Date: 12/25/03 at 1:47PM

Merry Christmas to all bloggers! Well, I liked this Christmas okay, and it is much better then last year. Last year, my parents gave me money to build my own computer. The one that I fried a couple times over. I woke up at 2am in the morning, worked on the website some. Then I played Gran Transimo 3 for a couple hours until my parents woke up. We have a nice tree this year. I didn't tell you about it. Well, it's a spur (native to that of Wisconsin) with a lot of ornaments and lights. I only got one Christmas present under the tree, but that's okay because I also got a third computer. This one is a Dell so I don't know how well it'll hold up. I'll tell you that it's one of those high end gaming machines. The specs are my secret for now Dad got a 4 year warranty so I better not touch it. I want too, but I will force myself to avoid the goodies if it comes at a cost. We had a bad time with Thunderstorms in the Summer. That time cost me 800 dollars, and that doesn't count the time mother short circuited both because she had to shut off the electricity. That and the fact that I fried one computer using my hands. All my computers now have surge protectors. They like pay for themselves the first time something goes wrong.

In the past I couldn't keep my hands out of the PC. I know how to install most everything, except for the processor, which I'm always afraid I'll crack. If the PC doesn't turn on, there is a 75 % chance I fried the motherboard. In the future, I'm going to build cheap computers, that way I can afford to buy a new motherboard if I screw up. Everything else I can handle. I know where all the wires / cables go. I can flash the bios, and load the OS. Pretty soon I'll build PCs for my friends for free once I'm 100 % sure I can without damaging it.

Actually I have a lot of extra PC hardware lying around. I have extra parts to make one including two 128 MB SDRAM DRR Sticks. One Extra 40 GByte hard drive. One NIC card, one winmodem, one 128 MB XFX Geforce 4 slightly used! (There is a long story about that) One sound card. And a slightly used Athlon XP 1800. The stuff I don't have is a 160 Volt power box, a Socket A motherboard, and a case (defiantly need one of those.)

Now, I bet you were wondering about how I have a perfectly good graphics card unused? For my Birthday, Dad got me a 256MB Geforce 4 and I didn't need that Geforce4 anymore. The slowest computer that I have right now can only support up to 64 MB of video ram.

PS2 makes me focused, but it makes school less ent (2003-12-28 12:59)

<http://ian1984.Modblog.com> | Date: 12/8/03 at 2:15AM

Sorry about the lack of updates. Playstation 2 makes me more focused, but makes school less interesting. I been working on homework. I was noglecting my webpage a bit. Semester is almost over at WITC. I dropped a few classes so it wouldn't go on my record. I have struggled through the electricity aspect of school. With computers, I also need to know how to use electricity, being there are many regulations on numbers of pcs, power sources, servers, that can be in one room. Everything has to come off the IEEE standard. As for my pesonal life

I finally got Kingdom Hearts for the PS2. I haven't played it yet. Kingdom Hearts combines Final Fantasy 7, 8, 10 and Disney characters in one game in a role playing game type fashion. What I should of done was buy Kingdom Hearts new, but I paid used, and got a game disk but no manel. The game is made by Squaresoft, and it got good reviews from some of Bob's friends. I'll review it here at this website soon. I'm going to return it tomorrow, and see if I can't get it new. I'm not going to play it until I finish Final Fantasy X-2. I'm almost done with Chapter 1. There are a lot of side quests in FF X-2, but I see it as I can play it straight through.

I went over to my friend Bob's place. His parents just bought him a Playstation 2 a week ago and the only game he got was ATV offroad racing. It's as I thought, newer Playstations have a newer version of drivers. I didn't know that the new PS2s have a modem adapter on them. Not that it was any different then mine. He likes Mature games. I asked him if he likes Summoner or Baldur's Gate Deadly Alliance. He came over 2 days ago where we went to a Game Store. I said buy Final Fantasy X, because it was a really cool game. He didn't want Stuntman, Spiderman or Rune. He ended up buying Baldur's Gate. It so happened that I owned it for Xbox and we played Baldur's Gate, he liked it too. Bob said he's getting the GTA Double Pack for X-mas. I let him borrow GTA Vice City, Madden 2002, and Devil May Cry for a week. I don't get a lot of time to play games with other people so it was great playing Madden with a friend. I was rusty. I lost to the Packers 21 Vikings 20. He owned Madden 64 so he knew Madden more than I. In 2000, I bought NFL 2K on Dreamcast, but that's 3 years ago already! However we played NFL-Europe teams and the Dragons (Me) won against the Claymores (him) 7 -5. We got even!

Bob has a speaker system that he hooks up to his computer that had Dolby Digital Pro Logic II and the surround speakers and it sounded great. I wasn't heart pumping, but it did sound better than two generic pc speakers. I then thought, hmm, I could get a tv tuner for my computer and play Playstation 2 on it. Higher resolution display makes it worth it to him. I'm getting my other pc fixed, installing a new motherboard. I was either going to get a new harddrive or tv tune. and I don't know which one is better. I don't need the space right now. I bought a 100 Gigabyte harddrive and the I already have a slightly slower one installed.

The day before I had nothing to do so I drove over to Randy's house. He and I know each other. He was installing a sub speaker in his truck, but needed a board in case with fiberglass to support the speakers. He wanted the richest sound he could possibly get without putting a lot of money in it. The sawing noise was beeping loud!

Today I am feeling good. I went to Bloogz.com where I found my name, ian1984, already listed under the Playstation 2 category. This was my first entry at Modblog.com, and I did not want a bot to list my page on Bloogz.com. It seems to me that this site has some trade offs. I don't care. That's not so important as what I found at a website called MoveableType.com. Moveable Type.com is an open source blog template that lets you search, categorize, autolink visitors, autoping visitors, and trace his/her route - exactly what Modblog does. I want to upload Moveable Type (MT 2.64) to <http://geocities.com/nightwalkers101/>, but I haven't quite figured out how to make a template I could write on. I know how to load everything, that's not the problem. I'll figure it out sooner or later. I believe it uses php or xml, very unfamiliar territory. If it works in Dreamweaver, I can more than likely figure this one out.

So far I pulled in 14 hits with-in the first 4 hours of my page online. I love this place, I never had this much visitors through Geocities. Just could be the fact that everyone now knows I'm an Eagle Scout. Yep. I camped at temperatures below 32°F without any signs of frostbite. How did I do it? I was taught that you take everything off except for my underwear, climb in my sleepingbag with a winterjacket over me. And stay away from the Fire, I hate getting close to the fire because I always will get cold again when I'm away from it. That way I was slightly more cold than warm, but not sweating in my bag. Cold sweat is the worst. Every scout knows this because it comes right out the handbook.

It was June, two years ago, I also took swimming and life saving merit badges with Life Rank. (I was Patrol Leader that time.) Life saving merit badge was by far the worst. I had to go down 9 feet, save a dummy with team work while doggie patting (dead man's float vertically) the whole time. You were down there for about 15 - 25 seconds moving around holding your breath. The water up there was about 50 degrees, and I felt numb when I got out. I remember that final weekend up at TrollHaugn Scout Reversation near Rice Lake, Wisconsin. Kayaking and the sailing were fun. Haven't done either since then.

Couldn't wait until 2004 to buy some games (2003-12-29 14:07)

This will be my last entry of the year 2003. I will always remember 2003 as the year I took two college courses and passed, and then re-took them over again just to make sure I was good at it. These courses included Intro to DOS, and my favorite, Intro to Linux. We were trained on Redhat Linux Professional 7.1. Both classes are required courses for someone wanting to be an industrial network specialist. I joined WITC 3 months after I graduated from HS. I got immediately transferred after high school to another college. College is cool, but I have too few of friends. I feel that people going to my classes aren't really my type. That's not bad though since Bob and I hang out once every two weeks. I also remember this being the year I bought 3 videogame systems this year, a ps2, a psone, and xbox and one handheld. I bought countless games. Much more than I should of. I just got today - a Game Boy Advance SP. The unit is really small and that alone amazes me. I had a GBA since 2000, which I barely played, except in high school. Now that I'm a 'mature' adult, I have places to go, people to see, no time for Gameboy Advance. I am a bit wiser than I was in high school. I plan ahead, and budget my money, although it is mostly spent on gas and videogames. I also mentioned what else I spent money on if you spent close attention to my blog. ? I do now because I'm on Christmas Break. I don't work. Gameboy Advance SP cost me 100 bucks. I'm broke as of now. I was going to get an Atari 2600 because its old school. I could have such "immortal" classic games like Space Invaders, Donkey Kong, Pacman, Defender, Pitfall Harry, and Tron. Then the NES has improved graphics with the same ports. Improved sound for that matter. I almost forgot about my own GBA because I hardly even play it. GBA games are more expensive that's what kept throwing me off. It was suppose to be awesome in the early 80s until the NES kicked it in the arse. The NES ruled from 1985 - 1991. I have a friend who owns a NES. With "immortal" classics like Super Mario Bros, I thought I going to own a NES. Then I soon realized at an early age, why spend money on outdated NES or SNES when I can have a "3D game machine." (I wanted my own copy of Super Mario 64 really badly partly because I was only 12 at the time, and I thought N64 was cool.) Everyone else in the grade seemed to have either a Playstation or N64. Back when I was 12, I thought N64 was a huge gift for a Christmas present. I remember being over joyd at the site of owning it. My first two games where Star Fox 64 and Star Wars: Shadows of the Empire.) Games I want for NES are Super Mario Bros. 1 & 3, Final Fantasy, Spy Hunter, Mega Man 1,3,4,6. It seems like a used NES will always be available if I eventually get one, but it stopped me because the graphics are so bad now, and I can play it on the PC through emulation anyway. After getting the latest GBA handheld, I don't think I need a NES. I can go to a game specialist store any time, and buy any used GBA game I want. I realize that GBA games are somewhat more expensive then the old NES. Having the controller makes the experience more real. I can buy most of those games for GBA anyway. Plus GBA out sells PS2 3 to 1, I was beginning to wonder why. I disbelieve that Pokemon does all that!

Today I installed Unreal Tournament 2003 on all three of my computers. I can still kick ass in the skilled experience level. I have a small local area network (LAN) up and running. I was going to get the Xbox version of Star Wars: Knights of the Old Republic for Christmas. I originally wanted the PC version because IGN.com said it not only looked better, it had more stuff, and was longer. The two versions both had a 9.2/10 rating. The game was rated the Best Xbox RPG and Xbox Game of the Year by IGN.com, and Best Xbox RPG by Game Informer Magazine. It will be nice playing it on a fast Pentium 4 with a ATI RADEON 9800 and 1 GByte RAM :D. The game is made by the makers of Neverwinter Nights, Bioware.

Webcam in the near future. (2003-12-31 14:08)

Date: 12/31/03 at 4:30AM

Yesterday I went over to Best Buy with Bob and his friend, Mike. I was going to buy a webcam so I can do video with people over the Internet. I was planning to spend 60 dollars on it, but they are only 1 MEGAPIXEL. I had my eye on a certain webcam called EZCAM PRO III at Tigerdirect.com. It's only 30 bucks, and it has all the features and high resolution of any 60 dollar deals at Best Buy. If I had a high speed connection, my webcam would be on all the time. I was going to buy some Gamecube games at BestBuy and didn't. The game I want most is Beyond Good and Evil for consoles, it looks like a AAA class game! I almost got Project Gotham Racing 2 for Xbox. I own Project Gotham and it was good, but I don't play it very often. Although it is an unfair comparison, Project Gotham looks better then Gran Turismo 3.

I saw Gothic II at Gamestop too, and was going to get that, but I heard the battle system is weird and not as good as Neverwinter Nights. So I didn't. I know Grand Thief Auto 3 is a great game, but I already have it for PS2 so I don't need to re-buy it. Bob is going to copy Vampire the Masquerades for me. I take any copied game I can get. Except I think Bob has a virus on his PC so I hope it doesn't affect the copy. I also saw Half-life Value Package for 30 dollars which included Half-life, and 4 expansion packs including the very popular Counter Strike. I never played Counter Strike. Mike is going to download it of the Internet, and give me a copy. Half-life is Bobs all time favorite game.

When we got to my house, I was disappointed to hear that they had to leave right away. I was hoping that I could host a LAN party for an hour. He is going to a party on New Years and I was invited but I'll be around many people I don't know and they'll be drinking so I may just stay home.

Today I woke up at about 3:30AM and I'm working on Xenosaga Episode 1. This game is the prequel of Xenogears. Unlike Xenogears, Xenosaga is about the human race at war with the Gnosis, these aliens kill humans just by touching one. The year is set about 2450, and we have warp speed, mech warriors, and KOS-MOS, a super hybrid android capable of destroying Gnosis. So far I'm 4 hours in the game. It's fun. Sometimes I feel that there isn't enough gnosis around to fight: [No fighting, no leveling up, no experience, no damage.] I don't know about most people. I like watching the games cut-scenes. On the case, it says that this game is an 80-hour adventure; I plan to beat it in under 60 hours. The game has over 2 hours of cut-scenes. We know that Namco is making 5 sequels, all dated centuries before Xenogears. We know that the technology is lost and human kind is thrown back 600 years of technical achievement. It's weird in the game Xenogears when you get "ancient technology" in form of giant mech machines. Was this game inspired by Gundam Wing? I like futuristic sci-fi games. They are cool. Who agrees with me?

Hi Ian's Smashing Good Blog Site I was looking for someone who could give me more info on legitimate work from home jobs and I came accross your Webcam in the near future. which isn't what I really need right now, but it's a great blog! It sure got my notice and keep it up! Anything that barely looks like legitimate work from home jobs interests me because folks know social security and healthcare dollars don't go far these days. If you see anyone who has legitimate work from home jobs or some work at home blogs, please let me know if you can and have the time.

I'm glad to see you guys are still here and doing so good! I'll have to pop in here more often from now on. I've been looking in several places for good content. I have found many sites but most don't really have a lot of in depth information. I am very new to the web and am still getting the hang of things on where to find real information and not just the normal fluffy stuff. I am working on finding RSS feeds with solid useful information for my custom motorcycle helmet site. Anyone who knows some good places to look please let me know, I would really appreciate it. Thank you ahead of time for your help!

I needed to be with an organization standing for freedom. anti-totalitarian, particularly anti-socialist and anti-communist. I decided to join after seeing that Australian in high school. Great organization. I got this business card for my wallet.

I got a NES today just for the heck of it (2004-01-06 14:09)

Date: 1/6/04 at 6:12AM

Our nation is on high alert says the news. We may have lost a lot more marines over seas compared to Operation Desert Storm. It's interesting that in 1991, under the Bush Administration, we plowed our way into Baghdad without any casualties. Now the USA gets disappearances in helicopter crashes, and detonated car bombs. Though threw all that we got ourselves a dictator. Remember in the movie "Canadian Bacon" (John Candy stars) the United States was picking enemies and they first picked the Russians, although they also went through some terrorist groups. It's funny that the movie missed the most important one, Al Bled Mohammad. President Bush is probably sending the elite Delta Force, Omega Force, and the US Rangers after him as we speak. Hollywood should definitely make a movie after the events of September 11. I would go see it.

Yesterday, I bought a NES first from a licensed videogame dealer in River Falls. I knew which games I wanted for it, but I didn't want to spend too much money on it. After some debate, I concluded to get one which later happened to be two. I've been playing Super Mario Bros. and Super Mario Bros. 3 through JNES on Windows since 1999. It's fun to have to real thing. Why did I spend 60 dollars on an outdated machine when I could play it on PC for free? Well there are just some things that are fun to play as they were meant to be. That and the fact that I can say I own one. I also got a Super Nintendo with Legend of Zelda: Link to the Past, and Super Mario World because I couldn't make up my mind whether or not I wanted one or the other. This may be a bad habit to get into for some people I think but I've been collecting games on 7 different consoles for 5 years now. I wanted a little old school in my game collection. My way of thinking is people spend money on CDs, DVDs and entertainment like speakers, and gas while I just spend a large sum of my money on videogames, and gas. Most people only watch DVDs less then 5 times. You can only listen to a CD for so long - 6 months right? I have a MP3 player with 1800 songs on it, so why spend money on CDs. My advice for any one reading this is go out and spend 300 dollars on a MP3 player, and you'll save money from than on after. It doesn't have to be illegal if you have the original CDs.

Yesterday was the highlight of the whole week (2004-01-12 14:10)

Date: 1/12/04 at 2:37PM

The whole week I must say was B-O-R-I-N-G! I watched a couple dvds over break. I am deeply sorry about the lack of updates.... I was working on videogames, going places, and downloading map packs for Quake III including the patch over a modem. Then I am sort of playing a combination of games, Elder Scrolls III for PC, Final Fantasy X-2, and Xenosaga. Last night, my friend Bob had a videogame party and it kinda rocked. After an hour everyone, except me, was sick of games. Bob has a new Playstation 2. He got one because he always wanted to own one, but never really had the money, so it was a gift from his parents. I brought over Soul Caliber II, Virtua Fighter 4 Evolution, and Madden 2002. He has copies of MK Deadly Alliance, and Aggressive Inline. MK was the most played game there. Coming to his house was the most fun I had the whole week. There were 3 friends of his, and everyone likes the blood. Blood is over-rated. I stayed over there for 5 hours until 1:30AM. Bob has a huge (9.5 GBytes) MP3 collection that takes up a lot of his hard drive. Most of his music is a combination of goth metal, and regular heavy metal. I took his Black Sabbath, Metallica, Slipknot, Emblem, and Romstine music. Not that I listen to them at all, but I also have a growing collection. I have a 20 Gbyte Apple Ipod, and I want to upload all the songs I can possibly get on it.

I downloaded this extremely cool software called Alcohol 120 %, and it copies everything. I was looking for the 1.4.7 version on Google since that can be patched. Alcohol-soft.com says it can copy Playstation 2 games, and general copyrighted software with no problems. Alcohol 120 % is guaranteed to copy laser-locked software, Safe-locked software versions 1 and 2 what ever they are, and much, much more. So far I haven't had any trouble with it. I got Hellfire, Vampire: Masquerades, Dungeon Siege, and Quake III to work.

I have to spread the word that WindowsBlinds 4.2 isn't that great. It will slow your computer down some and the themes will get old. The idea of skinning the whole Windows GUI comes from Linux, more from the KDE desktop because KDE themes will change everything. I like skinning my Winamp and Trillian programs.

I haven't played Lord of Destruction for 3 weeks now, and my account is deleted which means I lost all that time I put in. It doesn't bother me. Diablo 2 is quickly becoming dated. I played the game so much ... well over 3 years. With all those new better looking, longer MMORPGS coming out, I have a hard choice to make if I am going to put money into them. I'm still playing Elder Scrolls III Morrowind from last year. I looked at the new Horizons MMORPG, but it's online only, and there is no way I will go online if it's not free. I have a copy of Final Fantasy XI, but I can't play it without someone opening my account for me. I would love to play it. The next big game coming out this year is Dungeon Siege II and it's going to be really cool because it has Dungeon Siege concept, which was great, with much improved graphics, new locations, and the mod community will be huge like it is with Neverwinter Nights. I only put in 10 hours a week in these games.

I redesigned my Geocities website again, and called my new template version 2004 instead of version 8.0. I agree that multiple windows, and frames are great, but I see room for improvement too. Eventually I want everything to blend together like a jigsaw puzzle. Everything crossed over fine except I need to add an extra window to the shell template for the videogames reviews so they don't open a new browser window. My website is at http://www.geocities...rs101/7.1_index.html. My website skills don't go past Template 7.0. Most of you know how cool some of those game sites look ... because they are above-average. Those sites are designed by nurds for nurds. I know I should spend a little more time on the logo since it is the central theme of my webpage. If you don't like this new template, you can also go back to the 7.0 version which has the same exact information.

So what now, after Christmas has past, do I want to spend my hard earned cash on? I bought a 40-watt 5 piece surround sound speaker set off Tigerdirect.com. It still sounds cool and alive with only hearing 2 speakers, and the bass sub speaker. I want to get a new videogame called Mario Kart Double Dash. I was a fan of Mario Kart 64 - that's why. A lot of people my age like Mario Kart. I am a little worried about owning a lesser game or is it? Better graphics doesn't mean better game play. Does it? Crime: Streets of LA sounds cool too and so does Beyond Good and Evil, but I can't afford all of those games at once. It's funny that I thought of renting a game once in a while, but the local movie rental doesn't have all the games I want. And the good ones are always rented.

I'm starting the second semester of school on Thursday. I get to learn how to build computers from the ground up. I am only a part time student at WITC New Richmond. I most probably will re-take a class teaching Linux. I know that Linux is used in mainframe administration, but isn't UNIX used more then Linux. All 'terminal' commands apply for both operating systems. I forgot the VI (v improved) script so I can't code and compile any UNIX commands. In system administration I will need to know how to code custom ping / file transfer tools for Linux/UNIX. I am hoping that I'll meet someone that's friendly to me there. I am not a programmer so I won't learn Perl or C++.

I had better days (2004-01-15 14:11)

Date: 1/15/04 at 7:15PM

I feel that I had some crazy times in high school, and it's time to grow up a little. Free to have any conversation if you could get someone to listen to you. Damn it - there is no more special treatment. Joyce, my hardware/software installation teacher, is letting people talk about porn, sperm in class. I know what many of you are thinking "What? Whoa...Sweet? You mean no one cares?" Joyce cares; she knows it's just one of 'their' crazy thoughts. Everyone 18 in the whole world has gotten caught looking up porn on the Internet. I admit I also got caught - but that was over 2 years ago. I will never admit I looked at porn except this one time. Its grouse, it's not proper. I felt embarrassed in class. I was smart enough not to comment on it. Ah-ha! Take that you porn downloader perverts you! Bottom line, porn is crazy stuff. It's addictive. It's not good for you.

I'm playing Morrowind. My shield really does the trick in melee combat. My character has a Steel Shield, Steel Armor, and a Bastard Sword. I want to show off my character to you guys. I also have Elder Scrolls III: Morrowind Game of the Year for Xbox, but the PC version looks better in my opinion. I got this game and the expansion packs Bloodmoon, and Tribunal before Bethesda released the 40 dollar value package exclusive to Best Buy. It's an awesome deal. I recommend this game to any person with cash at hand because it's so huge for one, has good graphics, and has customizable stuff, but requires a Pentium III or better to play. In the game, if you come across a soul gem, you can go to a mage's guild and find someone who can enchant your sword or shield, etc. I also have a mod that replaces the textures with higher resolution textures which makes the game look a bit better. I am hoping someone will develop a mod that will make this game multiplayer. In fact I ran a search with Google, and didn't find anything. Picture below:

I came across source code today that I never thought I download. I came across it because I wanted software that would run DVDs on Linux. Like always, I did a search on Google. Everything else in Linux there has to be a rpm file or at least source code to compile. I couldn't find any special programs that would read VOB files (DVD video files.) Vob reminds me too much of vorbis. I wonder if there is a connection? I came across an interesting file called DeCSS. The file seems to be well known to the programming community because it's been downloaded over 10,000 times. The source code can be downloaded through telnet so I went to download it at decess.zoy.net, like what it said on the web, and downloaded decess.c. C stands for C++ source file. So all I have to do is 'chmod 700' this file, and used the up arrow to re-execute the file. I know nothing about the source code. And guess what...it didn't work. It's hopeless - I will never find an open source dvd player. So I went to sourceforge.org. I typed in DVD player. Mplayer shows up, but I already have that program.

So what happened next after I failed to find an open source dvd player? I played Morrowind, then played Diablo 2 online through Battlenet. To my delight my account was still up. I did some 'role playing', then wrote this passage you see before you which makes it Midnight. I have a level 36 Amazon. I heard some talk online about a Diablo 2 mod that makes monsters drop more on a closed Battlenet server when the user hosts a game.

I'm getting a Fluke Meter, they are fun. (2004-01-21 14:12)

Date: 1/21/04 at 12:44AM

Trouble has gotten me again - in school - I'm short of credits. I need one more credit to be a half-time student at WITC. I saw that life as been disappointing this week. Students there aren't getting to know me too well, and above all else I couldn't download anything. I have a minor speech disorder but I am not effected by it. I love to download programs, and mp3s off shoutcast.com. I download techno mostly. I use Ripcast at home and Quintessential Player 4.11 at school. I discovered "QCD" 2 months ago finding it can rip from any streaming radio station on the web. The college's firewall doesn't block it which means it totally rocks! I am still with those "people without a care." It's mostly a computer geek deer hunter crowd. I got stuck in this crowd because I had two choices: Go to UofW or WITC. I picked WITC. Only thing I missed about the University is that I will never again be able to burn videos to DVD. I'm too cheap to buy my own video editing software. If you know what I'm talking about when I say uncompressed video data is absolutely huge! Then I have to take that data and compress it in MPEG which takes a long time anyway. It would be nice if Mom got a digital video camera. Apple makes a solid 'video editing' software called iMovie. iMovie is not for PC which makes me angry.

It's funny that people prefer Apple OSX over Windows XP. OSX is pretty stable but by the same time there aren't any FAT32 Emulators for it. Windows is awesome, many users would agree. I've been on a G5 with Intel Pentium 4 and 512 MB RAM. It was super fast. Did you know that it was Apple that came out with the firewire port first - the fastest transfer port available on the PowerPC/IBMPC? The university has two G5s for video editing I remember. The Media room I had as an intern for had 12 G4s. I found that those computers had small hard drives. That's all the University could afford. It was my only experience with an Apple. Apple makes it so it's nearly impossible to run OSX on a PC. I know because I copied a installation disc myself and it didn't run.

I was running Halo on my pc. Halo runs better without the patch then it does with it. I know I installed the 1.02 patch and the game crashed. I downloaded v1.031 hoping that it would fix the bug. The game requires high specs to run anything higher then 800/600. The patch is suppose to speed up the physics engine which runs at 30 frames all the time and slow downs are possible. I bought the game last November, and haven't played it until today. Very noticeably Bungie / GearBox added to the original single player game and made it longer. There is a tutorial in Halo now. I like tutorials though because they help a lot. The game looks very clean and crisp like it does on Xbox. The game does support anti-analyzing/anti-buffering which makes it look even better. The Internet says gamers will not see Halo 2 on the PC for 2 more years. Halo is not the best looking first person shooter, but it's really easy to copy! The game play is good. The game does have GameSpy as an online server with support up to 16 players which adds to the longevity of the game. I'm not interested in Halo because I'm into Morrowind. I'll play it because it was on Xbox (I also own the Xbox version) and got very good reader reviews.

Tomorrow I'm going back to the videogame store to pick up some used videogames. It's a hobby of mine. Should I pick up racing games or an action game like Blood Rayne? Or should I spend money on none and get another 64MB thumb stick. Thumb sticks are fun but pricy. That's why I should buy an external hard drive. I spoke of getting one before - why didn't I? I blew the cash on a Gameboy Advance SP. Tomorrow I won't be able to do much because I'll be home reading college books, taking notes, doing math. We all have been there - extra long hours on homework. I'm not the lucky one; there are Youth Options students there now and they are full time. Some adults are going to get their network specialist A++ certificate when they graduate from high school. When I was in high school, my choices were limited to two classes: Intro to DOS and Intro to Linux. Why even get started in Linux when you're not going to use it in my field which is Industrial Networking Technician. I am taking this field instead of network specialist because I don't like taking Cisco 3 and 4. It would be nice to have those on my file, but it's going to be hell from what I heard. I would be more likely be hired by someone. Companies are looking for the best and I have to have good grades to compete. Cisco Corp. is always making revisions on there online website and books. And they really are technical in their books. It is Cisco that I hate, not the whole Industrial Networking field.]
Check out these websites:

I may be negative in the upper paragraphs, but my week, my life for that matter, hasn't been bad...it's been good for the most part. One thing cool happened this week though after all the treacherous introductions for back to school. I'm going to get a Fluke amp meter. When you go into this field, you gotta have one of these. They are highly durable. I will have this meter my whole life, and Fluke has a lifetime guarantee on it. I will need it to measure leakage in horizontal data cables (shielded twisted pair / unshielded twisted pair, and patch cable)

X

I hope everything turns around in college for me...it is a little ugly right now. My friend Bob is sick so I couldn't see him this week, plus he now works at 3:30 to late, and I won't see him later. I need someone to hang out with, and he's seems to be the only person right now. Revisions to this entry soon...

Duck Hunt 3D is fun, so is Highway Pursuit (2004-01-22 14:13)

Yesterday, I told my friend Bob that having a blog is fun which got him to sign up. Asking him was easy. He asked me why he should put information out on the web. I responded, "Blogs are fun. It's good when you know people and you can catch up their lives." He had a website at Angelfire for a short time. He said to me he really didn't want to add pictures to it or update it. Bob doesn't like to use a spell checker so he misspells a lot of words, but he writes so much that he joined Modblog. He's at Bobrt.modblog.com.

Today I went to school and downloaded MP3s off shoutcast.com. I got at least 40 MBs with QCD. I also was downloading free games from www.gamehippo.com while I streamed radio stations. I found out that I really like Duck Hunt 3D, and Highway Pursuit (Spy Hunter clone.) Duck Hunt 3D is a fun game. The original Duck Hunt was packaged with the Nintendo Entertainment System. There has never been a Duck Hunt 2, like there should be. The clay shooting option is really fun - as fun as Duck Hunt itself. The midi sounds redneckish. For a 2.5 MB download it is really worth it, although yeah might as well laugh at the seriously outdated graphics. Highway Pursuit was okay for a 3.7 MB download. In my opinion, It's better then a lot of freeware games and can never beat the original Spy Hunter for the NES. Don't turn down a free download, especially those two above. Midway Game's re-make of Spy Hunter didn't receive good reviews. Santa Slayer is also funny and worth a download. What I really want on my pc is Code Red: Martian's Attack, it's a first person shooter using the Quake II engine, which is now open source. It's made by former Quake II level designers. On Sourceforge.com, where I get my open source software, Quake is being re-developed running on OpenGL on Linux. Why download Quake when Quake II is also open source? Why not make Quake II for Linux? Wait, someone already has. Linux programmers will just have to start over. And if you want to run Quake II on Linux, all you have to do is boot Quake II with DOSemu [dosemu, ../windows/c:, ../Quake II/Quakeii.bat.] Install and play. The Quake III engine will be open source in 2 years or less. I heard this official message off PlanetQuake.com a year ago. Some freeware dos games can already work with DOSemu. Do you believe someone is still wasting their time, and making maps for Quake II? Quake fan's are waiting for Doom III more then they are Quake 4 because they were originally Doom fans. I am waiting for Doom III too. I'll buy it the first week it comes out. Quake 4 is being developed by id Software, and co-developed by Raven Software of Madison, Wisconsin. That's my state! I don't know if Quake 4 will use the Doom III engine or not? Either way Doom III is going to look really good when it comes out. The game will use the most state-of-the-art graphics in a PC game. The game is also developed for Xbox, but some of us don't like X-Box because lack of good games or just hate Microsoft for what they are. Some of you gamers may have already heard this, but

- A computer programmer(s) shouldn't release a console. (Bill Gates founder of Microsoft and Nolan Bushnell, Atari's founder, and founder of Pong)
- A card company shouldn't make consoles. (Nintendo)
- An American airplane simulator retailer shouldn't make arcade games. (ServiceGames)

- And a television manufacture(s) should stay away from making games. (Sony, Magnavox)
- None of them did.

I read this off a message board somewhere, and thought it was quite good. The online multiplayer success of this game is forecasted to be greater than Quake III. We rather play on our Playstation 2s though so we might see Quake IV or Doom III on Playstation 2. I mean I don't know for sure, but it would make a lot of sense.

Another dull Weekend. But all is not lost. (2004-01-25 14:14)

I am remembering back to my first year of high school. I just came back from another school I was going too. I was voted for prom of 1999. I was only 16. I was dreaming of a flash back of that time. Adam Graf and Megan Hinbuck got the most votes of anyone, so they were the King & Queen of the freshman prom. The school spit the times up by grade. No one cared if you stayed the whole night. Anyway in reality, I went to prom, but I didn't dance with a girl. Even now I don't have a girl in my life. I forget how I got voted in. Every school has a student board. They make arrangements for special events. Then my dream continued to be more fantasy than real life. The entire night was about finding just how I got so popular that year. I was in track and field, and cross-country that year. My dream had a couple scenes of me sprinting 2nd and then first. And the crowd cheered. Ann was also part of this. All of it wasn't true, but I had a girl in my life, her name was Ann Redmon. She was also in both events. In real life, I never asked this girl out. This all took place on the week of prom (same week as homecoming) in the winter. Then I played in band, and played my instrument well at the basketball game. Ann and I danced that night at prom. I quoted Shakespeare to her and she liked it. She and I didn't care about anyone else. But during all of this, I wondered, was I doing all of this myself? I invited Randy (big friend of mine) to prom. He just sat, and watched us dance to the bad R & B singles. I hate R & B and pop, not showing hatred towards the tunes of course. It was really vivid in my mind, and I remember it well. Enough of this fantasy rubbish now.

Randy and I were supposed to do something today, but he had things to do. Randy drives his car a lot, and he has a girl friend who is younger than he is. Bob also has a girl friend too. You know what this means! It means they have girlfriends, and I don't (which is true), which also translates to I have nothing to do today, and neither one of them can come over and have good time. Not very good friends are they?

I updated my webpage again today. It now looks cooler. And I've been playing Final Fantasy X-2, and Diablo 2 off and on today. My cousin, who is in the Navy, is going to play from Pensacola, Florida. There is a naval academy there, probably Pensacola Naval Academy. He just bought the Diablo 2 Battle Set a week ago. I always wanted to play with him. I'm about 18 % complete with Final Fantasy X-2. We could play an ip connection game, which would be faster than BattleNet itself, but it would be long distance. It's over the Internet why would it be long distance? I know I don't like it.

To sum this entry - I had a dream about a girl, Randy couldn't come over today and I'm playing Diablo 2 on the Internet like I always do

Oh yeah, I own a lot of PS2 games. Hehehe. Thirty-two in all. I know that everyone likes PS2, and dislikes Gamecube and Xbox. Why is that? Too many Final Fantasy fans out there! Well guess what, Gamecube is getting one Final Fantasy title. By the way I like Final Fantasy 7, 8, 10 and 10-2. Haven't played Tactics or FFX. I hear IX is better than VIII though but not better than FFXVII. Final Fantasy VII I heard was the reason some people bought Playstation. Either that or was it Metal Gear Solid, maybe it was both? I bought a Playstation in 2002 and PS2 in 2003 so played those consoles very late. Anyhow I watched my friend play my copy of Final Fantasy VII and it looked okay. He said it was a technical marvel in 1997, which for some reason still looks above average today. I know this was before Metal Gear Solid, Crash Bandicoot 3 and Gran Turismo 2 came out. I only played Gran Turismo 2 because I am a little shy towards older Playstation games, before 1999 anyways.

Nintendo was getting FFVII, but Squaresoft ran out of cartridge space so the developer withdrew. Why Nintendo didn't you add a cd drive, like the Sega CD, to the N64 instead of that stupid disc drive only released in Japan? Maybe then you wouldn't of lost Squaresoft and all your RPGs. Maybe Square-Enix will develop regularly for Nintendo on Gamecube's predecessor. Square and Nintendo partnered and created a studio called Game Designer's Studio which help create Crystal Chronicles. Square games are fine with Playstation, but it just seems more authentic on a Nintendo platform. I think. IGN.com translated this developer with this summery, "Development subsidiary created by SquareSoft. Headed by Square director Akitoshi Kawazu, who worked on the Legend of Mana series. Game Designer's Studio, with money from the Hiroshi Yamauchi (owner of the Seattle Mariners, and former Nintendo President) setup 'Q Fund,' is specifically focused on creating products for Nintendo's GameCube console. The company's first project for the platform is Final Fantasy Crystal Chronicles, an RPG based on Square's enormously popular series." The game developer doesn't have their own webpage yet.

I am not sure why Final Fantasy: The Spirits Within failed at the box office. It was graphically superior to anything before it. The movie was much better looking then any of Disney / Pixar's films, and had a huge budget of over 100 million all funded by Square Pictures. If you couldn't tell I am a recent Final Fantasy and console RPG fan, then you haven't been paying much attention to this blog lately because I'm all about playing the latest role playing games. I like the largest, most detailed games available.

So you, my fans, liked my open source dvd entry? I got over 50 hits on that entry, and I only wrote two paragraphs. This entry should be the biggest entry I had. Look yourself by placing the pointer over the blog title sometime. Did you know that some wise-crack business guy is trying to sue open source because it's free? Why can't people just leave Linux's open source programmers alone. There is also some company wanting to sue Linux because it uses ASCII code and that company help create ASCII. Companies CAN NOT copyright binary code. Last article I read, the Supreme Court is currently dropping charges. There has been talk a while back that Linux source code should be switched to Unicode which is 16 bits per character instead of 7 bits. The advantage of Unicode is for those countries with odd symbols like Japan and China to able to have source code in Chinese or Japanese instead of our Latin languages or A, B, C, D, etc. Since UNIX was developed in America (AT &T) it was mostly compiled in English, this didn't help other countries much. Early UNIX programmers must of spoke and read English.

Webpage here: http://zdnet.com.com...102-11_2-518300.html. I found out that the DeCESS file I downloaded was a key element because it decompresses essential plug-in VOB files. Believe it or not, DVD Copy Control Association was created to license DVD to Hollywood producers. It's another Linux verses Media Industry all over. Oh well, here is a link for DeCESS plugin. I put it on my server for the curious to download. It's the latest version I think. <http://www.pressente...scampbel/decess.zip> (25 KB) DeCESS is meant to work with Linux. I don't know if DeCESS will work as a plugin for Mplayer. If I find what it belongs too, I'll let you know in my next entry. If so, that would be really great if it would work. I know that there is software that will backup your DVD video with Windows. I found something else called Gordian Knot Pack, and Gordian Knot Rip Pack. <http://prdownloads.s...rge.net/gordianknot/> I knew there had to be some package with sourceforge.org. The archive file contains DVDDecrypter 3.1.7.0, vStrip 0.8f CSS, DVD2AVI 1.76 CLI, DVD2AVIdg 1.0.0, BeSweet 1.5b23, azidts 0.1, vsfilter, Decomb 5.1, fluxsmooth, Convolution3D, Deen, TomsMoComp, AviSynth 2.53, VobSub 2.23, VirtualDubMod 1.5.10.1, Nandub RC2 lumafix ecffix, AviMuxGUI 1.13, chapterXtractor 0.962 and Robot4Rip 0.5. This program has exe files, so it's meant for Windows only. Here is another good link, <http://www.doom9.org....html?/software2.htm>. I also checked out DVD Shrink's webpage. Find the link from Doom9's website. I am currently downloading from this page. It seems to be a good reference on all I need.

I crashed my Jeep today on the way to school. The damage was minor, though I had a ride, it sucked. I went in the ditch, and the impact was forceful enough to inflate my airbag. I walked out of it with no injuries. It's important to turn off the engine, which I did. My fault wasn't that there was a car in front of me who slowed down, my fault came later. Maybe he swerved to, no? The conditions were icy and I lost control of the vehicle, and I slammed on my brakes. I had 4 wheel drive in gear which should have prevented me from losing control. I'm mad at my vehicle, 4 wheel drive didn't save me from this disaster. Fortunately, I didn't do any damage to anyone, but I broke a tree or two, and a fence. This happened in front of a Sheriff's truck. I had instant backup. The tow truck came about 20 minutes later, and the Jeep got out by it's own. I'll be able to get back on the road in a few days so I'm happy about that. I thought I was done for when I got home, but my Dad said, "You've learned your lesson, didn't you?" This is a lesson for all of you drivers; always have your vehicle in 4-wheel drive in winter. There goes my perfect driving record.

I was playing Playstation 2 to get my mind off things. You could say I was a little shaken up today after I got home. Grand Thief Auto 3 was the game I was playing. A videogame has no rules I reminded myself, real life has rules, and the cops aren't crazy like they are in the game. Endless cop cars try to put your car out of commission any way possible. I wouldn't be able to out drive a cop car today, no possible way.

Techno is great (2004-01-28 14:16)

So no one liked my last entry? Only 4 views! Well, I'm gonna try again, and write something that doesn't have anything to do with computers. Am I suppose to write depressing entries? Write how the world is against us, and how we are hurt by it? No, I DON'T write like that. I'm happy, I don't need depression in my life, it's a waste of time!

Why is there so many people listening to techno on places like Shoutcast.com? Twenty-five percent of listeners prefer a variety of music over one genre. The number one station at shoutwave.com is Digitally Imported, a trance station online, free, and with no advertisements. I only listen to Live365, and Shoutcast's music. I was into trance since 2001. Sure, I listen to 93x, a rock station in the Twin Cities, because I want to fit in plus they have some interesting talk shows in the morning. I can tell difference between the bands. Paul Oakenfold is really good artist. I heard somewhere that a lot of people heard of Mauro Picotto. There aren't any lyrics in songs of this type, this beat or pulse. The music is rated by how good the beat is. I still like ATB. He's remixes are relaxing music, I don't know if it is incredible. One song I thought was incredible was Zombie Nation's Ahahahaha Remix. I also have 12 Ministry of Sound soundtracks. These songs are played during soccer games in Europe. Chicane is also a good artist. My techno collection is about 2 Gigabytes, there's many songs I've haven't listened too closely. There is a place in Minneapolis called 101 Blue on Hennepin Ave that is a DJ House/Techno/Rock dancing hall. I should go there some time. I don't know anyone who has been there. I've been doing good, almost completely forgot the ascendant yesterday.

I guess when you're a computer person in the Industrial Networking field, you don't meet any nice looking blondes, 19, who're interested in computer technical stuff, cars or videogames. I definably won't go on blind dates, I know that. I'm shy towards talking to girls often, that's exactly why they aren't crazy about me. Sniff I wonder if any girls my age like Anime? I'm not a strong / hardcore anime fan. I watch Space Ghost Coast to Coast when it's on (use to be 10pm on Cartoon Network), but it's never on anymore so I just stop watching it. I sometimes catch Family Guy, but that the show doesn't interested me. (If I'm going to watch TV I'll watch a Western. I like Westerns.) Cartoons should not be this low of quality. Remember Looney Tunes? - Those were some high quality cartoons. I mean the crazy rabbit tales, no cheesy animation, just original as all gets out because a lot of them were directed by Chuck Jones (cartoon director.) Tom and Jerry was also a great cartoon I watched when I was a kid. Now 10 year olds are into Spongebob Square Pants and Dexter's Labitory. I'm sorry for those of you who liked Felix the Cat. I didn't like him.

In school we got our hands dirty. I mean this as a figure of speech of course. The class got to tear apart old IBMs. The motherboards weren't old, but they sure were outdated. Now-a-days I can just screw those babies to the frame with no troubles, the IDE ports aren't on a separate board like those ones were. But what a pain in the ass to unplug everything! This particular curcuit board was even wedged against the side with a plastic board underneath. Another pain in the ass is documenting all the plug-ins, and ports inside the computer. I had this nifty idea of using 'post its' on the IDE cables. Next week if this computer doesn't work I could of ESDed it. Abbreviations for electrostatic discharge. We have these super cool ESD bracelets we wear. If I had these a year ago and knew what I was doing, I wouldn't of spent all that money on new motherboards.

Today I was downloading more ATB albums off the Internet. I only got another 60 MB off iMESH, and another 50 MB off ripcast. I know, who cares how much mp3s I get of the Internet. There are many people who download 100s of songs in a day. Let's not start that argument. Continuing on, I think some good tunes are ATB and Paul Van Dyke rave mix - DJ Special K and Sunscreen. Sunscreen sounds like Reggie mixed with trance. Not bad. I have some of his other songs like My Dream, Fields of Love, 9am, Let U Go, etc. Don't get me wrong I'm still in rock artists just not as much anymore. My friends sometime caught me listening to Metallica, SotD, Black Sabbath, and Romstine. Whatever's on 93X anyways. Go ahead, go to 93x.com. Now that is Hardcore, trance is my softer side.

Unlike other days, I rate this day a 3/5 because it's not horrible, not very good. I'm trying out this new file sharing tool called Overnet Pro 0.52, and I'm not sure I like it. It's another network that does the same thing as my usual uses of iMesh and Limewire. Sometimes it will work, sometimes it won't. I'm a little afraid to use Kazaa because my connections get deleted or close often. This doesn't occur with iMesh or Limewire much at all, or if it does, it's my isp reconnecting, which shouldn't effect the hosts. I have an older version, 2.1. Kazaa now is at 2.6. All I know is that Kazaa! 2.1 still works. I don't know if Kazaa knows it's awful reconnection issues. I'm not the one whos goign to email them and say, I think there is something seriously wrong with your client, because I can't find the hosts I want once I'm disconnected. That's my reason - Kazaa sucks.

Remembering back to a couple segments ago, I commented on the Doom III engine, and how great that'll be. Now, I think I'm going to comment on Valve Software's new Source engine used primary for Half-Life 2. No doubt, Valve Software will make a ton of money leasing the source code out to other developers. You know, I haven't played Half-life for 2 years, it could have been the graphics, or it could be that the game wasn't fresh. Half-life had the Counter-strike Mod that most Half-life fans have tried. Half-life 2 is more commando based game like counter-strike. When I see Half-life 2, I think of the Resident Evil port on Gamecube. One reason I can think of - it looks like a Western European town. The mansion on RE1 and RE2 looked European with all the old paintings, stained glass, and gloomy, eerie sets. Half-life 2 is going to have some unusually realistic zombies as seen in the screenshots. If you want to read Half-life 2 - head over to Half-life2.com. IGN.com also has a good article on this game. Valve was working on the source engine shortly after Half-life was released. That must be 5 ½ years already. To keep it short I was amazed at the screenshots, the game looks really cool. It's going to be awesome on a lan when it comes out. Just like the original. Maybe someone will release a map pack including all the original Half-life missions. If it ain't broken, why fix it, right?

In game shot of the PC version of Valve's Half-life 2. There are better screenshots I'm sure.

Used the multimeter today at home. I wasn't sticking the ends into wall sockets. I was in the heat room of the basement, trying out the alligator clamps Dad gave me last week. I took readings. I think it was 360 Volts. Of course, I could go outside and clamp it to the electric meter (that box outside that measures voltage usage of the whole house) Then I got a N64, and things were lighting up. That's before I got old, and what changed? I'm still playing games. Games improved, but same as 7 years ago, I'm pushing the same buttons, sitting in the same chair, watching the same television, and loosing sleep over it. And than I ask myself why? It's an answer only a gamer can answer. I play less then half as much as I did in 1999 or even 2000. This is an improvement, is it not?

The Internet, unlike games, inspired me to do a lot more. It inspired me to create a website about games, to read up on games, to read up on the Minnesota Vikings, and to write about myself. The Internet got me to download Mp3s, find programs that would rip mp3s, and those that would listen too them. The Internet inspired me to talk to my friends through IM. Most of all, the Internet gave me a reason to stay up late. And play Diablo 2 all night long.

Everyday surfing a new experience, everyday a broad (2004-02-01 14:18)

Hello world. It's me again creating my 25th wonderful blog of myself. I created a new quote "Everyday surfing a new experience, everyday a broader understanding of music." I made it up myself. I'll translate, it means, "Everyday I try a different song, the more songs I listen too, the more I know which ones I like the most." Every days a new experience. Thanks to the Internet I have songs I never thought I listen too and like. I rediscovered a new group of radio station from Yahoo's Launch Radio. It's a lot like Live365.com.

Bob, his friend Angie, and I went to the mall today. It was more fun to hang around Bob then most days. I went into Hot Topic for the first time. It would be hard to describe. At first appearance, the hard metal was disturbing. The room was filled with Slopknot, Iron Maiden t-shirts, a lot of piercing and odd bumper stickers. I had to leave it, Bob wouldn't leave. Because I wasn't causing trouble, everyone could see that, maybe this crowd would just vanish. That wouldn't mean Bob would have to vanish with them, but he looked like he's use to this place. Any how, Angie's the more silent type of females. She hasn't spoken one word to me today. I didn't want to embarrass her in front of Bob. She's not in high school and doesn't act like one either. Then Bob, her, and I walked into Spencer. I heard the name somewhere before. Small world, heh? See, it was full of expensive clocks with neon lights. I wanted those neon clocks, but seventy dollars for a small clock like that. Of course, no! That is defiantly price gouging I think. Then, I look on the other shelf and saw a weird clock 50 % off, and it didn't look half as good as the neon clocks I saw.

Time passed, I went over to Suncoast and bought a couple DVDs. First was Man with no Name trilogy (Clint Eastwood) and then I got 10 John Wayne B movies. It was that choice or games. I also wanted Final Fantasy 7 for the PC, that's a really old game. That game should only be 14 bucks used I had the money. Hey I thought, Wow I getting 10 John Wayne movies for 40 dollars, what a bargain! Just as I said before. Clint Eastwood acts like John Wayne sometimes. Did anyone see a lot of similarities between The Shootist and Unforgiven? Dad said the John Wayne movies I got weren't his good ones. I was disappointed.

School on Monday. I have to study for a test like every week after this. It's not hard – just the basics of taking apart computers. But soon it will be harder. It will get in depth and talk about all the buses and microchips on a motherboard. I know where most of them are. I want to do well in this class. Classmates are treating me well, that's good. Sometime I want to invite them over for a lan party. I feel shy towards that because they don't know me too well. They know me through class discussion. One question I have to ask myself everyday is, do these guys want me to know them. This is the only way I am going to get a further education so I mustn't back down. Somehow I feel forced into college, like something isn't right? I want to go to college so nothing should be wrong? Maybe I should be in a different class? But why start over, it's only going to be the same curriculum over again. Interesting though, I had this same experience in 10th grade.

My comments on the Super Bowl are I caught a glance at the Patriots rejoicing at the end and went to bed. It's nice playing in a state-of-the-art football stadium like Houston. This team also won the 2002 Super Bowl. Minnesota Vikings Running Back Carl Eller got into the Football Hall of Fame today (7th Hall of Famer for the Vikings.) I never heard of the him. Hmm, I wonder if the Vikes will get their act together for the 2004 season. Again they'll most likely win the first game and maybe the second. But mid-season they'll just plunge to the bottom of the chart. I don't think coaching has anything to do with it. The group doesn't seem focused on the game and they make stupid mistakes like Dante under throwing the football and 50 yard passes to Randy Moss. One thing for sure, the Vikings turned all offense, and that's not like them. Historically the Vikings have been better defensive than offensive.

Well I am just puzzled that I forgot about the 2004 Daytona 500. This was the Winston cup, but there is also the Nextel Cup, featuring Nascar drivers one class below. All seems the same to me. I don't have any favorite Nascar drivers myself. Sometimes the Daytona 500 isn't always 500 laps. One year it was cut short in recent history because of thunderstorms. The name Daytona 500 just sticks to it. It reminds me of Daytona USA (Daytona USA 2 in arcades) for Dreamcast. I miss that game. The classic arcade game is really fun. Some day when the arcade game disappears from arcades I'll buy it from an antique dealer at a great price, put it in my house and play on it. It's interesting I haven't seen Daytona USA 2 at Aladdin's Palace (arcade in Maplewood Mall) when I went with my friend Bob and his friend Angie. My reasons are that it's a game with the same backbone of the original. I am very fond of the original. It has that arcade feel and I just felt good sitting behind the wheel and spending a dollar on a race. I'm not an expert driver though. Daytona USA 2 has high resolution graphics, more tracks, better soundtrack, and nicer screen. Only reason I know about it is it is at the local Wal-mart. Daytona USA 2 is very similar to Rush 2049 (Atari racer in Arcades). Other Nascar games I own are Nascar '99 for N64, Nascar Thunder 2003 for Xbox, and Daytona USA for Saturn. Daytona USA for Saturn the least favorite of them all. It's going to be odd come 2005 not seeing Sega as a major coterminant in the console race. I'm sure there are many people favoring Playstation 3, and that'll leave no room for Sega.

The college caught me with my pants down again. (another figure of speech) This time it was that I enrolled in a class I never went too this year. Now I can't go to it because class has been going on for 3 weeks. It was basically a class I took before in high school. WITC has this particular class set up as a 3 credit course. I am waiting for my youth options course to transfer over to WITC to replace this 3 credit course. That's that story. If it doesn't then I am going to look for another excuse for missing this class. Okay, the problem isn't that I missed the class. The problem is I took this class during high school, missed an important Spanish class (so I can't speak Spanish now), and now WITC may / may not except my C+ grade. My high school wanted me in college. You know what WITC told me, "Well Ian. At least you can do it over again better!" I didn't know whether or not to get mad at the WITC consoler who dragged me into this, and basically said, "You don't have enough credits to be half-time. Come see me tomorrow. Have a nice day."

I got my Jeep today. It looked better then I thought. My views were it would be multicolored with a black grill and black side panel over the right wheel. The door doesn't shut as well as it did before the crash. But Jeff Johnson's Autobody in Hudson did a superb job on fixing it up. I'm really happy to be mobile again. The weathers about 3 degrees above freezing. More hydroplaning on the roads. May be dangerous tomorrow.

This is Ian signing off.....

Hi, everybody. Yeah know what happened to me today? I went to a Eagle Scout ceremony. It wasn't half bad. Just that I never were friends with Rance. Long ago when I was a boy scout, he came in, since his dad was the big cheese, the Scout Master, he was usually commanding us around. But that was okay, someone had to make decisions. A good example is when we planned campouts. All I had to do is describe it. Rance had to organize it. I know how it was, I was Patrol Leader too. There was this kid bugging me, made me feel crazy, so I quit scouts all together. I left scouts when I was turning 17, and just reached Life Rank (not lying here.) It wasn't the really the kid that bugged me at times when I was slow in speech. I hated to be slow in thought. It was that I haven't really did my part as a scout. I was scribe and Patrol Leader for 7 weeks. Not the best one either. I could make decisions, but that's about it. I couldn't teach how to do knots (except for a few) or calm the younger kids down. You get the idea. I know I wasn't good because I wasn't voted in The Order of the Arrow. I wanted to be, but I was never elected. Well I thought, it's time to leave. Well, it's 2 years later, and I'm too old for scouts. I'm probably the only guy from the troop long ago that will be at his ceremony. I haven't seen Rance for over a year. I hear he's kinda immature for his age now. So I was iffy on whether or not I would go. So I go.

(3 Hours Later) I got back from the Eagle Ceremony. Bob, Joe, Justis, and former scouts were there. I said hello to a couple of them, told them about my school what I do. I couldn't began to talk about how I hate Microsoft sometimes. I talked to some people about using MS Windows to play games and surf the Internet. I'm know I'm not like most adults who don't play computers and Linux. Then I left. I didn't want to spoil Rance's fun. I felt like I couldn't say anything good to him. I went just to see him be awarded. I felt like I was going to embarrass myself talking why I left. I was a little interested on why there was a teenager wearing a SCC letter jacket. I pretended I didn't know him. State Reps and boy scout board members were also there. I just didn't feel up to speaking to all of the people i use to know.

Today, I tried to install Linux on my Dell. Something went wrong, and now I can't access Windows XP. I put in Redhat Installation CD tried to load a driver to recognize the hard disk. It was Intel driver that worked but then froze. So I then tried renaming all the drives to NTFS so that the drives could be combined, which worked. But Windows XP still didn't boot. My last choice is try to install Windows XP again, and use the cds to reinstall the software. I found out Dell computers are actually anti-Linux machines. The process should of went smoothly when I re disputed free space for Linux with Partition Magic. P.M.8 is the best there is. So today will suck trying to reinstall all the games / programs on it. But I know it can be done, that's the best turnout. I installed Linux a dozen times, and this never happened.

Life has been really good lately. The computer was just a minor set back. I'm only lost 1 of 3 computers I have access too. If the worst happens, I won't lose much data. My last backup was one week ago. I think I'll do my Micro Operating Systems II homework tonight because nothings going on 'till tomorrow.

Going to play Final Fantasy X-2 tonight, game store tomorrow. Yes, I know I've been on that title forever (over two months). I haven't completed that game yet. I want to see if Yuna mets Tidus or if she falls for someone else. If I had a choice if I liked Final Fantasy X or FFX-2 better, I would defiantly pick FFX-2. It has minor improvements, plus your character has more freedom on where to go. Freedom and less lunar gameplay makes games more interesting and more fun. FFX had some very hard bosses. While that Boss at the end of Zanterkan was very hard in FFX-2, it didn't stop me from beating him. I like FFX and FFX-2 because u can do a lot of magic combos that do good damage. Though, in my opinion, Final Fantasy X for Playstation 2 had a better script. The number of save spheres in the game were there when you needed them. I rate FFX script a 5/5 but I give FFX-2 a 3/5 for script. The story probably isn't as deep as Metal Gear Solid, but isn't to bad. In both games, my reason to play them both are watching the cut scenes because they did make good use of the physics engine. This is something I admire in a game

Now Readers, I am proud to present Gaming, -again -

I want to go to the game store, and buy a game called Winning Eleven 6 for PS2. But i don't think they will have it used. I only have one other soccer game and that's FIFA 2002 for Gamecube. I use to play it a lot. And I gotten rusty on the gameplay so why just play it again. It's free. Perhaps I'll make time before homework to play a couple soccer matches. We don't have Fox Sports World so I don't get to see soccer ever. I never ask my dad because he hates soccer. He's a big Vikings fan.

Comments on Winning Eleven 6: So far it looks really cool. On the box, the header has "The Worlds Best Soccer Game is coming to North America." I knew that Winning Eleven was a big series in Europe and Japan. It was on the #2 spot last year for 2 months. I played both FIFA 2002 and this game. This game looks a little more animated (although FIFA 2002 had better graphics on Gamecube). I tried out the training section, and the game told me which buttons to push for what moves. If you own a Playstation 2, this is a good buy! It's not a cheap, buggy game, it's as good as any of EA Sport's soccer games. Trust me on this!

Knoppix is the best self boot Linux in existance (2004-02-10 14:21)

Date: 2/10/04 at 7:08PM

My dell is okay now. Not that I was going to have a heart-attack, but it scared me half to death. Unknown to me at the time, it has a RAID hard drive. It shouldn't make any difference, but it does. I called tech support, and the guy on the phone said turn your RAID setting off, and set Primary drive to AUTO. That would do her, I installed WINXP PRO back on, and it's awesome to have it working. I found out that Norton Antivirus and PSP 8.0 came with the DELL as free software. At school, our class ran out of "linux boxes" so Steve gave us Knoppix. Knoppix (<http://www.knoppix.net>) boots off CD, and runs the KDE desktop. Hmm. Very cool. Read my review (text) at <http://www.geocities...s101/knoppix3.3.html>. It's cool because I can do my assignments on almost any computer. Steve told me that if Knoppix gets to 4.0, he'll call up his tech buddy, and tell him to download the huge 740+ MB ISO file. The OS seems to use every bit of 700 MB the CD gives it.

I wonder when Bob can come over again? Wednesday is a free day for me, and it would be fun for us to play some games. He has a job to keep, and books to study, all at the same time. Bob, you see, uses computers only for the Internet, chat and word processing. I am willing to give him Knoppix, but I don't think he'll take it. He doesn't like Linux now. He had it on his computer for a short time. Mandrake 6.0 is not the best Linux version. He, of course, couldn't get it too work well on his machine (he was only running 300 MHz with 64 MB of RAM in 1999), but he got access to the Internet, and ICQ worked. I have Mandrake Linux 6.2 (older Linux, like 1999 or something) and those things aren't easy to install. I tried installing it just for the heck of it a few months back. I couldn't get pass the real mode part of it. This was an early REAL MODE build of Mandrake Setup.

And Bob - I really do think your webpage is funny. Just that I wish u change your stories. How about u be a popular rockstar. You'll be the next Metallica! U can still have your super hero adventures - but a rock star - that would be much cooler! Hey man, just giving you some ideas. That would be you. I'll be your drummer. Okay. Say I'm the best gull darn drummer in the whole gull darn world. I bet your ratings would go higher, twice than normal! We're playing Paint it Black okay Bob!?! Say your latest cd sold 4 million copies the first day!

Alright already, I'll stop talking about Linux. My friend came over two days ago. It's probably the best fun I had the whole week. Not everyday do I get to play videogames with a friend. We played soccer and each won 2 games. The first two games were 0-0. We had a goalie shoot-out after the two over times. Guess who won? Me! In Randy's opinion, FIFA 2002 was better then Winning Eleven 6 although he mentioned the players weren't as 'smart' as Winning Eleven 6. We had a hard time scoring goals. Our balls were either two high or no where near the net. LOL! That wasn't all we played, others were Project Gotham (Xbox), Midnight Club II (Playstation 2), Toyko Extreme Racer 3 (PS2) Mario Kart Double Dash (GCN) and Super Mario Bros. (NES) Randy still plays his NES at home all the time so he's good at it. He can make it to level 8.3. He knows where the secret bean stock is in 4.2 so he teleports to 8.1. I'm still in 4.1. I take the secret pipe area in 2.1. Die on the spot! I have 0 lives, and he has 6 or more lives at the beginning of 8.2, then he dies 6 times after that. Now that I own an old school console, I don't want to play it. It's one of those 'I have it now; I can concentrate on today's games' day. The console is as old as I am. Randy and I should eventually play SMB through JNES which comes with a LAN/Ethernet option for player 2. SWEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEE T!

Tomorrow, I'll have to start writing a script for Justin and myself. Justin is my partner for Network Cabling, one of my classes at WITC. Although what we do isn't important, it's important that the script be at least 15 minutes long. Reading very slow will just confuse people. Fiber Optic cable really amazes me. That's my report! We are doing a long essay on it. It can transfer 2 GB of data per second! That's state-of-the-art I think. The CAT IV COAXIL cables that WITC uses, you've guessed it, are very weak in comparison. However, it's still incredibly fast. I don't think I could find enough downloads to make it worth while. I click Download, 2 Seconds later I'm done. Find another page, another download. You get the general idea here. I have dial up, so everything's fast too me. But you know, having 160 KB transfer rates can only provide so much. Confused? Our school has fast Internet, but not as fast as I would like. It should be faster! Like 512KBPS or 1 MBPS. However, I don't think that will be possible for another 3 years at least. Just by how the funding goes.

I put Heidi Klum on my webpage today (2004-02-21 14:22)

Date: 2/21/04 at 2:55AM

Imaging website templates before you create them is hard work. I spent an hour on created a new logo (not the one from 4 days ago) for the 2004C template. I like Heidi Klum so she's my main point of interest on the new site. Everything's backwards compatible with my recent pages. I think this is much more exciting. Paint is a awesome tool if you use it right. At it's core (website), there's nothing new. Haven't added interesting pages anyways. I'm been making webpages since 1999, and I haven't quite figured out if updating is the key factor or creating new templates is the key factor. Creating new webpages can make your site look nicer plus could make link checking easiler. Create all new links that day. I had this trouble building a webpage in July 2003. I had this cool webpage I made, spent a 1 week, and it's still worst than the last template I made in February. Except I made many, many improvements, fixed links, too the eariler one. I find that updating new templates are much better practice. I worked on 4 new templates in 3 months. I believe the one I made in January was the best. But it comes somewhat close to version 3.0. Just look at the page.

I'm really excited for Dungeon Siege 2. I own Dungeon Siege, and I played it in 2001 and early 2002. I beat Dungeon Siege (both maps that came with cd), and the graphics were cool back then. Mediocre by today's standards. The ability to equip yourself with a sturdy sword and shield is a good feeling. I kinda forgot about Diablo 2 Lord of Destruction after I played Dungeon Siege. It doesn't look very good on faster computers. Neither was Diablo 2. Diablo 2 looked horrible but played well. It ran decently on my old 650 MHz (which I gave to my dad in 2001) Athlon Compaq Presario with 256MB of Ram and 32MB Geforce. Today I have a 64 MB Geforce 3, and it doesn't look too much different than on my other computer with 256 Geforce. The difference is also 700 MHz. The polygon count must not exceed a certain amount. Not like Unreal Tournament 2003 which looks awesome on my Geforce 4 256MB. I run it at 1600/1200 res, with 3 layers of anti-aliasing on. It makes it look better than Unreal Championship for Xbox.

Speaking of RPGs, I have Neverwinter Nights, and I forgot about it. I mean one big advantage is it does run in 1600/1200 high resolution mode having 4 layers of Anti aliasing. I didn't have 'nice' 4 layers because it affected my performance just a tad. NWN runs great over a v.92 modem. I am very novice when it comes to that game. It's been weeks since I last played it with school going on and everything. I've been in combat but died quickly. My character of choice is the half-orc barbarian. I played the game today. I met this guy online. He helped me though the forgotten realms. I was playing Hordes of the Underdark. Everyone's playing some sort of mod online. Less than half the games on the Internet come with the cd-rom. Half the time you have to download data files. My game version was out of date I had version 1.61 and it's now version 1.62b2. It takes me about 20 minutes just to download the new patch. I usually download these big files over at school, and bring it home on my personal thumb stick. I got to play for about 3 hours before I got tired of doing nothing.

I got a new 40 Gigabyte internal hard drive for my computer. I think I will load Windows 98SE on it. I hate to waste an activation on Windows XP Pro Upgrade CD which is running on my 120 GB 7200 ATA harddrive. Windows 98SE is free. There is this device that lets you switch between 3 hard drives, and I want that device. You can find it off Tigerdirect.com. I have 2 hard drives installed, and I'll install the new one maybe tomorrow. Fun, more space to fill with MP3s. I only have about 6 Gigabytes of them. 37 GB - 6 GB - 600 MB for Win98 = 30.4 GB of free space. That's still a lot of space. On my Dell, I have a 114 GB Scuzzy Drive (super fast hard drive). I could store all my games I want to play including entire MP3 collection with about 85 Gigabytes left of free space. I have 3 computers (5 hard drives) so 15.5 GB + 112 GB + 109 GB + 37GB + 37GB = 310.5 GB of free space.

Trojan Horse dumped my OS! Serious let down. (2004-02-22 14:22)

Date: 2/22/04 at 4:37AM

I've been found. A high profile virus hit one of my computers today. I kinda thought I was invisible because I had antivirus software. Anti Virus software can't do a d*mn if you can't get too it. I wouldof lost a lot of valuable website templates and graphics if I didn't have Linux on board. I could transfer my webpage files to a thumb stick! The computer was really slow. I had the command prompt working and the virus didn't let me open any executables including Norton Antivirus. This got me mad, I even swore out loud. Don't feel bad Bob! Bob had the same problem - maybe it's the same virus? I could of gotten it when downloading Gaim, although I don't see how Gaim could have a Trojan Horse. I dunno.

I got out today, went to Target, and bought a CD restorer. It gets rid of scratches on cds. It was 50 dollars. I had a couple Dreamcast games that didn't work so I used it to restore them, then there was this cd that I use on my computer a lot filled with pictures that I wanted restored. I always take real good care of all my discs.

Before my PC crashed, I was playing Diablo 2 for the majority of the afternoon. Diablo 2 is still rocking. Being out going, I was chatting with other players talking about coming consoles, Final Fantasy, PC specs. I did a couple bloody runs in act 5. I progressed from act3 to act 5. My amazon is level 50. I have this unique bow that does a lot of damage in nightmare. Hell's suppose to be more like Hell with the new patch. I remember dominating hell with amazons when I was really into the game. The hard part was trying to convince someone to give up high hp armor. I suppose that's true with everyone. ACT 4 was always the hardest level for Zons because the enemies near Diablo's sancenary can out number you easily. Duriel was also a very difficult, and timely point of the game.

Chatting with the right person in Diablo 2 is like finding a needle in a haystack. Most people just want to level up and don't really care who they party up with as long as it helps their game. Only rarely does a person really listen to your conversations. It feels like your talking to a brick wall sometimes when you're ignored. It helps when you know a lot about the game, and u know how to avoid getting killed often, even being the hero of the game saving other player's butt can make them have interest in you. That's the best part because than you can start asking for things you need, and half the time it works. Unless when it's really hard to find, then it's finders keepers. I learned that when I started playing the game 3 years ago.

Hey Ian's Smashing Good Blog Site GREAT title Trojin Horse dumped my OS! Serious let down.. Thats what actually caught my eye. I will book mark it and come back to read later. This isn't really what I was looking for what I really need is information about <http://www.horse-lover-gift-ideas-central.com> related subjects but thank you and I shall return. I wish you well.

I decided today I'm making a RPG myself! (2004-02-26 14:21)

Date: 2/16/04 at 7:40PM

I've been doing many things like hoping for someone to make it over, getting home late from WITC, and watching tv. No time to add an entry to this blog. On my website, I added a different mouse over image menu. It may not be state-of-the-art, but it looks cooler then when I had text for menus. On some high res screens the jpeg images look pixilated, that's because image quality suffered for faster download speeds. You can find my website under the personal website link left of this page. I wasn't sure if my website was age appropriate so I warned readers under 13 should not read it because I have some adult interests. I don't mean about the "I'm in love and crazy about girls" part. I am 19, so therefore I can accept things better than most 12 year olds. If people don't like it, I'll change it back to how it was. First though, I have to have complaints though email feedback. Besides, I think everyone here is old enough. Don't forget the guessbook!

And about myself - I haven't changed much. I'm on the Internet eight hours a day, sure. I'm just surfing for games, gamefaqs, downloading MP3s over a modem, learning about processors specs. Working on my webpage mostly.

I remembering reading on Google, an article on "How to be an evil genius." I really don't know how I came across it. It had a lot of stuff about how to make your friends think that you're in a dangerous situation, and how to make it an allusion or the absolutely right thing to do in any circumstance. Remember, most of this is just weird, and probably won't work at all. I bet there's a lot of the same thing around on the Internet. Have you seen the movie "Young Frankenstein" starring Gene Wilder? It was funny and kind of stupid and brilliant at the same time. At least, AMC couldn't stop saying how brilliant it was after the movie credits. Maybe it was how the movie used the original set used in "Frankenstein." (1931) The Gene Wilder movie was making fun of the original. Actually, I was trying to get the jest of the movie, there are a lot of crazy things in the movie I wanted to get out of it. This is where I think the phrase, "Evil Genius" originally came from Frankenstein....

I know people collect Square games and keep them. I want to promote my fan site. I haven't updated the site for 2 1/2 months. After school, I went to the game store, first bought a PS2 Logitech Headset for 30 dollars. But Dad gave me 10 dollars, so I brought it back and got Final Fantasy Chronicles. (rare game for Playstation) I have a SNES. I bought one recently. It was a better deal to buy this remake than SNES versions. I played Chrono Cross through SNES 9x on Windows before, I am very familiar with it. I must have out smarted them because I know about ROMS. That would be cheating the game store though. I was nice, and now I have an authentic copy for once. I also own Final Fantasy Anthology. I have yet to buy Final Fantasy Origins. I updated my Square webpage with a ported review of Final Fantasy X-2. I don't know whether or not I should add all the characters in that game to my site since so many other fan sites have it, and I can just link it too them. But than why build a fan site if you're not going try to out perform other fan sites doing the same thing. Find my Square site at (<http://www.renegadeviking.cjb.net>). Thus, the endless cycle of improving and updating one's page. Sign the guess book if you think it's cool or sucks or needs work. It's harder of me because I owned my first Squaresoft game 2 years ago. Now I have a total of 11 real copies of Squaresoft games cross platform.

So far, I have Final Fantasy I, II, III and XI Online on my computer. Final Fantasy IV, V, VI, VII, VIII, and IX on Playstation. Final Fantasy X and X-2 on Playstation 2.

Here are the consoles I have thus far. I beat only Final Fantasy VIII and X. I'm working on X-2. And I own and beaten Chrono Cross. That was also a good game. I plan to play Final Fantasy VII for the first time after I get it back from Bob. I know that most Playstation owners prefer VII as their Final Fantasy game of choice. I hear it was revolutionary, but I just got a Nintendo 64 that year so pardon me about not hearing about it right away. I was into Super Mario 64, Zelda 64, and Goldeneye, three revolutionary games the same year. If I had a favorite, it would be Mario 64. It only takes 3 words to describe the perfect platform game and they are Super Mario 64. My favorite level was the first Jolly Jolly Bay level. The music was cool. The level was cool. I have two 3 ring binders full of N64 strategy guides. I completed that game 5 times back when I didn't buy 3 or 4 new games a month. RPGs I'm looking toward are Star Ocean 3, Final Fantasy XII, and Chrono Break (3rd installment in Chrono Series)

Here are the game systems I owned thus far from 1997 - Present

Nintendo 64 (Christmas 1997) Dreamcast (09/09/99) Saturn (11/01/2000) Gameboy Advance (March 2001) Gamecube (November 2001) Playstation (January 2003) Xbox (June 2003) PS2 (October 2003) NES, SNES, GBA SP (December 2003) 100+ roms and emulators for cartridge based consoles back-up on CDR. I'm saving 300 dollars for Playstation 3 when it comes out in August 2005.

I need feedback on my Final Fantasy fan page (use my guessbook please) and my current webpage. So if you would be so kind to drop by and say a few words, that would be most helpful. Comment on the logo, the reviews (I have auto spell so spelling shouldn't be an issue) or the content, or loading times (shouldn't be a big issue) On some computers, the javascript loads behind the first mini-window. If this is a bug that needs squashing, let me know. It's hard to come by automatic navigational menu compilers that are compatible with Geocities. I tried at least ten including AllWebMenus, and Xara menu maker is the only one that works to my knowledge.

I had this idea today where I could make my own RPG on the computer. But I don't know what tools to use. I thought about using a rpg maker, but I would need to be know at least enough code to move characters across the screen. I hear that Armageddon Games, a nonprofit game developer that ported Legend of Zelda to the PC, was working on a Final Fantasy I and II port. I am probably not the first person to think of turning Final Fantasy into a platform game. My first project could be a Final Fantasy hybrid because there are many animated gifs on the Internet that are made after the games. Cloud Strife in a platform game, wouldn't that rock! I'll call it....drum role please....Final Fantasy 7 - Cloud's Adventure. The story could star universally known character, Cloud Strife, finding a serum that would bring back Atheia from the dead. It will be like Super Mario Bros. for the NES using the enemies, and characters from FF VII. Right now, it's not even in the planning stages. First, I will have to learn how to move images across the screen. I could attempt this and fail. Spend the whole summer trying to tweak it myself. Would it be popular freeware game or another mediocre freeware game? No, I'll make it open source! How much time would I have to spend on it for it to be long enough to be enjoyable? I played a couple freeware RPG's like Jennifer's Quest, Dink Smallwood, and Laxis Power. I'm trying to figure out how I'll do the combat system. Maybe I'll just use the standard Super Mario hit / jump. Laxis Power was the best version of RPG I've played freely available. The game closely resembles Breath of Fire. Except for SNES ROMS, which I know some of you readers have on your PC in secret.

I want to learn flash | a look at UT2004 (fixed) (2004-02-27 14:23)

Date: 2/27/04 at 2:13AM

I met this guy from about a year ago on Diablo 2. We talk to each other, he's xwanyecoltx, and he is the top reviewer at newgrounds.com, a community full of flash movies. I usually don't go there often. I did yesterday, and really looked at it. I took my main interest Final Fantasy, and looked at some flash movies. Most of them are based on Final Fantasy 3. I like the Final Fantasy Trilogy. The cat scene was somewhat funny. The graphics are good, it's above and beyond me. Most of these designers have websites that are done in flash. I was trying to learn how to work in Macromedia Flash MX. I can move images around, but I can't do the effects. LOL! I'm no expert for sure! The zooming, the special effects with slash, the timing. I'm another notice at RPG developing. When I heard from him that I can use javascript for some of my effects, I felt better. I have the premiere software to work with, and I can't do a d*mn thing with it. XwanyecoltX got me interested in making flash.

I decided to put Cloud's Adventure on hold. In fact I don't even care for it. I can't find the correct number of characters that'll I'll need in the game. Sure, I have experience in making maps in Dungeon Siege, Neverwinter Nights, Unreal Tournament, and UT2003. I never worked with Milkshape or UT character editor to make models. I have attempted to transfer a UT2003 model to Neverwinter Nights using a add-on for NWN Design Studio. I have one map online <<http://www.pressente...scampbel/nwnmod.exe>> I find that I'll have more fun creating NWN mods than anything else. UT2003 maps make no sense to me, you develop the map, and you set start points, a couple weapon locations and debug. It's a first person shooter, you you frag people in a violent gory way for hours. I've been guilty in this way because I use to be a fps fanatic myself. I liked gory fps for a while. I agree MMORPGS, especially Neverwinter Nights, are more popular (and my favorite), and a bit more sane. Since then I have become a bit more sane. I did ask my parents about playing Final Fantasy XI online this week, and the answer is still no. I really want to play that game even if it costed 12 dollars a month. That's 144 dollars a year. I wish there was a offline mod for FFXI. I dunno maybe I'll play UT2003 online again with the lad lagacy. Lagacy is much better in NWN, but you never know, maybe the newer patches in UT2003 affect the frame rate?

Speaking of which, I was looking information on both Doom III and Half-life 2, and no new information is available. There is very little known facts on the 'source engine' and what Half-life 2 map editor will use or if the rumor porting older Half-life models into Half-life 2 is true. The game will look great in 1600/1200 at 4 layers of anti-ayalasing with all effects on. Maybe it'll support 2000/1600 high res. It's rather pointless because graphics quality won't be that improved. Right now PCs haven't able to work well at that high of resolution. Most people now should at least be able to run at 1200/768 on their current machines. More than half of pc gamers (from a toll on Gamefaqs.com) have bought a new computer since 2001. That's nice. I know in 5 years we'll look back on today's games, and say how low resolution they look. I knew we said that about Unreal Tournament. It was in 1999 that UT was a huge game and state of the art graphics. I remember in 2000, I downloaded 200 maps in total off FileShack.com before they made you pay for their servers accessability. I use to play the maps in deathmatch. Some worked some didn't, some made my computer crash. On the bigger maps, it wasn't uncommon for me to reset my resolution to 800/600 just to play the map at 30 frames a second. Not today, my computer is 10x more powerful than 5 years ago.

[I messed up in this section. I have a Radeon 9800 in my Dell Deminsion XPS. A XFX Geforce 5600 in my custom-built pc ,and a XFX Geforce 5200 in my compaq which replaced my older Radeon 7000]

The Unreal Tournament 2004 demo is out now and the game is coming to stores on March 18th. It seems not long ago Unreal 2 was released. And I was kind-of hyped about getting that game because of the class A gameplay. It's okay, but not as fun as Unreal Tournament. If you like a story based first person shooter, this would be the game for you. Unreal 2 has deathmatch but I never once played it. My guess it's exactly like UT2003, but UT2003 is such a revolutionary first person shooter like the first. I got half way through it 1 month ago than stopped for whatever reason. Unreal 2 has been out nearly a year already. I know Bob was thinking of owning it. Why have him buy it when I can just give him a copy? The UT2004 demo is out, and of course with my connection, I haven't downloaded it. Rumor is that it'll play UT 2003 levels because both games use the same physics engine. UT 2004 features vehicles simular to WARTHOG in Halo. It's optimized using the ATI Radeon 9800 GPU. I own both a 256 MB Geforce 4 5600 Ti and ATI Radeon 9800. I recently installed the Geforce 4 5200 128 MB GPU in my Compaq (given to me 3 years ago in 2001). For months I thought it wouldn't work because I thought my Compaq was using a 4X AGP slot instead of the 8x AGP slot required to use the card. It never accured until now that my Geforce 4 works because it's backward compatible with 4x slots. I confused me because i stuck it in yesterday, and it worked. Before I had a XFX Radeon 7000 64MB GPU because that worked.

UT 2004 sounds like it will have space aged weapon optimized spacecraft so that in assault you can dog fight with everyone else. Another idea taking straight out of Star Wars: Rogue Squadron.

One game that would be nice to have on my computer (from 1998) is the XGRacing 2 released on the PC in 1998 by Acclaim. It is a fast paced game featuring futuristic cycles racing on a track. I known the game for N64. And while it didn't get great reviews, I thought it was cool. The graphics were better then Xtreme G (1997 Acclaim) although the game play in XG2 was a bit worse. It was a Christmas present that year. The first game looked good considering it was a early N64 racing title. It was like Tron, but was much improved. The forth game released multi-platform called XGRA (Extreme-G Racing Association) is like Xtreme G 3. (I own XG3 for Gamecube) I read the reviews off IGN.com and they said the game had some errors, but what's interesting is the game itself at a 6 page developer interview at IGN.com. It got a 7.5 at IGN.com, and 7.8 at Gamespot.com. I read both reviews, and it seemed like Acclaim was trying to make this title a worthy sequel with harder AI, more vehicles, and tracks. I read the review and IGN.com said it was too customizable for it's own good and made the controls too unbalance making it a more difficult game any ways and less fun. If the gameplay was more balanced, the game may of been considered one of the better racers for any console. I want it for PC, and instead Acclaim made this title console exclusive. If I see this game for Gamecube/Xbox I'll buy it at an used price, therefore I save money. I already own other futuristic racers like FZero GX.

I haven't had time to play Knights of the Old Republic lately. KOTOR is a great game with state-of-the-art graphics Right now I am in Neverwinter Nights: Hordes of the Underdark because it's online. I'm going to play it after I finish writing this entry.

This is Ian signing off once again. Tune in 5 days from now to read my next review in my saga. Mean while, visit my webpage.

Doom 3 update | Goldeneye ported to PC!!!! (2004-02-29 14:24)

This is my Doom 3 update. There are a lot of sources off Google so this will be brief. Doom 3 is going to use bump mapping and sound data, shadows loaded with the pixels itself. Doom 3 will use 20 texture passes per second. This new technique is invented by ID Software. The game will be hugely polygon based. As many as 10,000 polygons on objects with their own bump map lighting. The games characters, bots will be bump mapped as well. I'm guessing that the textures will be 128-bit instead of 64-bit because I saw the screen shots, and they look beyond that of Half-life 2. The extra 64-bits will add more color, shadow, depth, a sharpness. Doom 3 will have lighting created in the game engine, and there will be no lighting effects or shadows loading with the map. For the first time ever, moving objects can also have shadows. ID software sounds like they'll be requiring a Pentium 4 2.0 Gigahertz PC with 256 MB of RAM, and a 128 MB graphics card to play Doom 3 at 800x600 at a good framerate. Doom 3 was presented at QuakeCON 2K3 powered by 128MB and 256MB Geforce and Radeons. Doom 3 will need triple much power as Neverwinter Nights because of the polygons. I don't want to blow your guy's brain so go to <http://www.doomworld.com/doom3/> for a complete faq.

I know some of you loved Goldeneye, I know I have. I found out a stand alone game that will have the complete Goldeneye single player, and multiplayer running in high res on your PC. It looks like Wolfenstein. Found at <http://goldeneye.new...m.com/download.shtml>.

Otherwise, many of you may know, but there is also a Goldeneye port for Half-life available at <http://www.3ddownload...elefragged/goldeneye> I have the 1.11 patch, but this game will work with any patch dated after June 2000. Goldeneye 2 was just announced by EA Games this week, and it will be multi-platform. No news whether or not it will be developed for PC.

I had a mid-term today in one class today. I didn't have to take it because it's a snow day! I felt I had to look on the Internet quick for VI commands and EMACS commands, put them on a floppy so I can view them at school. It's as good as note taking because the teachers will think I was looking at the man pages. Linux is interesting, it is the only OS that can fit on a CD and run off it.

Bob and I want to get together. He's been taking the day off too. So this morning I've been watching Bridge to Far DVD on one PC while I reinstall Windows back on one of my PCs. It's a timely process. Somehow I managed to delete hardware acceleration files, Direct X 8.1 if you get specific. My OS was kinda messed up for a while there. I blame it all on Microsoft. The installation cd should have fixed my problem, and it did absolutely nothing! Like I said before, I know how to install Windows XP in my sleep so I didn't get that mad.

I was thinking of bringing two computers over to Bobs so we can play Unreal Tournament (the first one) together. If I bring my 3rd PC, maybe it'll be a 3 person LAN game. It's funny though, I have a CAT V NIC on all my computers, and my HUB is only a CAT 4. It's nothing really, I just loose 90 MB of bandwidth. Dad should have given me a router instead. He said it was his unused hub from work. CAT IV Hubs should be adequate for playing Unreal Tournament or Neverwinter Nights over a server for now. I'm also bringing over Quake 3 Arena because I know Bob has a copy. I have waited 6 months to have a LAN party. I am waiting to kick Bob's butt at Unreal Tournament later today.

I found a used copy of Final Fantasy Crystal Chronicles at the game store. I got it for a modest 35 dollars instead of a full 50. So I was playing it for 3 hours yesterday. Everything looks better than Final Fantasy X, which is amazing to me. Now, I technically have all the Final Fantasy games except for Final Fantasy Tactics, Final Fantasy Adventure and Final Fantasy Legend 1 and 2 (Secret of Mana for Game Boy.) I want to bring over Gamecube so we can play that game in multiplayer, that is if he doesn't want a LAN party. I am also planning to bring over Midnight Club 2 and Winning Eleven 6. Bob told me Midnight Club was one of his favorite games.

This just in, I didn't have a LAN party today. It's a disappointment, but we got 5 inches of snow fall.

On the second part of my blog I realized that there are going to be a dozen RPGs coming out in 2004. Of course Gas Powered Games is releasing Dungeon Siege II [<http://dungeonsiegeii.com/>] Dungeon Siege will be upgraded to graphics that par up with World of Warcraft and Final Fantasy XI if not better. Dungeon Siege, is not your average game because it is a hack and slash title like Diablo in a 3D engine. It looked pretty good in 2001. Dungeon Siege 2 will have the same features, hopefully an improved multiplayer experience. Dungeon Siege was horrible to be played online, ran very slow.

I'm skipping Everquest 2 and World of Warcraft because I can never afford the online subscription. So this leads me to Ultima X Online. It's been 4 years since Origin Systems released an Ultima game. Ultima IX was released in 1999. Ultima IX was like Raven (Myst 2) with the exact same graphics, gameplay and a lot more bugs. Ultima IX was reviewed at IGN.com, and it was not your Neverwinter Nights. Sadly, it was below average. Although it made Ultima 3D. I've never played IX. Ultima X is a Massive Multiplayer Online Role Playing Game, with graphics as good as Lineage II and Elder Scrolls III : Morrowind. It may even be good, and without bugs! Go to this website to read about it and judge for yourself. [www.uxo.ea.com/intro.html] I'm kind of excited for it. Here are some screenshots from the game. Looks original? I hope it plays as good as it looks :)

My topic today is what is the best gaming platform? What a non geekish subject. I will cover cost and performance, and quality games. But only one platform will be the winner. None of this double favorites nonsense. I can do this because I own Dreamcast, PS2, Xbox, Gamecube, and PC. I have more than 10 games for each platform.

I wrote this on Cheat Happens, talking about the best console I prefer. I ended the entry by saying it won't matter because next generation consoles will be out next year.

"Cheat Happens is probably the best form in this hot debate on which console is the better. I came hear because I wanted to find out which console I should buy 2 of. I mean the next generation of Playstation will play PS2 games. Xbox 2 will play Xbox games, which leaves Gamecube a stand alone product with no future. Once Gamecube is done, it's done forever, right? So it's what I think, but I wondered if I could get away with getting a another Gamecube. This is not my favorite console by the way. I own so many games for it, 14 in all. As you now realize, Sega is not a major competitor. In 1999, Sega released some absolutely great games on Dreamcast, although it also had a 2 year lead start in Japan (October 15, 1998 release date.) Who could forget Sega's Skies of Arcadia, which I say could be the direct competitor to Square-Enix's Final Fantasy. It was an important game because I knew then how fun RPGs are. Soul Caliber and Dead or Alive 2 were also great fighting games. I also enjoyed Crazy Taxi and Rayman 2. Chu Chu Rocket was a fun puzzle game. Sonic Adventure was state-of-the-art in 1999, and did have good gameplay. After Dreamcast left the market, I knew I would soon have to invest into a newer console. I trusted Nintendo for Quality, but soon found out that I loved PS2 more, which I bought in 2003. After owning both Gamecube and Xbox before PS2. I found out that PS2 is the better of the three. I'm a big fan of Gran Trasimo 3 A-Spec , Xenosaga, Winning Eleven Soccer, and Final Fantasy X. I own copies of Silent Hill 2, Grand Thief Auto Vice City, Timesplitters, and Soul Reaver 2 also were fun. But RPGs give me a lot of time too entertain myself, and rpgs are my preferred genre. PS2 has the most RPGs of any console. No debate there? I try to compete them without cheating, although it's hard. I knew then I soon would invest in Playstation 3 (which I already put a 50 dollars preorder in at Gamestop, only place that lets you do so right now). PS3 is going to sell out in pre orders first day anyway, I already guarantee everyone this is true. Same 3rd party support is going to be supporting Sony, more sequels, I love sequels to games already popular on PS2. The bottom line, why is everyone debating on this generation, when you'll just have to debate PS3, Nintendo Nexus, and Xbox 2? The cell chip is very interesting. Sony is switching to ATI and IBM to make hardware for their system. Playstation I now know is the wisest choice. I sounds like it's going to go up to a 256 MB graphics card, plus onboard flash memory and produce an amazing amount of polygons (1.5 billion), and it will be even a larger online console than PS2, cause online games rule, and in development I heard off IGN.com. Only question is will subscribers to PlayOnline be able to play Final Fantasy XI, Twisted Metal Black, Resident Evil Deadly Aim or Madden 2004 online with it? I have this debate on <http://renegadeviking.cjb.net>. Also, check out <http://ign.com> for big updates."

PC 1st place: Cost $500 - $3000 Poor | RPGS - Excellent | RPGS - Excellent | FPS - Excellent | Graphics - Excellent | Racing - Poor | Strategy - Very Good | Features - Excellent | Sports - Very Good | Horror - Good Excellent | Online Support - Excellent free internet gaming |

2nd place PS2: Cost 180 Dollars - Average | RPGS - Very Good | FPS - Good | Graphics - Good | Racing - Very Good | Strategy - Good | Horror - Very good | Features - Excellent Harddrive, DVD playback included, and Psone backwards compatibility | Online support - Good |

3rd place Xbox: cost 170 Dollars Average | RPGS - Poor | FPS - Very Good | Graphics - In-between Good and Very Good | Racing - Good | Online support - Very Good - Features (8 Gigabyte Harddrive, broadband support, Xbox Live, DVD playback | Horror - Poor

4th Place – Gamecube Cost $99 Excellent | RPGS – Poor | First Person Shooters Average | Graphics: Good to above average | Racing: Very Good | Online Support – 1 title, Phantasy Star Online so Poor. | Horror – Very Good | Features – (Gameboy Player and GBA link) Very good.

And the Winner is the PC! The PC is above all the rest because it doesn't involve immediate upgrading. It is nice to have a state-of-the-art PC, but it's not required. RPG fans may like consoles over PC because you get a nifty controller. The controller is alright, but the mouse is a lot better in my opinion. Feels better as well. Works better than joystick in most 3D games. Take PS2 for faineance. It has Final Fantasy, the largest selling RPG in the history of the world. I am talking about RPGs because they are my favorite genre. Believe it or not Final Fantasy 7 and 8 can run on PC with graphical upgrades if you can find them. They weren't really favorite pick though. PC has some wonderful first person shooters and MMORPGs available. All consoles are limited to media space and hardware limitations. Take the 5 year old PS2. It's like 3 years past the expiration date. Only exception is some games like Gran Turismo 3 A Spec and Grand Theft Auto Vice City can be played on it. The PC has better graphics. Consoles are reduced to a lower resolution because the PC and 32-bit monitor can exceed the TV's resolution. Unless you have a flat screen or HDTV. I want one but don't have the money. Too much money going towards upgrading PC for last 2 years.

I was surfing the Internet and I found this really strange website. I know there are stranger.... But a 24 hour TV gaming network? Can it get any stranger? Is the world ready for it? Is there enough games to support a cable channel forever? I didn't know it was possible! I dunno, a hardcore gamer would even find it odd. It's called G4, and it's like Xplay 24 hours a day. Xplay is TechTV's game show. I knew that Sega tried having a 24 hour channel called Sega Channel or Sega Net, and it didn't do well, and went off air. You literally watch videogames 24 hours a day! Anyway, I checked out there website and they do have streaming audio on all their shows on their website. I have DirecTV so I don't get G4. It's probably not worth it anyways. You get to hear about how awesome a game is or how much a game is sucking all day. It's not my thing, of course I grew out of this. Still check out their website at <http://g4tv.com> or go to <http://techtv.com/xplay/> to watch Xplay streaming video reviews. I read off the Internet, and there is Game Informer Magazine so it would be too lame to see videogames 24 hours a day. IT is for the couch potato who got tired of playing his PC or Playstation so he watches a cable channel review games all day. I rather play games, and when I'm not playing games, I get out and go to school or hang out with other people. And I thought sometimes TechTV got a little lame sometimes. I guess I was wrong. Still it's interesting what different cable channels there are. I need feedback. What do readers think of G4?

Hello readers! Yesterday, I went to school, walked around the building and eventually asked a fellow student, he said no classes today. The day went by really quick, nothing really to do. Before I knew it 4 PM blasted by before I took a nap. Than I slept until 4:10 AM That's 12 hours! I had this dream where I was Conon the barbarian. I was very destructive. And I was fighting off the Romanians. In time of Kings, about 1300 AC, I was this Barbarian King (yes, I wore underwear.) trying to defend Norway. (It sort of looked like Middle Earth though) against the evil Romanian King and his army of the undead. Skeletons, Ghouns, and orcs? They were all 7 feet tall and UGLY with armor with bastard swords. Of course, we all had double edged long swords. And we barbarians were on the losing side. The Romanian Army was gaining ground slowing destroying our army, so I met the one-man-army himself from the game Halo, who went back in time after he defeated the Covenant, and gave us shock rifles and grenade launchers. There wasn't enough for all of us, so we had to share. Anyways, I woke up right before I broke in the Dark Castle of Normandy. I had a scene there where a barbarian through a grenade and a whole horde of undead got blown to pieces. It was like the matrix! Oh yeah, did I mention I was about to save this beautiful damsel in distress? Yeh, that was part of the dream too. She looked like Kathleen Ireland. Okay, I admit it was kind of strange, but I was really an awesome dream. But a lot of you dream, and have these dreams after movies you saw and slept 12 hours and don't know why?

Next, I'm hoping to invite someone over from WITC. There aren't many guys at school that have that time. Some of them seem cool enough. They must like LAN parties and videogames. But I don't know if it's homework or they don't like to go to somebody's house unless they make plans. I just don't know.

I was looking inside my Dell, and the DVD Drive, Harddrive, floppy drive is locked in to the case with levers and I just bought a 8X DVD RW and want to install it right a way. But I couldn't figer the lever out. I will have to go to Radio Shack and get an IDE splitter. That'll make two DVDRWs. I had the other one for nearly a year now, and I haven't burned one DVD!

Picture of my Dell : Pentium 4 3.2 GHz 1 GB Dual Channel RAM, Dell motherboard, 120 GB hardrive / 40 Giga-byte slave drive, Radeon 9800 256MB DRR, 100/1000 Ethernet / Sound Blaster Audagy II / DVD/CDRW / huge duel fan cooling system

Picture of the other monster : Athlon XP 2600 768 MB DRR 333 MHz, 120 GB harddrive, Geforce FX 256 MB DRR, on board sound on a Soyo Dragon Black Edition Motherboard, 100/1000 Ethernet / 56X CD ROM / 4x DVD RW +

My rooms a mess, I need to clean it up. I mean it has books everywhere. Four Mountain Dew bottles laying around CDs cases. I got dog hair on the floor. I wonder since it's a friday, bob can do something? I have this friend, Chuck, and he did something bad, and he works all the time to help out his girlfriend who he got pregnate. I don't call him anymore except for a few times, but I went to school with him for 2 years, and he was the only one I knew and talked too. I miss the times I went over to his house, and played Unreal Tournament. I don't know if he's a loser, because he wasn't thinking, but this happened after I went to high school.

Four days until Unreal Tournament 2004 comes out, I'm excited! Can't wait to play online with it. And why didn't I play Unreal Tournament 2003 online? Well I did for a short while, but i was slow, and I got by butt kicked, so I dropped it. It's not worth to play all the time, and be above average on the rouser. Because there are a lot of mean players, who know where all the starting points are in the level I and I hate to be killed right away by them. This is not always true, not I remember a few times this happened too me. All the good areas are taken, and with expert marksmen to boot.

Spring Break Episode I - Xbox modding (2004-03-15 14:30)

Hello and welcome to my next edition of my Blog! Today I am on spring break, which is nice because Dad's going to bring home UT2004, and I will have nothing to do, which is not necessary a bad thing. I hope Bob gets off school this week. He goes to the UofW so that will be awesome if he did. The topic today is why the heck are some videocards so expensive and others are not so expensive? $150 to $350 is reasonable in my opinion. Tigerdirect sells a XFX Geforce 5200 FX 256 MB videocard for 100 dollars. That's extremely reasonable, and I haven't had mine die on me yet. This videocard will let you play Unreal Tournament 2003 / Unreal Tournament 2004 at 1600x1200 with 4x anti analyzing. You're going to get eye catching graphics anyways with no pixilation. Well, if your videocard can support that resolution anyways, you know that the pixels are so small that they won't show any distortion. Now you take a Geforce 5600 XT 128 MB videocard, and that'll cost you as much as a Geforce 5200 FX at 256 MB. I thought that any 256 MB card will produce better graphics over any 128 MB videocard. I mean at least when you look at Geforce 4 technologies. Nvidia has this technology called Nview multi-display. This is Nvidia's answer to Microsoft's Direct X 9.0, so Nvidia's technology improve and do more than Direct X 9.0 or am I completely wrong? I can't be completely off because I know I can run UT2003 at 1600x1200 with my Radeon 9800. It interests me why this type of videocard manufactured by PNY Technologies costs 2000 bucks. This class is called the Quadro FX series. PNY makes the Quadro 500 128 MB GPU and it costs 300 bucks. That is more then any Geforce FX videocard. Quadro FX 1000, 2000 and 3000 are also available. This is the EXTREMELY highend of videocards. And they probably cost 400 dollars more at places like Best Buy and Circuit City. When the Geforce FX 6000 series come out, I beating they will out class the Quadro 500 and 1000 in terms of graphics. Same thing with Radeons. ATI isn't far behind Nvidia in technolgy. On reason why all three console manufactures (Nintendo, Sony and Microsoft) are turning to ATI to make integrated graphic cards for their next generation consoles. They'll look better on screen and cost a lot less. I think that 512 MB of DRR video ram is over kill right now. Maybe in 5 years I won't think so, but Nvidia will soon after that come out with 1024 MB of DRR video RAM. And my BRAIN will just MELT in AWE! 512 MB will let you play DOOM 3 and Half-life 2, very graphically demanding games, at 1600/1200 res with 4x anti-aliasing. That will definitely out class anything Sony or Microsoft are coming out with next year. For the price of a Playstation 3 ($350 US) you can own a high performance videocard that will make anything look better on PC. That's amazing. What's also amazing is that consoles still make money off their games and not their graphics. And you know what? I switched from my Dreamcast out performing my computer to my computer out performing my Xbox so I don't know. Of course, Bill Gates owns all the PCs in the world and, a console.

Guess what....I was watching The Screen Savers, and there is finally a way to have PC software run on Xbox only if your Xbox is modded properly. Xbox has a cut down version of Windows 2000 on it so it's possible to MOD it and put in a 40 gigabyte hard drive to run PC games. But you know what...Microsoft is the least experienced. Although Halo, Dungeon Siege, Project Gotham and Flight Simulator 2004 are very good, Microsoft hasn't got what Sony has and that is 3rd party support. Also hackers have found a way to even put games on hard drives so that the games have no loading times. Of course, every mod chip lets you play "backups" of your games. Mod chips for Xbox range from 30 dollars to 100 dollars. I want to get my Xbox soldered, but I don't know who to ask, how much it'll cost, or which website sells them. I am thinking that I should wait for PS3 to come out so that mod chips will come out for it, and I'll be able to legally back up my PS2 games and PS3 games and play them. I have 33 PS2 games, just ask Bob. And how about the new 40 GIGABYTE PS2 hard drive released by Sony this month? I just had to minion it today. You literally can't fill that space up with game saves. After FFXI is loaded (6GB) you can save approximately 113333.3 300 KB game saves. Compress them with your Gameshark at 50 %, then you talking about 226666.6 150 KB game saves. That's insane. You just can't save that many games. I was dumb founded when I found out I can backup your memory card data on it. Final Fantasy XI is preloaded on it, and that takes up six Gigabytes of the 40. You can also back up WAV files on it, but no games support music unlike all Xbox games. I'm going to ask Bob if he can give up his network adapter for a free memory card so I can buy the hard drive and use it on mine. I have 1 memory card that's 85 % full, and that's with all my game saves. I want a PS2 hard drive so I don't have to override a game save in my life. Wouldn't that be just awesome! I even have the 100 bucks for the harddrive on hand. I hate it how Sony bundled FFXI with it. I would never use it. Sony says the game's free, but I think Sony is lying. This is why I think so, they preload FFXI on it so they can charge you 14 bucks a month to play it. I remember a time period when Sega allowed you to play Phantasy Star Online, plus Unreal Tournament and Quake III Arena for free on the Dreamcast from 2000 + using your own ISP. I booted PSO v1 on my Dreamcast in August 2003 and I got a server down message. I hear the servers are still up with UT and Quake 3 so you can still find servers on the Dreamcast. Unreal Tournament: Game of the Year will allow Dreamcast gamers play on the same servers as PCs. One reason could be that Dreamcast runs Windows operating system too. In fact there is a logo on my Dreamcast at home that says Microsoft Windows CE. When PSO was re-released on Gamecube and Xbox, Sega now charges for Gamecube and the Xbox version is apart of Xbox Live. At least the Gamecube version allows you to play over a modem. I bought the Gamecube modem 2 years ago because I thought the PSO online subscription was free like it was for Dreamcast. Unfortunately not any more. If Xbox allowed free Internet access, I think that would make a big difference in Xbox sales. Perhaps when Xbox 2 comes out, Microsoft may just make Internet access on Xbox free. It would make a lot of sense to do so.

I ended up spending 40 bucks on Metal Gear Solid: The Twin Snakes for Gamecube at Wal-Mart this morning. MGS: TS has been developed by Silicon Knights (developer of Eternal Darkness and Legacy of Kain) and Konami. I found out it has the MGS 1 and MGS 2 packaged together into one game. It looks like it's graphically superior to Resident Evil and Metroid Prime. Solid Snake has all the moves he uses in MGS2 at the beginning of MGS 1. IGN.com rated this game a 9.7 out of 10 or 97 % perfect. I haven't played MGS 1 or 2 yet. UT2004 got a 9.6 out of 10 rating at IGN.com. It was a 5 page review too. I am not usually into tactical games, but I recently got into first person shooters for the 3rd time. A new enhancement in The Twin Snakes is you can play this game in first person 100 % of the time if you want too. A review will be up within a week at this link: http://www.geocities..._metalgearsolid.html

And lastly, my 8X DVD RW came in today. I'm going to install it once I can figure out how to get the current drive out of my Dell. I'm going to have a ball Backing Up DVDs. I have everything, a ESD wrist band and screw drivers, and I learned to keep my pc plugged into the wall as I install the drive. I hate to bang around it though. That could prove disasterious!

Signing off and tune in 4 days from now for my next blog entry!

Suse 9.0 Pro Impressions (German Distro) (2004-03-16 00:21)

I went to CompUSA, because I had $100 to spend on a new operating system. I saw Redhat 9.0, and StarOffice, and Mandrake Linux lined in a role. Since the technician guy said to try Suse 8.2 over Redhat last year, I get the same thing with more stuff. This one was easy to dual boot on Windows. I installed Red Hat 7.1 on a Athlon 2001 Compaq Presario, because in high school, I had a Linux course. I was the first person from Renaissance Academy to do one over stupid Spanish. Think Babblefish. I got a lot of stuff in it like 35 games, and it comes with Sega Genesis, NES, Commodore 64, and SNES emulators. There is this emulator on the double sided DVD. Frozen Bubble was from Puzzle Bubble and this new platform Super Tux really isn't good at ripping off Mario. RedHat 7.1 seems so hard in comparison. I can play mp3s in XMMS which is cool and Suse 9.0 Pro reads NTFS file system too...

I copied it for Randy! The GUI is faster than before. This has the potential of keeping me dual booting linux with Windows XP forever. I mean I need XP to play Dungeon Siege, Unreal Tournament 2004, and Neverwinter Nights! I have to get good for LAN parties. Everybody should have a copy of this operating system. It has linux kernel 2.6.3! KDE 3.1 Gnome 2.2.

This will get me through 2004! I use it to say I'm there. My friend Bob who lives in Hammond had Mandrake Linux 6.2 in 2000 running on his PC and want to show him whose boss! That's because Windows 2000 really screwed up his computer. He had bad sound issues. He hates Linux I think. SUSE could be the next big thing.

Spring Break Episode II - The Attack of the Ads! (2004-03-18 14:32)

Date: 3/18/04 at 1:29PM

Hello again. David, my cousin from the Navy, couldn't make it over this week. He is got home on his spring break from Pensacola, Florida. He use to come over all the time until 2001. We played Dreamcast, N64. It was the good ol times. We had played games like Perfect Dark, Mario Kart, Crazy Taxi, and Rush 2049. Last time I saw him was in November 2003 right before he left. I think we both saw Fellowship of the Ring in 2001. David has MSN so we talk through that a lot. But the past week, he hasn't been online. It just accord to me that we would be home.

Anyways, I was playing Unreal Tournament 2004 online, and web ads keep popping up. It got so bad that I had to reload the OS. I mean didn't I do this 3 weeks ago? What makes me f*cking mad is the popups slow down my connection and happen when I'm using the connection. The game's connection speed wasn't too bad. It ran at a solid 30 frames per second. I waited 3 months, I finally get it, and a few popups are destroying my fun!

Here are some spoilers for gamers. As you can see AMD Athlon 64 FX 53 out performs Pentium 4 EE. I'm going to wait until Athlon 64 FX 55 comes out and than I'm going to get my parents to purchase it for me. AMD stop making the Athlon 64 FX 51 so it'll drop in price quiet sinificantly. I'm going to wait until I get 40 frames per second better on my games before I get my new processor for my custom PC. I don't know whether I'm going to get a new pc with all new hardware. Or just buy memory, motherboard/processor and stick the old processor in my Compaq. Getting a new PC from Tigerdirect will definally cut the cost for hardware installation by a professional. But your also paying for things you already have like a videocard, harddrive, DVDRWs, cases, modems and such.

http://www.xbitlabs.com/articles/cpu/display/athlon64-fx53_1.html

Anyways, I did nothing this week during Spring Break. It's been "reel" fun. On Tuesday, I got Alice, a dark platformer, made by Rogue Entertainment. Played that game on Tuesday night until 5 in the morning. The graphics were good, maybe a little less polygonized than I'm use too, but that's okay. Than yesterday, I bought Unreal Tournament 2004. I couldn't have gone in Monday because Best Buy was sold out. I was also looking at cd players for my Jeep. I want one with MP3 support, but I can't afford one, I had 140 dollars total. And a nice MP3 Player ran about $170 which is very cheap. I was looking at Sony or Panasonic or Kenwood though, top of the line stereos. The guy tried telling me what a MP3 was...I said to him, God sakes, if I didn't know what a MP3 was, I would be kinda computer illiterate, which I ain't." I told him those exact words. I was trying to prevent him from asking, "Are you downloading MP3s illegally?" I would have said, "Doesn't everyone these days...." I also got a game called Spellforce: Order of the Dawn. It's a new RPG released this year. The quote "A splendid mix of Warcraft and Dungeon Siege" caught my eye. And the specs to run the game were pretty high, and I like high specs. I read off IGN.com that the game is a little buggy later. I usually don't come to Best Buy this unprepared. I know I heard of Asheron's Call somewhere. IGN.com gave Asheron's Call 2 a 9.2 out of 10. It's the other RPG developed by Microsoft. Well there's Freelancer, but I tend to hate space RPGs, even though Knights of the Old Republic was my 2nd favorite game until I bought UT2004. My PC performance doesn't seem to affect Unreal Tournament 2004 at all. It's been sluggish such as ag between opening Directories. I already checked for viruses. Only one exception, someone using Subseven tried to hack into my PC this morning (around 1am), but Norton Firewall blocked him or her. I have played with Subseven myself once, but I could only get it work on my PC. It's an older trojan horse, which is illegal spyware allowing the hacker to view directories, upload files to your computer like viruses, and give the victim popup messages, like the infamous "We know you're name is _ _ _." Subseven or "Sub7", to my knowledge was last released in 2000, but isn't a very powerful trojan horse in 2004 because every firewall in the world can block it practically. Some other things Subseven can do is open webpages in Internet Explorer, open CDROM drives, illegally "watch" instant messenger conversations, and talk to the victim through it, and watch other people activities in a LAN situation who don't have firewall protection.

Tune in for Spring Break Episode III. Coming soon to a blog near you!

Spring Break Episode III - Seeing David again (2004-03-22 14:33)

Just as I was in the middle of writing this message I saved my mom's life today by calling 911!!! I won't get into the details since that will be rude.

Jolly good people! And good morning, I have now brought you in my final chapter of Spring Break 2004. Bob went to Arizona last week & probably on vacation. He's back now. I didn't speak to him.

David came over 2 days ago. He's my cousin that I never see. I downloaded 45 GB from his hard drive via his USB connection. He had 53 feature length movies, 20 Family Guys, 14 Space Ghost Coast to Coasts (not all full episodes), MASH, CSI, and Simpsons. And an astonishing 2.5 GIGS of country music videos. He's big on country. Each video averaged 40 MB. David works on helicopters mechanical aspects not electrical. David was good at playing Mario Kart Double Dash to my surprise! I burned 16 movies to CD already. We were trying to figure out how to network my computers. Both network cards looked good so it didn't make sense to me how they were not commutating. My hub was hooked up too. O-well. It would have been fun. He doesn't want to go anywhere or play any of the console game I want him to play.

And trance was playing at Walmart in the electronic's section. I was freaking out because the song playing was ATB - Don't Stop or was it Paul Van Dyk - Another Way? I listen to that song a lot and Walmart never showcased any trance track from what I know of. They're trying to play trance Best Buy too. Best Buy was playing ahahahah remix from Zombie Nation. Stranger then Britney Spears, I tell yeah! American's historically strayed away from it.

I have tried out Spellforce. IGN.com was absolutely right about it. Whenever you change your videocard settings to 2x anti analyzing, it will freeze. Well it looks like I'll be playing Neverwinter Nights until Dungeon Siege 2 comes. However, I got software acceleration and it played but had a terrible frame rate. Originally, I got spellforce because it had some half naked women on it, looked better than Neverwinter Nights, and the multiplayer is free. Now I'll set back and name all the games that make you pay: Everquest, Final Fantasy XI, Horizons, and Anarchy Online. I hate to pay more for my games!!!! I will someday because everyone's doing it now-a-days.

I got Anarchy Online: Shadowlands for 20 bucks. Anarchy Online is the 2001 RPG of the Year by PC Gamer. At the time it was the best looking role playing game available for PC. It's a space RPG set 200,000 years in the future. I read on the box that it included full versions of Anarchy Online, Notum Wars booster pack. Though I wasn't thinking because on the bottom left corner it says, "Internet Connection Required. Additional online fees per month." That sucks!

While I was in the Woodbury, MN, I got Redhat Professional Workstation, it came out after Redhat Linux 9.0. I think the $110 Operating System will help in school because our class uses Redhat 8, and I would get Redhat's latest enhancements. I find it interesting that Redhat 8 comes with the student handbook as a free bonus. I will drop this class though, because I got too many Os. The situation looks grim.

Wild Dog pack around my parts (2004-03-25 14:34)

I got wonderful news. My aunt's house got struck by lightning. She lives less than a mile away from us. They live out in the open (corn and wheat fields in all directions) so many houses there were vulnerable to strikes. Anyways, she came over to our house to wash clothes. She says that the lightning blew apart her chimney (to bits / pieces of bricks everywhere) thus burning every outlet in the house to black streaks. It also ripped the plaster off the wall in her basement about 5 feet vertically where the entertainment center (den) was. The TV had black streaks on the screen....from the blast. I thought that was a little funny. Yeah it was about 8PM and I saw a blinding blue light outside our house. It only took 4 seconds for the deafening boom to occur. I mean it's the same as a sonic boom that an aircraft makes when it breaks the sound barrier right above you. Her phone line box was blown from the house to the end of the road she said. That's about 300 feet! The wires in her electrical box were fused together. LOL! She has to replace everything. This was the first thunderstorm of the year. This whole scene was 5 minutes after I said, "Sh*t, I need to unplug my computers." to myself. After this giant boom passed, the dog was barking, our cats were nowhere to be seen, and I remembered how right I was for waking up in the nick of time. I, who has hands on experience with power blow outs, knows surge protectors only do so much.

To describe further bad news today. A pack of wild dogs were on the loose. I just found out about this local crisis today actually. This one crazy dog (house pet) was leading other dogs (Lab, Retriever, Collie) and killing Sheep and small house cats. People in this area have been missing cats from what I heard. My aunt, who lives by the Sheep farm, saw the pack trying to kill these sheep, also included three RAMs. The dogs were trying to make a kill. The police come 3 times, as she described to us, and the dogs run away, but they are dumb enough to come back (The wild dogs circle the area like a pack of wolves.) The police brought shotguns though no shots were fired. One RAM was missing from the herd soon found half-alive knocked unconscious by blood loss. "Hmm, I wonder what happened?" You can't really tell, she says, until you have a chance to shave the wool off. The owner of the barn had to put 2 RAMS and a couple of sheep to sleep. The owners of these wild - uncontrollable pets - put them down because they already had to pay for property damage. I just know our dog wasn't apart of this. The guy who owns the Alfa-dog (which in this case it describes the dog perfectly) got him neutered instead of killing him. So he is still alive and will do this all again probably. Isn't this a sad story? I think so sobbing.

Now to get into some more ordinary news....

I caught The Screen Savers today and a small segment was telling about how to chat with gamers through games they play. And my response was GameSpy Arcade. But they showed Xfire. I downloaded the application myself. Very small download. You sign up for their service and it's like MSN messenger exactly. Click on any gamer who has a server going on any game and it'll boot your game up to that server automatically. Problem is there is no one on your list to start you out. But there is a search buddy option. The big draw back is you need to know your buddy's username in order to add him/her to your list. I already recommend it to a lot of people. I am hoping to meet someone to play Neverwinter Nights the night with. So far I got no damn luck!

I have never thought that it would happen this fast, but the first 512 MB GPU is available on the market. It's actually a 3DLabs card, the Wildcat VP990 Pro. 3DLabs says it can do 200 Gigaflops or 1.3 Teraflops of polygons. It'll set you back 730 dollars or more, but is it worth it, after all a Geforce FX 5600 256 MB card at tigerdirect.com will only cost $130. I feel bad now. Even my slowest computer can handle any game in existence at 1200/800 (Athlon XP 1.8 GHz 386 MB RAM, Geforce 5400 Ti, 40 GB harddrive). And it looks pretty smooth. I want to upgrade to a 512 MB GPU myself, but I'm going to wait until the a card with that speed goes below the 300 dollar mark, even if it is the Wildcat VP 990 Pro since the first videocard on the market first, falls in price first. I'm guessing in September 2004 the Wildcat VP 990 Pro will be reduced to half the cost it is now. One thing is obvious, anything with 512 MB of RAM will be insanely powerful for 2 more years. Here's the official site: <http://www.3dlabs.com/product/wildcatvp/vppro/specs.htm> for the specs. Playstation 3 and Xbox 2 are only going to have 256 MB of video memory, and that is still very powerful. I see that console game developers are going to use 100 % that amount of memory to make games so console games may just look as good as State-of-the-art graphic cards for PC until 2006. UT2004 already about a generation a head of all the other games in the world developed for PC on the market and it runs on my pc perfectly. Doom 3 is coming out in December, and it'll be optimized for a computer a little more powerful then what UT2004 mininum stats require .

I got on the Diablo 2 LOD ladder! Pic to prove it (2004-03-30 14:36)

Hello Bloggers. I don't think I ever covered Iraq in my entries so I got into reading this one guy's Blog from Iraq and I was intrigued to read all of it. I hear Iraq's new government a lot on satellite. But you know I didn't think Iraqis had Internet over there. Anyways, you know American Army has Internet access through their camps. Yeah, they all have portable laptops right? So some of them besides emailing friends and family are doing Blogs instead. Blogs are relatively new to the Internet, right? Since this guy, Raid, quoted, "American radio is very interesting" [http://dear_raed.blogspot.com/] The military broadcast's American Radio in Baghdad at 107.7 FM. It's called SAWA. So far I know it broadcast's advertisements that we may hear in Wisconsin. Not odd to us, just odd to Iraqis. I'm sure they have Fords, Chevys, Chrysler and Coca-cola over there. Raid doesn't get it though, he's an equal. Saddam isn't controlling him anymore. The whole blog he writes sounds like he never is equal person to Americans. This is a misconception. He has the life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness now. Hey Raid, go to <http://www.UnitedStates.com>. There's a message board I think you should know about :) Who knows, maybe you can learn something.

There is a question I like to ask him. Do they have fast computers over there? Well if you got the Internet than maybe you can order one off EBay or Tigerdirect. That is if you can export to Iraq. Well my question really is, "American's all know that the Internet is diggin' it." Do Iraqis know it though? I realize that Raid has Internet, though is he one of the fortunate few? I don't know, Iraq is not a 3rd world country. Anyone who wants something can buy it. But I keep hearing how American's are about 6 years a head of everyone else (as in 1st world countries) in terms of technology because Americans have all the wealth in the world. I can only say this....I don't see it that way. Although I have all the games and television channels I can possibly watch, I can't just buy anything.

Look at farming, less then 1 % of American's farm and we stop using DCT (weed/insect killer) 20 years ago. We advanced to genetically engineered crops. For what ever foods we can't grow outside, we do it in high tech green houses. We can feed everyone in our country 10 times over. Maybe now, it's closer to 11 times. Canada can do that, though I don't know any other country that can do that. Iraq is desert as far as the eye can see. They have to import all their food.

Iraq now has a democratic government which will begin to run on it's own starting today. Iraq is not going to change their flag. Iraq can make a lot of money giving away it's oil. I don't agree with our tax dollars help rebuilding Baghdad though. And why when we try to help, do Iraqis think they can loot the Red Cross? Did Germany help rebuild Warsaw, Belgium after World War II? Warsaw was rebuilt by US funds. And who rebuilt Pearl Harbor? US did. Did we ask the UN to fund rebuilding the World Trade Center? No, instead we made it a memorial. With all that money thrown around, somebody's going to think we are all aristocrats, larger than life figures. Like me, I spent a lot of money on building / updating PCs, and I have no income. Am I a larger than life figure? I still ask my parents for money. I can't even play Final Fantasy XI because my parents don't want to though in 144 dollars a year, because it's a waste of money. I tell you the thing I hate most about home is not having somewhere to work and not having a credit card so I can buy things online and subscribe to online games. But that's just me.

For some more interesting news is I finally made it on the Diablo 2 Lord of Destruction ladder board.

The text that I circled is my character! It took me 2 weeks to go from 80 - 99. TheWierdSpearII can take out a cow with 3 strikes of her bow. But since I graduated hell difficulty, I just went for those Cow levels which give me the most experience for the time I put in. Now if I could keep my account up forever I'd be really happy. And thanks Gamefaqs.com for giving me a good reference to use, it was very helpful. I got a good start in the 1.09d patch so hell wouldn't be as hard as it would of been. Also I got to in the Aurrit Summit in all three diffcluties in Act 5. So I gained 8 or 10 levels because I went dominated at 20, then 40, then 60 for full benefits.

Bob's coming tomorrow for LAN party (2004-04-04 13:37)

I hate to make this any longer, but I found out something very funny if I could pull it off. See at home, I have this very large traveling suitcase. I saw this 2.0 GHz Pentium 4 at school. Maybe I could take it home in the case w/o being seen? But that would be unethical...so I might as well forget it.

I saw at tigerdirect, I can get a Athlon 64 with motherboard for 350 dollars. The motherboard already runs on the same DDR RAM I already own. Where am I going to get 300 dollars though? From my parents? Possibility. Am I going to wait until Christmas to get an Athlon 64 PC @ 4.2 GHz. I may have to buy another case that'll fit everything. If it works I'll be so happy!

I am going to be serious now. Yesterday night was quite interesting. About 4 hours ago I went to town to download Counter-Strike and America's Army. My ISP is so slow that it makes me ill. In 2004, people take advantage of their high speed Internet and I have every right to do what their doing. I drove slow on my way to Dad's office. He has is office key on this key chain he keeps in the Grand Cherokee. I just barrowed it. So I got to his office. I took my Compaq with me since he's business computers have company files that I don't want to get deleted by a hacker. I hook up the Compaq and I try to connect. I can't connect though his T1 line. So I hook up his company computer. I get connected to AAcommunity.com and I find the 658 MB installer off a minor link. He's T1 line only goes 12 KB. I thought it would be 10 times that much. The file would take 12 hours to download. So I go home. There ends the idea of secretly going to my dad's work to download files. On my way home about 10 minutes to midnight, I was followed by this car with his brights on. O_o So I look in the mirror and see that he's riding my butt. I swerve to the left, regain control though I was driving in the middle of the road most of the time and slowly. There is deer out. Truth was he was driving so close, I kept looking at him in the mirror. He must think I was a drunk driving home. Some reason he lived on my street too. Freaky thing about it is I haven't seen anyone on my street for nearly 4 years! Not kidding. After I hyper ventilated one day and since had experienced 6 hyper ventilations from 1999 - 2002 in a public environment. I'm much better now, I can control my hyper ventilations when I'm mad, though I find my self a bit excited most of the time. Does that mean I'm doing okay? Course it does. Truth is I don't care if I never see anyone again on my street or in my class. To me, he's and all the other 20 year olds are old acquaintances. And I've been pushed/forced to make new friends along the way. Yeh I know it sucks. I know sucks is sometimes an understatement. He knows I'm right about not disturbing anyone out in the country I use to know. He probably knows I am rarely seen by anyone.

Today, I am prepared for tomorrow's LAN party. I got Diablo 2 LOD, Spellforce, Dungeon Siege, Unreal Tournament 2004, Quake 3, and I might try Vampire Masquerades just because I'm on an installing frenzy tonight!

Here are some secrets I found out. Are you listening?

- Spellforce Order of Dawn can be booted on several computers with one cd. After you start the game, you can eject the cd. If you're having problems with game not running, it's because you have anti-analyzing on, and that's bad. I first try the game in Software acceleration first. Believe it or not, 2 players LAN games wont work cause their needs to be more then 2 players to play. The 1.11 patch makes the game much more user friendly fixes lag and crash bugs too. Some guy on a messenger board says it has the Securom 4.88.00.0015.

o He wrote, "Start Alcohol and start the "Image Making Wizard", from the Data type dropdown select "Securom NEW (4.x/5.x) and read an image of the disc. Select a slow speed for the DPM measurement. Once it has finished start the "Image Writing Wizard" and select your disc image and click Next, Select "Securom New (4.x/5.x)" from the dropdown again and click Start.

o To turn on the RMPS emulation start Alcohol120 and click Emulation on the left, in the dialog that opens put a check in the box beside RMPS emulation and click OK."

o More information, <http://club.cdfreaks.com/showthread/t-85772.html>

- UT2004, UT2003 work the same way as Spellforce. Take the original uncopied CD and boot it when you start UT200x and then you can eject after game is running. You can do this to as many computers as you want. UT2004 uses securom 5.0 an burning option in Alcohol 120 %. Try burning UT2004 at 1x to ensure best results.

- Knights of the Old Republic can be installed on several computers and booted off one cd.

- Dungeon Siege can be copied with Alcohol 120 % though you may want to copy your friends game since LAN games detect your game's ID so you can't play it twice.

- Diablo 2 can not be copied cause it has way to many errors. Though you can install Diablo 2 on several computers then make sure you have several copies of LOD handy. I have both 1.09d and 1.10. 1.10 is so fun and challenging that I will never go back to 1.09d. Maybe you can find a list off the Internet on how to copy LOD disc with Alcohol 120 %.

- Unreal Tournament can run on your hard drive in multiplayer without CD. It can also be copied with Alcohol 120 %

- Most games can be copied though remember to keep the original factory date or you're screwed. The game detects this when it's in your drive. Alcohol 120 %, Nero 5x or CloneCD will not do this automatically. You must go into Options and set this yourself.

- Clonny XXL will tell you what copy protection your game has.

- Afterdawn.com is a great reference site for these kind of things.

This concludes my small FAQ on some games running in LAN and the ability to make backups of them.

On another note, yesterday I went to school and started a download on America's Army: Operations 2.0A. No one was there except for a pesky janitor, and lucky I found a room open. AA downloaded at 25 KB/sec which is good enough for me. I am hoping that someone doesn't ask about the minimized download screen on Monday. I want to own Ghost Recon for PC, though I am still having fun with the games I have. To ensure no one deletes it before I can upload it, I'm going back on Sunday. I had to leave because the janitor was rushing me. O_o All I have to do is take my MP3 player and upload it to that. I was also planning to download Counter-Strike 1.5, so what if you can buy it in stores for 20 dollars. I am unsure about it because I don't play Half-life much. But then why does this mod attract so many gamers. It's cool, I know that part. I find it more fun buying games though. You get what you pay for the most part in my opinion. I might download it Sunday so I can get it Monday. I hear this rumor that Counter-Strike 2 v1.0 is a game option in Half-life 2. The mod team is working closely with Valve Software on this. Hmmm, goodie!

I'm Going to play Dungeon Siege now and Diablo 2 now. DS requires a lot of bandwidth so it makes it impossible to play over modem. I updated my webpage so it looks pretty slick now, more so than before. For all your viewers I'll add whats above to this link <http://www.geocities.com/nightwalkers101/gamecopy.html> for easy reference. Remember it's just as simple to go to Afterdawn.com and find a post that will tell you what decoder to use.

Direct Way a possibility (2004-04-04 15:04)

Hi everyone, it is I, the great writer of Modblog. Bahahahahah! If I get Direct-way connection, I will burn the episodes / movies such as Family Guy, maybe some anime to DVDR. That is if my parents can afford it. We live out in the country so DSL and cable isn't available, and will never be available to us.

Don't you hate getting bandwidth used up by ads? Maybe it's because a Trojan Horse got inside your PC? To be exact the JS Seeker Trojan Horse. I got attacked yesterday. To prevent this you need to delete updater12.js in your windows directory, it's infected! You too can do this easily by going into DOS and typing in "del /f /p updater12.js" at the underscore. If you're don't have the virus, dos should say that updater12.js was not found. If it gives you bs saying the file was found, but couldn't be accessed, type attrib +r +a +s +h updater12.js than del /f updater12.js.

I have a favorite software / worst software survey at this link [<http://www.geocities...orstprogramlist.html>] Remember to hold down SHIFT to open a new window. It explains my most used programs, and the worst programs I downloaded! I mean performance effecting software.

I also updated my Squaresoft Webpage [http://www.geocities...01/square_index.html] Added a Final Fantasy X-2 review, added character bios to Final Fantasy 10, posted a exclusive desktop wallpaper made by me, and wrote a History of Squaresoft page under the Information tab.

I love my new pc, it is very fast. Multi-tasking is not a issue no more. I love it! Dad didn't put in a DVD RW in my Dell so I'm going to get one any ways. Than that way I'll have two DVDRWs for double the cd burning. It's good because than I use the DVD/CDRW with my other Compaq. This makes me want software called DVD Copy X. It's illegal to have now, it was just banned from all .com stores. The movies that you extract to your harddrive take up a whopping 8 Gigabytes! It's better to download compressed video off the Internet. It annoys me to reinstall the operating system when the harddisk gets 90 % full. I am a expert at reinstalling Windows, really I am. I know everything there is to know about installing Windows. I generally load stuff as I need it, not all at once.

Till next time Sahara, adios readers!

Concluding our Lan party! (2004-04-05 13:45)

Microsoft's next operating system wont be available for two more years. Thankfully, there has been screenshots updated frequently from Google's Image Search Engine. I call it Microsoft Windows XP 2, but it looks like it's going to be called Longhorn. Windows XP's version is 5.1.2600. On the screenshot you'll notice there is a build number that barely surpassed 4000. We already know that Longhorn will look and run a like WinXP. This new build minimizes holes in Windows to make it harder for hackers to get into your OS. Good, less crashes, hopefully! We might want to update soon after, because Microsoft is going to stop support for WinXP in 2008. WinXP will then be 7 years old.

Microsoft next generation Windows (Longhorn) | Release date: TBA 2006

I use Windows as do many other people and I made a list on what I like see changed.

- I want to see Windows not crash or lag as much as it does when an application crashes
- Internet Explorer should have a popup blocker of it's own
- Internet Explorer should have tabs like Mozilla does
- Microsoft should put in a powerful firewall and antivirus for critical updates.
- Make it easier to connect to networks.
- Tell me when the network card isn't working by giving me popup, "your network card is not working"
- Add spellchecker to Wordpad
- Add support drivers for Nvidia and ATI videocards
- Send free service pack cds to subscribers. And also pay for shipping.
- Automatically add MS Tweak UI 2.0 to next Windows so users can make better use to virtual memory.
- Market OS with free Microsoft Game Studios videogame in same package for free. Like Halo, Age of Empires, Dungeon Siege
- Add support for Direct X 10.0!!!!
- Make Windows Media Player a lot like Winamp 5.0. Though it can be skinnable, it doesn't have an equalizer on it, or a very good playlist window.
- Add ACE, RAR, GZIP capability with Windows Zip Archiver
- Make the desktop skinnable so you can change the header, the taskbar, the tool bar, the title bar so background will have gif like graphics.

- Make Windows backwards compatible with Linux OS.
- Go entirely 32 MB instead of being backwards compatible with 16-bit applications. And we already know Longhorn with also be 64-bit ready.
- Add DIVX, VOB, MPEG 2 and 4 codec to Windows Media Player when installed.
- Add bigger window to video-chat size with MSN messenger
- Add Realplayer and Quicktime to OS without having to download it.
- Add voice recognition to Wordpad without having to pay for expensive alternative.

(Xeon 1.0 can be downloaded at emulator-zone.com and the required XISO 1.5 application can be downloaded at Yursoft.cjb.net. Yes man, you must extract the whole game to your harddrive.)

- Microsoft should develop a working Xbox emulator for Windows Longhorn with joystick support.
- Add cut down version of Frontpage with OS
- Add Voice-over-IP feature so I don't have to pay long distance charges when calling somebody!
- Bring back the Windows 98 scheduler
- Bring back drive defragmenter
- Have more options to clear hard drive from unneeded data. Such as registry cleaner, hard drive cleaner, option to delete programs your not using in that option under My Computer instead of having to go to Control Panel.

Oh yeah I had Bob over, I never had a friend over for weeks. Very lonely at home these past weeks. We played Unreal Tournament 2004. I kicked arse in that game. Good way to go frag and have good time. I set the bot difficulty to average so he could "get use" to game. After that, we played Sonic Pinball on Gamecube, it was entertaining though I sucked at it, and Winning Eleven 6 for Playstation 2. Bob won, Yugoslavia 1, USA 0. Then we went old school and took turns playing the oldie but classic Megaman 2 for NES. We beat Metal Man, and Flash Man, then we got tired of that. Because bob was kicking my butt when it was his turn so we came up with the idea off sticking Super Mario Bros. 3 in the system. Bob and I got to the part on the ship with the missiles. It was entertaining. Then we played Diablo. Bob had to set the IPX network setting because I don't know. When we were ready to die, I used Bobafett's Trainer and we both hacked our characters. It's didn't look like we were going to reach the end anyhow. Later that night, I just played 2 hours of Diablo 2. I made it too hell difficulty and rushed to Act 4 and my Bowazon is still at level 47. She's under powered at the moment though I have a feeling that I can kick some minion butt in next few playing days. I think she'll be better then average at level 65 or so. I have some 430 defense armor I wearing. And I have to wait 2 levels before I can wear some magic boots with 77+ defense.

And I got mad when the America's Army Operations download got corrupted when downloading it to my external harddrive at school. So I'm getting a CD sent to me. This will be the first time I get a tactical game to play. Once you play one of these games, they're all the same. Plus they're harder then most games. Games are suppose to be fun, but not really difficult for the casual gamer, I think. I don't know, it depends on the game. Some gamers play at the hardest setting until they can eventually beat the game. Some say that this sharpens playing skills, but I can not stand being killed all the time. I play games at normal setting.

That's about as much I can think of before my brain gets tired! I have to have some brain power left so I can hit the books (homework), and then have just enough to function in Diablo 2. Back in a few days to type some more!!!

Second day of Easter Break...Installed Call of Dut (2004-04-08 13:45)

Today is one of those days with nothing to do. Yet there is plenty to do in Diablo 2. Yes, the graphics are horribly dated, yet the game is ever so strong in popularity. Gameplay is still top-notch in my opinion. No game can surpass it's level of customization. Actually, this game is actually massive, I've haven't completed hell for a few days, and every thing works. Though some gamers think Diablo 2 is very un balanced. The Amazon is by far the most powerful character and easiest to control. Such as I'm starting to do things in Level 54 that some players can't do until level 65. If I can wear 880 defense armor with 70 % magic find at level 54 than in my opinion I'm well off. It could be a lot worst.

In most games, developers are still finding the Quake 3 engine rules and kicks ass. Plus you can use the standard Quake 3 editor that comes with Quake 3 to develop your games. I wonder if that's because some game developers were creating Quake 3 mods before they were veterans in game design. It can be highly upgraded with better textures and ID software is making a ton of money leasing it out to smaller developers. Yet we get pretty war Games like Battlefield 1942, Metal of Honor Allied Assault, Call of Duty, Star Trek: Elite Force II, Return to Castle Wolfenstine, American McGee's Alice, Deus Ex 2 – Invisible War, and the latest game from Konami, Apocalyptica. I'll get into detail about this game later in the entry.

Okay, I had a chance to try out Return to Castle Wolfenstine, Metal of Honor Allied Assault and Call of Duty. All three run on the award winning Quake 3 engine, so there isn't that much difference in graphics. Something I thing everyone reading this should know is the big war game of 2002, Metal of Honor Allied Assault, was developed by former RtCW programmers from ID software who left to create a new game studio called 2015. 2015 first project was Metal of Honor Allied Assault. After MoH: AA was published by EA Games, some of the lead programmers / level designers left 2015 to create the game studio, Infantry Ward, which developed Call of Duty, which got 2003 First Person Shooter of the Year by PC Gamer, Gamespot, IGN.com, Videogames.com.

I'd just played Call of Duty for the first time ever, and I know what to expect. I played MoH AA. Both are fun...that's all I have to say. You can drive tanks and armored trucks in the game. That feature wasn't in MoH AA. War games have become so realistic pass few years, you can see believable facial expressions, that in itself is amazing. The explosions are eye catching too. I just love to blow Nazis up. If you ever watched Saving Private Ryan, Band of Brothers, or Full Metal Jacket, you know that not all soldiers just die. In this game you actually hear horrifying noises of dieing soldiers just like in the movies. Soliders that are all cut up. Legs, arms, Torsos missing. Anything gruesome in war is in these games. It will definally capture your anger. So real, infact, that you'll think you were on the battlefield yourself fighting in substantial situations. Biggest achievements are the hand signals in MoH and Call of Duty because it makes war that much more real then in last few years! As well designed as these games are...I find myself coming back to play Diablo 2. I know exactly why. In war games you can't play to perfection in hundreds of items and 40 skills to master with every character. You can't do that in first person shooters! The objective is the same, kill or be killed. And most noticeable, it's very playable over a modem unlike 3D War games.

The future of PC Gaming

The future is appond us. We will see more game developers leasing game engines than ever before. I don't care who is leasing the game engine as long as the graphics are state-of-the-art and eye popping. id software, Valve Software, and Epic Games are the biggest candidates. id software is coming out with the Doom 3 Engine, next generation engine that surpasses Epic Game's UT 2.5 engine. Valve Software is coming out with the new 'source' engine. All three lease their source code to other developers, every ones happy as a result. The gamer is happy because he gets the best graphics for his money. The developer is happy because they don't have to start from scratch which might have bankrupted them. And the game engine's creator is happy because it makes money on older technology to fund newer game engines. I know the first developer using the Doom 3 engine is making Vampire: The Masquerade 2. Interesting fact is America's Army uses UT 0.8 engine and that game is a free download. I know one true similarity in all these games. They all have the best frame rates and can carry ungodly amount of polygons.

Games I have my eyes on....

The first game I have my eyes on is The Matrix Online. It will take place after Matrix Revolutions will be a world when the Matrix still exists. The people in the Matrix now know they are in a computerized world though it will not seem that way since in the Matrix everything is 20xx when in fact the year is closer to 2450. The computers are human. The guardians of the Matrix are the Smiths. Everyone in the game has a choice of either taking the "green pill" or "red pill".

Another game I have my eye on is Lord of the Rings Online. This places Middle Earth in a game world. The graphics are suppose to be state-of-the-art. I know that it'll be a MMORPG. That's it.

Another game I'm interested in is Apocalptica. This game looks fantastic, very much like Unreal Tournament 2003 but it uses Quake 3 technology. What's God being called Neo-Satan for? Those Brits who developed this game forget that American's aren't into this new-age hippy stuff. I'm sure not. I'm not exactly from hick-ville, not I'm not into cowboys either. I'm closer to a cowboy nurd, except I hate being called nurdy. Yeah, us Americas are different from other parts of the world (not the fringe against immigrants and their customs) but American's are into Country and NFL! The people I meet greet people by saying Howdy (I say Howdy to people all the time, and I'm not from Texas) It's a American custom. Oh yeah, we call friends 'partners'. Such as, "My partner and I are going to high tall out of here and go to the movies!" We call people who are scared 'yellow' or 'cowards' in Wisconsin.

Easter is over | The Fall looks interesting. (2004-04-12 13:46)

Hmm. I thank all you bloggers for coming to my blog, it helps to make it so my blog will not disappear. First day of school today. Um, Joyce is getting into floppy drives. Ha, it's really simple. How to install a floppy drive, huh, not very difficult. Earlier before break, our class took a test on everything MS-DOS.

Conventional memory, upper memory. We had to know the different memory modules (DIMMs, RIMMS, SIMMS). They had this question on our test, I got wrong, it really was a stupid question. Can you upgrade SRAM on a motherboard? I said true. She marked it wrong even though it was true, you can replace SRAM like you would DIMMs. I didn't understand the system requirements for performance on WIN98. She says you need at least 128 MB RAM to run it well. I said 64-MB. While I never had 64MB on Windows 98, my friend did. Though there was a huge boost of performance adding extra 64MB, it didn't run dirt slow with 64-MBs. In fact on the Windows 98 box, I say to her, it only requires 16 MB minimum and 64-MB for best performance. Take it that 128 makes everything faster and PC owners began to buy these computers late in 1999, like my parents did. It was a hard question for me because I upgraded to 256 MB to that computer just before I gave it away to my Dad. The answer was 128 MB for Windows 98 and 256 MB for Windows 2000/XP. I don't know any computer that has less than 256 MB of RAM anymore. I don't get why RAM is a big deal anymore. There are some people out there who still think 256-MB is a lot of memory. Would I blow those people a way when I said that my computer has 8 times the memory as the one I got in 1999. Next year, 1 GB of RAM won't be a big deal anymore. I am saying this because I believe everyone should know that RAM doubles every 18 months now. It will be the industry standard. Another stupid question is does memory come in pairs of 2 or pairs of 1. Is this a trick question? My computers have 3 or more RAM sticks except for the Dell. She says that most computer come with 1 stick not 2. That sucks. Its crazy I tell you. Of course the correct answer is 1. Why should it even matter? In a year I'm going to upgrade my computer with another 1GB of RAM so it'll be 2 Gigabytes (2000 Megabytes) for 160 dollars.

As for more interesting life experiences, I went to school. I got home, took a shower, went to bed. Easter went well. I thought it wasn't very good. Not like Christmas at our house last year. I brought PS2 & Xbox to my aunt's house. The hottest game was easily Soul Caliber 2. My cousin, Josh, loved to play that game. Brian (oldest cousin and brother of David) took his Xbox out and we both exchanged played games. He's games sucked. I mean he thinks Xbox is the coolest thing on Earth. He has 35 Xbox games. In my opinion, Xbox is the worst console you can own right now. No good games or original games are scarce. Nothing seemed to play right, not even Halo. Tony Hawk's Pro Skater was also a big game over there. Brian didn't like Morrowind. He played THPS 4 and I played THRS 3. It was fun. Brian didn't have an Xbox LAN cable so we played separately. I talked to the relatives. I don't think we had much to talk about. I asked Uncle Jim about his house. It turned out to be a less than exciting conversation.

I want to add a game on my most anticipated game list. The game is called The Fall - Last Days of Gaia due out this year. I admit I made a couple mistakes. For example I bought a game (Spellforce) that does not allow me to play with anyone, thus it makes it a horrible multiplayer game. Secondly I had high hopes for Anarchy Online. Not only a disappointment, I was about to get my money back. Until I thought eh, when I can afford it, maybe I'll just play it. But if that's the case I'd just subscribe to Final Fantasy XI. Anarchy Online Shadowlands was a great buy though. It included Anarchy Online with two booster packs. It said though online fees required, the huge draw back. It was a serious let down for me. To get back to The Fall. The game looks promising. It's a role playing game not an action game. Role playing allows your character to communicate with other players. Plus it has a most interesting plot. 25 years after the world got wasted by Carbon Monoxide machine (called terraformers) suppose to create life on Mars, instead got in the hands of religious activists dooming the Earth to a global wasteland. Few human habitats still exist in the year 2062. If you're interested in the story go to <http://www.the-fall.com/e/index.php?menu=story>. I think it rocks! I'm interested about the hints of past relics of the early 21st century. I think I saw an F-150 in the screenshots. The game is developed by Silver Style, based in Berlin, Germany.

Other people may disagree, this game could flop! The truth is I never heard of this developer, I just know it has good looking graphics. I am still looking at Half-life 2 and will buy it the day it comes out because it is the sequel to Half-life. Half-life needs no introduction. Counter-Strike is finally dieing out, but never fear, all first person shooter fans have the sequel to look forward too. There are more first person shooters then any other genre out. Isn't that a bit scary fact? The best genre has the most games available.

I'll be back to tell more tall talls of my on going saga in "Adventures in Farmland." Tune in later too look at Chapter 30 something. These chapters aren't really staying on the same topic, but they all star me cause I'm the man! Gotta read a chapter in one of my classes.

I got my PSone emulator to work! | Link to PS Bios (2004-04-14 13:47)

Hello. I got some great news and some not so great news. The not so great news is I can't get my Playstation 2 emulator to work. The emulator I'm using is PCSX2 version 0.6. The EMU says it can't run commercial PS2 games. It freezes up when I run the game. I am positive that it needs a BIOS. Somewhere you can upload a BIOS from PS2 using some Bios image tool at <http://PS2dev.net>. Something I'm sure I don't know how to do. The good news is I got the Playstation emulator to work. I know bleem was out for quite some time now. And no this is not Bleem! It's better then Bleem. The one I am trying and to my surprise actually runs is EPSXE 1.6. I had to find the Bios (SCPH1001.dll) it was asking, lucky someone using iMESH had it. I also had to find a GUI. The emulator won't work without it. I found one off ESPXE's official webpage. So tonight I've been playing Final Fantasy VII on my PC (how exciting). It was a little awkward using the mouse as a joystick. My Noka AirFlow Pro controller is perfect for Playstation games. The still-low resolution graphics became a bit of a disappointment. But hey it's Playstation on your PC with no fancy TV tuner card. I tried putting the emulator with all the required plugins on my server which made me a little mad. I was going to tell all my friends to download it. Now I'm waiting to get PS2 games running on my computer, which would be very nice.

I would love to give you everything including the emulator itself except all I can give you is the PSone BIOS as written above for now. <http://www.pressenter.com/scampbel/psonebios.zip>. 410KB Games I've tested are Final Fantasy VII, Gran Tranismo 2 and Legend of Dragoon. They all work very well.

Some other personal news is someone at school deleted my Counter-Strike download. O _o. This was a major disappointment. Mom made a payment to Pay-Pal nearly a week ago to get America's Army Operations 2.0A sent to us. It hasn't arrived yet so I'm going to tell Mom tomorrow to check if any money was taken from her account. It's called Internet Fraud.

I find it difficult to study homework. I admit that the books have good graphics in them, but that's not what makes it overly easy. I must see reality of it all, if school was easy, 10s of millions of people would have same jobs I want. All it really takes is some determination and the will to read 20 pages every other day. Thus school being difficult enough for me to barely pass some classes. Computers are my livelihood. They control me. I must make them work! I knocked off zoning out in class even though I am tired most days from staying up all night. I don't know the solution...perhaps it is making good grades. If I made good grades, I'd be real happy. I know what CISCO part 1 is like. It is 3 times as difficult as my current classes. I got a 71 % final grade in Cisco at Chippewa Valley in River Falls. At WITC, I need a 72 % or better to get a passing grade in CISCO. This is true in all my classes. See I'll act mature like and say, "What's in the past is in the past." Which is the overwhelming truth in this case. I think I'll play Diablo 2 for the rest of the night so I can go to bed, wake up at 1:30pm, and play catch up on missing assignments.

I wonder how Randy's been doing this week. He's my long time friend. Lately he's been working double shifts at Somerset High School (Ozzfest is held there every year) When he comes over here, there really isn't much for us to do except play a few rounds of soccer.

Two months until the Pierce County Fair. I haven't gone there for 3 years since I had nobody to bring. This time though, I can drive myself over there. No sense trying to flatter young girls, I mean it could end up ugly. I mean what happens one of those gals gets me into trouble? Than what? Why meet someone you don't know when I'll never see them again. Plus, they'll figure out I have no money so they'll loose interest in me very quickly. I like blonds with long legs and their bellys showing. It's very attractive to us men ya know. Sometimes we just look and don't know it. There's a word for it, "babe watching" I believe. To get back to why I'm poor. It's all about the money. The man with the money gets all the beautiful high school babes! Damn right! Seen it myself!

It's over at Glenwood City. Usually there are a lot of tractors there and a lot of amusement rides and Candy. Same rides come back every year. If you've been there in the pass 5 years, there isn't really any reason to go back...same old rides, arcade, and booths, and games. I've been there since I was a kid. Now, I've pretty much grown out of all the rides. Though that "pop the balloon, win a prize booth" is still there. To have a great time, Bob, Randy and I should drive over too State Fair grounds pass White Bear Lake, Minnesota. Now that we're out of high school and Boy Scouts it should be much easier to plan a day for it. Haven't been there for 4 years. That place has some awesome rides during the annual state fair. I am fond of the bungee cord that drops people 100 feet. There is free stuff including custom T-Shirts booths. 93X is going to be there, that's enough reason to go. The state fair grounds has it's own auto racing track. It's not Nascar, but it's exactly like Nascar in a way. Been there once myself, thought it was pretty exciting. Hundreds more people come to the state fair every year.

I took this quiz i found off another blog. As you can see I have no problems.

24 hour mayhem!!!! (2004-04-14 13:48)

I woke up noon Thursday and stayed up for the next 24 hours. This sort of thing isn't good for me, but I do it anyways. I think I drank 3 Mountain Dew bottles that night. In the morning, my eyes started to sting and I couldn't walk straight so I figured I should go to bed. Mostly I've been staring at the computer screen. I think I know what I want for Christmas now. Tigerdirect.com had a good price range for Athlon 64s based desktop computers. I liked the 1000 dollar ones. The Athlon 64 FX-51s are higher CPUs that have 200+ MHz clock speed than the mainstream version. But they double the price of a new computer. I need a new computer because technology is progressing. The question I ask myself is when should I get a new computer? So I raise 1300 dollars and get the next generation of computer hardware. Should I wait 1 year or 2 years to buy it? It's an ever going dilemma. 18 months is a lot of time you know. It's a choice I'm very conformable making. This time I won't fry my motherboard and CPU by ESDing it.

I already know what I want:

Case with transparency with fancy design. I like blue the most.

Windows XP Pro

AMD Athlon 64 3600 or Athlon 64 4000

Soyo Dragon Socket 768 /w on board sound or a Nvidia nforce3 Motherboard

1024 MB PC2700 of RAM

DVD-RW+ 8/24/12

XFX or PNY Geforce 4 5700 256 MB DRR videocard

120 GB hard drive

100/1000 NIC

What should I do later today? Play with my multimeter? Hook it up to my car battery and see how many Volts pass through it. Fluke makes a tough multimeter so I'm sure it can do that sort of thing easily. Why do you think the whole unit is rubberized including the wire?

Last night I went online with Diablo 2 LoD and I leveled to 64. I was playing the Baal runs when I came across 3 characters that could do Battle Command, Windforce, firewall and some other skills that they could not normally do. They wear a rune called Call of Duty they made by mixing runes in the cube. The Mal rune is easy to find, but players want the most elite items if they give it away. It's a new formula in the 1.10 patch.

I now have possession of the Region 1 PS2 Bios, SPCH390001.bat. I was really happy to get it for the PSXE2 emulator. I used eMule and I had to re-download off the servers because the servers on eMule change every 10 seconds. After 1 hour of download attempts, I got it. This allows me to play Playstation 2 games on my PC. I can legally have this file because I own a Playstation 2. Why don't I just play games on Playstation 2? I do all the time though now in the near future I'll be able to run it both on PS2 and PC. After someone fixes the CD-drive issue.

I talked to Shawn today. He graduated from Renaissance Academy a year before I did. In 11th grade I enjoyed talking to him. I'm not very knowledgeable in cars like he is. I often got confused when we he hyped up about 4 wheel off-road magazines. He's the kind of person who would love monster truck rallies. One thing I picked up on is he doesn't care who you are as long as you're friendly. Everybody else were into girls and MTV music, he not so much. We got a better connection. Shawn does different things now. He is a mechanic and works on his own car. I am trying to get a computer technician degree. I never really was very close though we often talked with each other during lunch every day. To be honest I don't know him too well. We once went to Home Coming at River Falls in 2002. That was after Brain (we called him Polebarn) left school. He went into the marines and he changed to a more aggressive person. I don't see him and often I wonder if I should just forget about everyone in High School since we all go our separate ways.

I tried to get into the Navy once though I failed the test and I never re-took it. And here I am getting an entry level degree in network technician. To slow in math and that hurt me on the final test score. Though my reading level was better than most.

Does anyone want to send me a modblog message, and ask me if I need to change my mug shot? It's already two years old. It was taken by a professional photo guy so that's why it's one of the best photos of me.

I want a memory chip in my brain too (2004-04-18 13:48)

Technorati.com has visited my site a lot in the 5 months that it's been online. I don't normally visit Technorati much. Though I found some interesting links. Remembering back on Star Trek: The Next Generation or even Star Trek: First Contact, Borg have implanted chips into our brains so that anyone enslaved would think like everyone else. Borg comes from the word Cy-Borg meaning half-human, half machine. Anyways there is an article on Technorati that made me shit my pants. I did this article on nano-probing article for writing class in high school, and the teacher though I was just making it up, but here's the proof that I wasn't making it up. <http://news.bbc.co.uk/1/hi/health/3632855.stm>. I was saying that scientists will in the future insert tiny hard drives in our brains so we can remember things that aren't humanly possible presently. How neural brain patterns and electronic computer hardware can communicate is the million dollar question. The article clearly says Cybernetics already made the first step in this new technology. Human brains excepting computer data to function as memory. It's a scary thought having computers in your head to allow you remember everything. That wouldn't be fair to the rest of people who don't have a "memory chip." This article wasn't limited to just long term memory but also human made eye balls that give the blind, clear sight. Also chips that control people's arm and leg movements. Do these chips train people's brains to do common everything things or does it just take over the brain's functions forever. Of course the argument isn't going to be the cost, it'll be if it can function all the time. It'll probably run on a battery much like ethnic hearts.

I can't really tell bloggers what I think of memory chips without knowing what is true so I made fun of the article with what possibility could happen to someone who uses a brain chip themselves. Cybernetic is not going to tell the full story until it works perfectly. And I think what I say would be possible in 30 years.

While they're at it why don't these scientists just add a miniature cell phone /w antenna and FM Radio and Internet ? Okay, it's like this. Someone's talking to me and I'm listening to the weather report inside my head. Someone asks, "What are you listening too?" "I'm listening to Sports.", I say. He replies, "Where? I don't see any radio?" I joke, "No, I have a radio in my head, it's made by Cybernetic Corp." Oh how bizarre, man. Is it hard to concentrate? I reply, "Oh no, It's the greatest thing ever, I have high speed Internet and I'm downloading music videos to my hard drive right now. Yeah, the Internet browser opens a window in my left eye. I just think and I'm at the site." Oh, what do you do when your hard drive fills up? I chuckle and say, "Well I have a 400 GB hard drive in my head and it's about the size of my fingernail so I download it to my computer at home via Firewire." "What do you do to protect against viruses?" I respond, "Cybernetic gives me a virus protection which is apart of my service plan. I have to pay them usage fees every month."

Worst yet, just think of the military technology that we could use from it. Currently we use HUDs in aircraft to control magnitude, altitude, speed, G-force, and the whole sha-bang. Pilots may not need HUDs anymore since technology would grant them control with brainwaves entirely. Of course, if the electrical system fails then he/she would be in deep water. So I don't know how effective it would be. I can imagine though. Combine that with a GPS integrated fight navigation system, you got yourself a very powerful and intelligent aircraft, not to mention dangerous to the enemy. Remember, computers are stupid. They can't think for themselves. They need instructions to work. And it's a good thing, we don't need the T1000 coming back to end humanity. I'm joking, I really am imagining.

Someone would see this coming and they won't it. And I don't think we have the technology to make artificial intelligence happen. I really don't not in a 100 years. And if any of you believe that computers are going to take over the world, then you have been watching too many science fiction movies.

DOOM 3 vs THE WORLD exclusive + best mp3 ripper ev (2004-04-20 13:50)

After school today we were talking about decibels in class and I felt ignored by everyone in the room except for Steve so I left early. Not the maturist thing to do, but I got a hint after I accidentally said the word "bisexual" in one of my sentences. I had some trouble saying decibel. The two words don't rhyme. The class didn't seem to forgive me afterwards. Now when I got to school on Thursday, I'm probably going to get a slightly lower reaction from some people. I'm not going to worry about it. I find it takes much more energy to worry about it then it does to ask questions. Hmm. Which would I rather do? Ask questions or try to find out what went wrong that day? I get points for being a good student. When I felt ignored today, I remembering saying the F word under my breathe as if I were speaking directly at them. That was why I took off - I felt I like I was going to curse out loud in front of people. And that is not like me at all. I sometimes feel that other people's "superior intellect" gets the best of them. It's kinda like this, I start talking about fading sound or decibels and "cha-chin", something goes wrong and now I was ignored for some reason I don't know.

Okay, to be honest, I can take a day of this. Two days, sure. Three days would be pushing it. And a week would drive me crazy. I think there is something wrong with school if this outcast feeling continues. I want to take these classes too you know, no body is going to piss me enough to leave WITC all together. If they want to insult me by leaving me alone, than it's their lost....not mine. Though I wished I knew someone that would talk to me more often. College is like high school....you lose most of your friends after you graduate than you make new ones in college or I was suppose too.

So I got home, and I did my usual entertainment, researching better ways to compress audio and looking for new Doom 3 information. We finally got a release date for July 2004!!! That speaks for itself. Seems that Half-life 2 and Doom 3 are going to be released 2 weeks from each other. More exciting news is available, I now know ID software is going to incorporate Doom 3 into the Geforce 6000 series. Details below: .

I find that my Doom 3 and Half-life 2 posts got a healthy dose of views. That's why I want to bring you some more news. Doom 3 will take full advantage of the Geforce 6000! Officially, the world's 2nd 512 MB video card. Interesting enough, not the most powerful. Nvidia Quadro series is now and forever shall be the top line, most powerful cards available on the market today. Unless, of course, Nvidia decides to stop doing Quadro all together. Remember the law of diminishing returns applies here. The graphics with current 256 MB GPUs look so beautiful (UT2004 is a great example of high polygons count models and backgrounds running at 60 FPS with little latency. The current cards do a good job handling the 80 % of any game out on shelves today. It won't be until games that require 128-MB video cards to play, we'll see some need for Nvidia's latest Geforce. Take Halo for example. Halo was pretty popular a couple months ago because it looked pretty, but games are coming out now that look better then Halo now. Halo has some capability issues. It runs on my Radeon 9800 XT card very well, but will not run on any of my Geforce cards. I downloaded Nvidia drivers from last month. This is shocking, knowing the extremely popular Xbox version runs on a modified Geforce 3. The 1.4 patch fails to fix the bug. Bummer.

::: Doom 3 Facts I'll list 'em :::

- Doom 3 is a single player FPS with a cinematic full motion video cutscenes.
- We'll see the same items those who played Doom II used.
- Doom 3 will take the horror genre to a new level and it's a FPS
- UK developer Slash-Damage is working on Doom 3 multiplayer (team that worked on Return to Castle Wolfenstein Enemy Territory.)
- Doom 3 will take place on Mars
- Release date July 15, 2004
- Doom 3 to use combination of Pro Logic II and Dolby 5.1 Surround Sound
- ID software is tweaking Doom 3 to forcefully run at 60 frames per second. This means if your videocard can't do 60 at current resolution, you'll be forced to drop your resolution.
- Xbox version of Doom 3 confirmed to have unlockable full version of Doom II. Doom II in high resolution?
- Geforce 6000s series suppose to have biggest leap in graphics performance leap from current generation to Nvidia's next generation. That and AMD's 64-bit processor and you've got a very powerful gaming rig. But what's state of the art technology if you can't afford it? LOL!
- I think the Geforce 7000 series to be first 1 Gigabyte video cards on the market

::: Compressing MP3s :::

Best free software available:

CDEX Audio Ripper 1.51 – <http://cdex.n3.net>

LAME 3.97 decoder upgrade for CDEX - www.mp3dev.org/mp3/

I had a very tough time finding MP4 audio codec for my collection. MP4 is copyrighted and therefore not being easily downloaded as a plugin. I think the web browser gets confused with MP4 and MPEG 4. MPEG 4 is compressed video. Mp4 is compressed audio. DivX codec is mainly used to compress video for transferring over the Internet, and it's the most popular codec in video applications. I know this because I got 60 DIVX movies and 50 DIVX music videos. This wouldn't be so out of the ordinary for someone with broadband, but I have a modem so I treat DIVX movies like it top priority stuff. First you have to extract the VOB files to your hard drive (damn it's too big) I started to extract Lord of the Rings: The Fellowship to my hard drive for the first 4 minutes of the movie and it already took up 90 Megabytes. When I compressed it to DivX codec for AVI, I managed to get it down to 11 Megabytes. Of course, I also had to lower the resolution to 500x500. Not to mention compressing just a few minutes took 10 minutes to complete. But what about MP4 audio? XM Radio uses MP4. It's more compressed than MP3 I know. What happens? I can get 25 to 50 % better compression on my MP3s without faintness. I tried using DIVX 3.11 audio codec with CDEX and it wouldn't work.

DIVX video is extreme hard to manage. I had to prepare a lot for CD burning. All my videos I had fewer than 702 MB I burned to CD. That's about 50 % of everything. The remaining 50 % I have to either (1) transfer huge files over 10/100 megabit Ethernet or (2) take my DVD-RW drive out and insert it into my other computer so I can burn all the music videos and movies to several DVDs. I think option 2 will be the wisest choice. I could be wrong, though option one seems to be time consuming. WASTED TIME + TROUBLE-SHOOTING = MORE WASTED TIME. It's like a catch 22 choice. When your dealing with my Ethernet, it's safe to say I need a major upgrade. CAT5e upgrade to everything, no more hub! I'm cashing in for a switch board.... Latest technology is cool when it works. Three GIGABYTE RJ-45 patch cables are going to be expensive, ($80 - $150) so I'll go with only two. I'm doing this over the summer if I get an application in at Manards. I may work the morning shift 5 days a week. I also applied for Home Depot and Fleet Farm in Hudson, Wisconsin.

I am hoping that today was just an off day and I don't miss out. I think I'll play my new games Tekken 4 and SSX 3. Tekken is fine, but not as good as Ratchet and Clank: Going Commando. Oh and case you were wondering, I stopped playing Final Fantasy X-2 partly because I got stopped at the 3rd Chapter with Blobby type enemy that can kill you in one hit. I hate those. Luckily I was smart enough to save my game before I died. Hell, it got too involved. Sure it had a deep story, but you had to work on your character a lot and make sure it was ready for up coming bosses, that took time, time I didn't have. Final Fantasy fans know what I'm talking about. If I was smart I would have skipped the scenario all together. It wasn't a required one; it was a side-quest. I decided NOT TO PUT MY VIDEOGAME COLLECTION PICS ON MODBLOG BECAUSE THEY ARE TOO BIG FOR VIEWING. I will post them on my personal website later today. My collection is pretty big so you'd might like to take a look. I have a total of 117 games if you count Playstation (16), Dreamcast (34), Gamecube (16), Playstation 2 (37) and Xbox (14) games combined. I counted all of them. I have a full list on my website if you care too look. I'm more a game collector than a game player these days. You know, PS2 had all the RPGs and solid Racing games I just had to get one. I had to buy Xbox and Gamecube and PSone first before I knew I "had to have" exclusive Playstation 2 RPGs. I own 10 PS2 RPGS and I only played three of them (FFX, FFX2 and Xenosaga). I don't have time to play all of them. They are like 35 - 50 hours a piece. Final Fantasy X was my favorite, though I'm itching to find out what happens at the end of Xenosaga. The first 20 hours of Xenosaga was pretty fun until I got lost in the game's 1 out of 1000 possible places. It seems like you have to be at the other 999 places before you find out the right place to start a sequence so you can start over again much like how it was in Final Fantasy 10. The game advances by cut scenes which I am use to now. 40 hours of Final Fantasy 10, and 20 hrs. of Xenosaga back to back makes you a little bored of the both. It's all good though. I went back to play Diablo 2.

Another interesting note I like to mention was yesterday when I was watching the FMVs off Playstation games on my PC. Yes, you heard right....PC! I admit, I was even kinda surprised that someone figured it out. Bypassing encryption and I don't think Playstation runs Windows...in fact I know it doesn't. It has a bios, graphics acceleration files, and sound drivers, and maybe some run time files kinda like Visual C++ would have. Visual C++ is what Microsoft programmers use to compile windows code for applications. This program is called the PSX Multi Converter. Comes in both Shareware and the slightly dated freeware version. The freeware version does crash more often and you can't go full screen with it. You will like it much more because it never expires! It's also possible to save your favorite FMV to AVI on your desktop. It's much better to just scan the CD for movies and play the video off the disc. I very much enjoyed watching Final Fantasy 8 and Xenogears because I can re-watch the videos with detail, just to get full understanding of the game. The last FMVs of Final Fantasy 8 were 5 to 8 minutes long so I had to watch it at least 3 times to understand everything.

Top Secret Government games gone commerical Inside (2004-04-23 13:51)

Hello Bloggers. My day went well. The subject today is Best selling Videogame according to the Guinness and military games developed for the military. Today was not as interesting as most days. More like a 4 out of 10 if you describe it as a productive day. It hasn't occurred to me to just drop by the famous Guinness World Records website, at the TECH section. This kid on a message board at Mario128Central.com said he thought Orcania of Time was the best selling videogame ever. I didn't know. I am surprised that I own all of the videogames that Guinness talks about. I advise everyone to just pass though this site. Half the website is in Macromedia Flash 5, which is great. These are official record breakers.

BEST SELLING VIDEOGAME IS

- A.) FINAL FANTASY 7
- B.) GRAND THIEF AUTO VICE CITY
- C.) LEGEND OF ZELDA ORCANIA OF TIME
- D.) SUPER MARIO BROS.

If you answered the last game, you're right. This wasn't the NES original, it was the Game Boy version. I thought the answer was Final Fantasy 7 because it was a very popular Playstation game. Everyone I talked too loved it. I also own GTA Vice City, but I don't play it much anymore. Since Super Mario Bros. was on Gameboy, the handheld also got a place in Guinness as most popular handheld computer !!!!

Most Expensive Game to Develop:

- a.) Final Fantasy 7
- b.) Metal Gear Solid 2 – Sons of Liberty
- c.) Shenmue
- d.) Shenmue 2

I tried to trick you in thinking that it was the sequel of Shenmue. But the answer is Shenmue for the Dreamcast. It cost AM2 20 million dollars to make. (which also develops Virtua Fighter games.) I would have ever guessed it. I thought it was Final Fantasy 7, usually games with that budget has state-of-the-art graphics which Shenmue didn't have. I own the Dreamcast game, Shenmue and Shenmue 2 for X-Box. When I saw the Dreamcast title, it came in 4 discs plus the extras disc. Each Dreamcast disc can hold 1.4 Gigabytes. It took AM2 seven years to develop, that's amazing. Only one question....Shenmue 2 isn't apart of Shenmue, starting where the original left off. I think that Shenmue 2 was going to be Shenmue 1 until spitting them up would prove less expensive for Sega. Shenmue is on several 'most popular games of all time' lists including ones from IGN.com, Game Informer, and of course Gamespot.com.

I am kind of interested what the world record was before? Was it Final Fantasy 7? I also heard somewhere it was Super Mario 64. Nintendo developed the N64 around the graphics engine supporting Super Mario 64, that's why. It was also the first technical demo for the console.

Next, I got interested in a couple of war games made by game developers to train troops on the battlefield. Some of these games have true-to-life military tactics using state-of-the-art AI.

US Military War Games gone commercial

I have to say that not all WAR games are made for the US military. And not all games developed for the US military are in full 3D. One very good example of this is "Real War" created by OC Incorporated, a software developer funded by the USA. The game looks a lot like Command & Conquer in it's 2D low resolution overhead mode with cheesy animations. The commercial version is developed by Rival Software. Rival is a game developer cross platform (PC and MAC). The military version has more learning curves. The commercial version has less, but the graphics are the same.

Counter-Strike is the most downloaded mod ever, requiring a full version of Half-life to play. It was created by (back then) average game designers that where shocked by amount of success the mod had. It was suppose to be just another mediocre Half-Life mod. The game became so popular that Valve and Sierra began to release it as an expansion pack for Half-life by paying the small developer staff money. In fact, the game studio is called Rural LTD, which was hired to develop the Xbox title, Counter-Strike. Counter-strike is a team based game much like Team Fortress. (source: Military.com)

Probably the 2nd most popular war game released to the public is America's Army Operations. This game is already one of the most popular online first person shooters, and it is made by the US Army. I know this because I own America's Army 2.0a and the game's servers are always full, it's as popular as Call of Duty or Unreal Tournament 2004. The game doesn't suck and it's free for everyone. It was created based on the then state-of-the-art UNREAL engine. (Source: Americasarmy.com and <http://abcnews.go.com/sections/scitech/DailyNews/wargames020821.htm>)

Full Spectrum Warrior TBA: December 2004 Xbox and PC

The USA Government also has had a state of the art military videogame that remained TOP SECRET until it's unrevealing in 2003! The game called Full Spectrum Command. Full Spectrum Command is the smartest videogame ever. The Institute of Creative Technologies first developed this game. In 2003, the US Government gave production rights too Pandemic Studios teamed up with THQ to mass produce it. The game, now called Full Spectrum Warrior, is going to be published for PC and Xbox around Christmas. It will be another Tom Clancy's Ghost Recon I think, but better designed and harder to finish. (source: http://www.wired.com/news/games/0,2101,60688,00.html?tw=wn_story_related)

MRE - an extremely well developed tutorial developed by ICT (Institute of Creative Technologies.) Project costs government 45 million dollars. Project Leader...US Joint Chiefs of Staff office in D.C. Program displayed in a 150 degree theater screen that covers the whole room with a true to life sound experience (10.2 surround sound). I don't know much about it except it sounds pretty awesome. The screen sounds a lot like the iMAX theater at the Science Museum of Minnesota. And that screen is absolutely huge. In fact the new Science Museum (built in 1999) was built around the projection screen. It's suppose to be one of the biggest screens in the whole world.

Metal of Honor 1 and 2 were originally developed by the US government and then given to Dreamworks Interactive (game publisher) when the US military could no longer use it as a training option. Probably because the graphics are bad by today's standards. The latest installments, Metal of Honor Allied Assault and MoH AA: Spearhead, are developed by 2015. Personally, I favorite it because it was my second WWII game I got for my 19th Birthday. (source: Military.com)

Did a Monolith create us? Will we ever know? (2004-04-24 13:52)

I woke up this morning and played Kingdom Hearts. I thought the intro was well done. And they give you a choice of two skills and that you have to give up one skill. The game has good graphics and is very colorful. I'll have a review up soon. I won't review the game unless I feel I can accurately judge the game for what it is...not what someone else says about it. Anyways, I got caught up with this monolith phonunuihom. I watched 2010 on Showtime. The movie was about Monoliths (spiral vacuums that move around on the surface of a planet) Anyway I wanted to learn more about Monoliths, I only now their vacuums. They do exist. What I didn't know was they eventually become Suns. Red Suns (Suns colored red) are supposed to be resurrected into Suns by imploding themselves. When they are red, that means they are the oldest of any sun and are ready to die. Yellow means they are new. If a sun dies it either becomes a black dwarf (these sometimes explode into millions of pieces), resurrects into a new sun or becomes a planet. Although planets can also become suns. (first shown in 2001: A Space Odyssey where Jupiter became a 2nd Sun.) The movie was strange in that people in 1968 thought in the first year of the 21st century we would have technology to go to different planets, which is not true. And that we've developed a space station in 2008 between Mars and Jupiter. In reality, the UN is collaborating to build an International Space Station that'll be completed 8 years from now. One that orbits around our planet. MIRS was a great space station, the new space station will be 10 times greater. It is said that in order to travel to distant planets, the United States will need a space station to harbor a shuttle large enough to go the distance. Thus this shuttle will be a mini space station in itself. Back to today's blog subject, monoliths at large, the truth of it all is.....if there were mini-monoliths servicing on Earth, we all be died. So if that day comes...in 100 years or 1 million years, the human species would cease to exist, so there is no point trying to prevent it, now is there.

In a more interesting note, I read on the Internet that according to the book, The Sentinel (The book that the movie is based on), by Sir Arthur C. Clark - ape men (animals not quite human, and not quite ape) 100,000 years ago have come across a monolith (alien object) that made them much smarter and transformed them into human beings. It is true that humans look the same now then they did 100,000 years ago. Two things changed I think, we learned a lot more since then and we live longer, right?

In case of the monolith in "2001: A Space Odyssey", this was suppose to be the 2nd monolith of an alien technology humans come across. In the movie, it looked like a giant 3D rectangular object made of elements not known to man, and it was on the planet Jupiter. At the end of 2010, a 3rd monolith was shown, this one was either on Mars or Neptune, waiting for a species intelligent enough to use it.

The single scariest part of the movie was the fact alien monoliths can destroy as much as they create. And that they existed 100,000 years before present day. Thinking of us as a species, we haven't evolved very far...we can't do warp travel! Thus not being able to mine minerals off other planets or to create more advance weapons and most importantly, solve that question that haunted man since the dawn of time, Are we alone in the Universe? If we are, it's an awful waste of 'space'. (William Shatner in Star Trek V: The Undiscovered Planet) But I also agree with if we want to find out we're not alone in the universe. We had two very intelligent ancient civilizations, the Egyptians and the Romans which got destroyed by former slave armies. Two which got destroyed and we couldn't do anything about it. I mean the Egyptians were very close of creating electricity 2000 years ago. One very ancient object shown a crude battery made from a pineapple. The Egyptians also invented pullies.

I know this paragraph has nothing to do with the movie or monolith theory, but I played this game, Xenosaga Episode 1 for the Playstation 2, which curiously has similarities with 2001 A Space Odyssey. Xenosaga represents a monolith given to Earth in 2001 holding immense technology that somehow holds data in itself that allows humans to boldly go where no man has gone before - outer space. Of course, it took us 300 years to get there. And when we got there we went to war with the Gnosis because they apparently hated our guts and our existence. O_o. The game takes place in the 25th century. The monolith looks exactly like the one at the end of 2010. The game is developed by Monolith. I don't get why a monolith can be a large rectangular object and also a large spiral vacuum that moves. Does a monolith take two forms? Two forms of monolith are represented in the movies, 2001: A Space Odyssey and 2010. They are real but only exist in outer space. The math of a monolith confuses me, but one thing is for certain, monoliths and black holes aren't the same thing. Monoliths can only exist on planets while black holes are in Space itself.

This entry was inspired by this movie review, <http://www.filmsite.org/twot.html> after I saw 2001: A Space Odyssey and 2010 back-to-back for the first time. In short, if you see the movie, don't start saying that you've started seeing monoliths on moving in your back yard at night, okay. And if you have seen one, please record it so someone can't say you're delusional! The truth is I was very delusional and very curious about many things.

odyssey battery (2005-11-28 18:18:00)

I liked your information in

Did a Monolith create us? Will we ever know?. Too bad it doesn't have more on car battery. I was looking for car battery in my area. Enjoyed reading what you have. I'll check back later when I get some spare time next week. Thanks Ian's Smashing Good Blog Site. Come to Las Vegas sometime. Fun town.

Which of my webpages do you like the most? survey! (2004-04-25 13:53)

I would like to ask bloggers to check out these three links of my webpage templates over a 2 year period. I would like to know if I should go back to my older template (which is by no means out of date) just not updated to current. I quite that template because I thought I could achieve something more, there is just something about "Ian's Personal Webpace v4 that I can't surpass. While Renegade Viking's Awesome Webpage v5.0 is more awesome. You might realize that my latest template is modified for a 1280x960 resolution. Please change your resolution. I thought Renegade Viking's Webpage 2004 was somewhat cool in my opinion, not the best (not the worst I created) because it has the curviness which was most inventive, but it was off centered I thought.

Link 1: Ian's Personal Webpace v4 (2nd template of 2003)

<http://www.geocities...alkers101/start.html>

Pros

- Pretty JPEG menu bars

- 100 % online. All my work with this template is online, not deleted.
- Has Ian's RPG Guild - my RPG gaming pages with some of my favorite RPGS
- Gaming Reviews (very updated)
- Editorials working.

Cons

- Each HTML page without graphics is about 110 KB each (takes up sever space)
- I stopped my blog updates October 1, 2003
- With graphics expect to download 300KB. of graphics, IE5 will load graphics from temp folder to make it load faster the 2nd time)
- Photo Gallery doesn't work

Link 2: Renegade Viking's Webpace v5 (template 5 of 2004)

http://www.geocities...01/v2004e_index.html

Cons

- Not as nice looking as v4.0 overall Although I do like the background more than any enhancement on my webpage
- It seems that I've been force to conserve server space by putting information on html that loads in mini windows. Loading times improved, but readability as gotten worst. I weighed what I gained from what I lost using this.
- Doesn't look as nice as v4.0

Link 3 : Renegade Viking's Webpage (template 4 of 2004)

Half-life 2 to use tranguar pixel maps. (2004-04-30 13:02)

I got an interview with Target, it went very fast. I talked to this 22 year old for my job. I wanted the job because I thought it was only one opportunity for it. I'm going to do stocking in the morning 5:30 - 12:00, but I don't know if I got the job or not? I'm guessing not. I told her that when a customer steals something, I should yell out and say Stealer! Come back! Instead of immediately going to the manager or another store attendant. They all carry around walkie talkies so one person can let the whole store know. Oops! I forgot about that part. It's true too. I should know, I played with walkie talkies when I was a kid all the time. It was the cheap versions for kids. Dumb really, you could shout further then the range of them.

Is it just me or is PS2 games getting like XBOX. In my opinion, game developers beefed up the console so it's "over clocking" it. Putting the Dreamcast aside, the games never looked so good on my television! Poor dreamcast, I actually thought it would have a full lifespan. Than again we will still see Sega games, so I don't miss Sega I guess. This article is all about Half-life 2, right?

Imagination is the limit, right, so I'm going to tell you some stuff that may or may not be true, but is so good that it should be. Planet Half-life updated their Half-life 2 section again. Take what I say with a grain of salt. I just talk about this because I want to gather info on my most favorite upcoming game, Half-life 2 for the PC. And there will be millions like me who will awe at the graphical improvements as much as the intelligence of the enemies...I want to learn about the technical side of the game, because it's the 2nd most powerful gaming engine on Earth (First is ID software's Doom III engine). I hate to speak word per word, but in a way their just trying to just say things to get hits! That's all, how does it expect me to compete. I can! Okay, all I have to say about Half-life 2 is that the pc version looks as good if not better than the Xbox version. So far haven't any of you noticed that most FPS take place in the future (unreal tournament, far cry, Duke Nukem 3D, Doom, Quake) You are Gordon Freeman, a x-black mesa research facility survivor. Only one thing - I haven't heard of Black Mesa? Valve made a side story of Half-life called Blue Shift released in 2001. Oh wait isn't it that faculty where I was in the first game. In Black Mesa, you play Barney. Barney is a security guard. Barney and his friends attempt to get out of Black Mesa and Barney is the only survivor, aside from a few scientists and Gordon. Barney is going to play a role in Half-life 2. Barney was the good guy while the marines, black ops and aliens were the bad guys. It's like a modern day western. Rockstar North is the first to come out with a 3D western shooter. It's hard to believe that Valve used Half-life engine for 8 years (since 1995, when they began developing it) They've enhanced it with patches over the years, but Blue Shift added higher resolution textures to all previous Half-life games. (owners should know, I don't) If Counter-Strike popularity still holds up, we may see people still playing Half-life in one way or another in 2007. I guess that Valve will package the new game along with Half-life and Blue Shift as free bonuses. Half-life costs 10 bucks at Wal-Mart. Certainly they can afford one more CD. I hope so. I generally just give blank cds a way, you can get 100 pack for only 25 dollars. Before, didn't it bother you that Half-life looked exactly like Goldeneye, a popular FPS for Nintendo 64 put together by Rareware, in high resolution. Remember the paint in Goldeneye, the bare walls, hidden away by a blazing fast graphics engine, realistic explosions, stellar weapons, and a very strong multiplayer campaign. In fact, I don't know why Half-life wasn't for N64! I found most of my information off this weird webpage [http://collective.valve-erc.com/index.php?faq=source_mod_faq] You've got to check this out, the faq has an outstanding amount of info on Half-life 2! I knew it! HL2 uses Maya. I downloaded Maya over the internet 8 months ago. It was huge (150 MB) Maya is a professional modeling tool costing a whopping 800 dollars. It is very good at what it's meant for. Never was able to make models out of it. I tried very hard, read online tutorials, and never could design models. This is a good webpage to learn how to make models with Maya [http://members.shaw.ca/psyc3d/tutorials_maya01.html] It sounds like the Source engine will be used in games for the next 6 years. Two months ago I guess I was absolutely right, Valve will include upgrade tools. Valve confirmed that level designers who made Half-life Maps will be able to update it to be playable in Half-life 2. Take it that the mod community is also willing to upgrade the textures to look as good the rest of HL2. http://collective.valve-erc.com/index.php?faq=source_mod_faq§ion=106159035033544900&question=106159124050453000 Half-life 2 will use the same level design program (Hammer) as Half-life 1 just a much newer version.

http://collective.valve-erc.com/index.php?faq=source_mod_faq§ion=106159035033544900&question=106159124050453000 The new Half-life 2 will use the same level design program (Hammer) as Half-life 1 just a much newer version.

Another interesting thing I found out about Half-life which explains it's depth is that the Map size is 16 times bigger. The map size I'm talking about the image/texture map on any given object. The maps are going to be bigger then half-life. You know that in Unreal Tournament 2004, some of the larger maps are 50 MB or more. I'm guessing each Half-life level will be more than that. Remember all the characters, sound, lighting effects are going to be loaded within the map file. This new technology, sound and lighting is included in textures apart of the maps.

VERC says half-life 2 will have characters models that use 7500 polygons each. That's the main characters. The smaller creatures will have half that much. Game designers call this comparison, LOD (level of detail) I'm surprised, and I thought the people would have as much polygons as Gordon's hand does. (You see it all the time, it's on the lower right part of your screen) VERC says that hand is about 2000 polygons.

I found out that the game will use 33 to 50 passes for each texture (filled with 2000 - 7500 polygons). 16.5 passes per second for 60 frames per second | 33 cycles per second for 30 frames if your computer can handle that many cycles. Data can only go so fast right so sometimes textures have to make multiple passes, Half-life is much more advanced than most games because it requires 33 passes. Mid-range computers may only be able to do 60 frames at 800x600 while faster computers can do 60 frames per second at 1024/968, but must be able to do the full (30-50 range) If one texture can do this than the whole level can be handled the same way.

I am going to answer the apex of all graphics engine questions. Why are triangles better than squares? Triangles are half a square so they can curve twice as much. It puts an end to squareish looking textures. I like to relate Goldeneye and Super Mario 64 with this, because I remember the box-like bodies. Hey, it was state-of-the-art in 1997. We can't do circles because circles don't evenly connect to each other, there would be gaps. With triangles, there are no gaps since all the edges of one triangle are parallel to the one across from it. What's the next step in polygon evolution? Hexagons? Nvidia says it's Geforce 6800 can do 4 quads per second. A quad is a 2x2 pixel tile. It's too complex to put in words so I'm going to give you a diagram from Beyond3D.com. [See the squares! They're converted into triangles - well almost!]

"As the diagram above suggests, rendering in 2x2 pixel quads can leave potential inefficiencies since at the edges of the triangle some pixels may fall outside of an area that requires rendering, meaning these pipelines are effectively not used as they can't operate on other triangles because some pipelines in the quad group are occupied. Yet the benefits of a quad pipeline organisation usually outweigh this pitfall."

Talking about the game...I'm thinking I'm just going to download the beta myself. I hear from <http://www.half-life2.org.uk/> (Damn British know more than I do) that the full version of half-life 2 is leaked on the Internet(SWEET!) I opened Emule (Person/Person sharing unity) Link: Half Life 2 Beta-Anon Only HL2 100 %.rar I found many hits claiming to be Half-life 2. I'm guess they're all real. It seems that both come in 3 parts all 650 MB files - probably are cd images. That's understandable since the game may come packaged with 3 CDs. It will be 7 months before Half-life 2 comes out commercially. I know some have Trojan horses, but that's a risk I'm willing to take to play HL2 early. And I'll be sure to tell everyone if it works and how stable the beta is.

Remember back to the first FMVs and how they shown characters that weren't as bump mapped as today's games. I agree with Final Fantasy fans when the next Final Fantasy game hits PS3, it'll look very close to Final Fantasy: The Spirits Within. In my opinion FF: Spirits looks better then Shrek. In actual gameplay if graphics looked like FF Spirits, I would become dumb-founded. FF Spirits looks better than the Final Fantasy X cut scenes, not by much though. We're not limited by media storage any longer. To discover myself, I just had to stick Final Fantasy X into my DVD-Rom drive and under properties where it showed the GIGs used, I found it to be 4.5 Gigabytes. WOW! Final Fantasy XI is much bigger using a hard drive just to carry the space. I should know, the PC version of FFXI is 6 700 MB cds that all need to be installed to you're hard drive and the data is compressed so I got it, it took up 6.1 Gigabytes. It would have been much cheaper to just have 2 DVDs packaged into one case for the PS2 version. If you can put music on your drive than what's the need for it? I really want to know. Xbox 2 and PS3 aren't going to have a hard drive for this reason. We'll start seeing more then one DVD for one game in the future cause soon DVDs aren't enough.

Here is what I found out

1. Final Fantasy 10 used 4.55 Gigabytes
2. Metal Gear Solid 2 used 4.3 Gigabytes
3. Final Fantasy 10-2 used 3.9 Gigabytes
4. Jak 2 used 4.1 Gigabytes
5. Winning Eleven 6 used 3.4 Gigabytes
6. R & C Going Commando used 3.8 gigabytes
7. Xenosaga used 3.9 Gigabytes
8. Gran Turismo 3 used 3.8 gigabytes

Now how can high res games be put on one DVD if a DVD only has 4.7 gigabytes of data? Isn't this weird how games will soon use more than 4.7 gigabytes. Making two DVDs is probably as expensive as making 4 CDs. Sony should seriously think of updating to using MP3 for audio files and MPEG 4 for movies just to conserve space. MPEG 4 has a 1/10 ratio over uncompressed video with barely any image loss. There is also this popular format called Bink Video. [www.radgametools.com] It is used in some videogames today. Bink Video is popular to use for games because game developers don't have to pay big bucks to register for compression programs. The BIK conversion program is free off Bink's website, works with both video and audio. Playstation uses a format called PSS. PSS is a compressed format for video. I liked it how PSone games used MPEG1 for video. The other day I tried to get PS2play to work. PS2play is the only real Playstation 2 video reader available to my knowledge. NGemu.com has it for download. I want to see the alternate ending FMV of Final Fantasy 10. I don't need to see it, but it would be nice to just watch it when ever I want too.

You know I haven't seen those mini DVDs that the Gamecube uses take off. Someone at school had one of those 1.8 inch mini disc and I thought he was rich. This was before DVDs came out so I didn't know any disc except the CD.

I now have an 80 GB external hard drive! It came in the mail today. I'm surprised, it's much bigger than my Apple iPod. I looked recently and iPods still cost 340 dollars at Target! Expensive, but worth it for those who want to carry 20 gigabytes of music in your pant's pocket. I don't need a second one. There is this term that I like to use - it's called 'delete', and people worried about space restraints should use it sometime. The new MP3 players have FM tuners allowing you to record FM stations to MP3. People like me! LOL! If you think would you rather spend 50 dollars on a 128MB thumb stick or 100 dollars on a lithium battery operated 10 GB MP3 player that doubles as regular data storage? Me, I have two 128 MB and one 64 MB thumb sticks. The most I ever downloaded off the schools server was 200 MB. That was last week. I've downloaded 200 MB over a modem from night to day one time listening to the Internet Radio service, Shoutcast. I like shoutcast. They have new songs, and all you need is an Internet service provider to listen and rip the latest music. How can you expand what music you like if you don't try new things? There are over 200 radio stations on Shoutcast. Shoutcast is best listened with Winamp.

I'm also trying to rip audio from my tv, it works very well. I'm getting 128 kbp (high quality) techno from satellite. Want to know the secret because to some people it's no secret. Take headphone wire and hook one end to your tv's headphone jack and the other end to your analog input jack on the iPod. You'll know if you got any signal because the horizontal bars on the LCD screen will light up. It's better than having an internet station open. I'm also going to try to rip some long sessions of Country and rock. Reggie and some Soft rock....I'm not sure about.

To end this entry I like to include an updated favorite playlist...

Made Thinwire from scratch (2004-05-07 21:28)

Today I made thinwire from scratch, it was hard but once I got the hang of it, it was easy. I'll get to that later. Right now I'm going to talk about today and yesterday. This is perfect for getting my mind off things. There was this kid at school and he said our school isn't going to be on Microsoft anymore and will change to Linux because it's open source. They will save like 100+ dollars per computer with unlimited updates. He said that! I didn't say anything. He said it so cheerfully too. I should of told him, "Man, you have no idea what goes on in this place because haven't you heard that network technicians work with both Linux and Windows. You think you're pretty cool saying that, don't you? There are plenty of people who used Linux around here and they don't care which OS they use. You moron!" Instead, I didn't say anything to him and walked away. Besides I didn't want him to get all mad if I told him that Linux was common knowledge around here. I suppose it means he isn't dumb! I wish that there was an incredible looking blond who wasn't bother by speaking technical. In fact today there was, and I wanted to talk to her. I said, "Whoa, you're a looker, can we talk!?" No response. I tell you women these days don't know when someone likes them. It's not cool to ignore someone!

In other news, I re-uploaded America's Army at school and it worked. I made copies and no one at school wanted them. I was trying to make friends. I'm sad now! What pisses me off is why thin wire (RG-28 shielded coaxial cable) is so damn difficult to put together. Everyone else got it done, but I. First, I had to remember what ¼ inches was! Then I had to use the wire splitter, and do it over and over until I got it, finally! I had to keep cutting the wire when I made a mistake. That was two many to count.

Yesterday was a better day cause I downloaded 50 new maps (220 MB) for Unreal Tournament 2004. I didn't know they had them out yet. I got the official Onslaught map pack from Epic Games. I also got this game unity for UT 2004 that reads zip files, and extracts everything to their proper locations. I think I'm going to extract most of them and play tonight. My skill level at Unreal Tournament is to my guess average. I'm doing on average of 10 frags to every frag to myself on skilled level. Today was kind of fun. I downloaded a couple more UT2004 maps and downloaded some new Neverwinter Nights and Morrowind mods. I believe the last time I did this was five months ago. I have no clue if they work or not. And I don't play them much at all.

I've also been doing research on what computer hardware would do the most for my 100 dollars. I was thinking of getting a MP3 player. Tigerdirect.com sells a 10 GB hard drive based one for 100 dollars. A CD based MP3 player will only cost me 30 dollars. Hmm I wonder if I already have an Apple IPOD if I really need another one. Then I was wondering about upgrading memory. I have 768 MB of RAM in the computer I want to upgrade. For gaming purposes - I need faster RAM than what I use now. I should be able to have a better frame rate than I do now. Yep! Yep! Yep! So I don't think I'm getting an Mp3 player that doubles as a hard drive or memory. I think a Fantom Premier 80GB USB 2.0 External Hard Drive is the better choice. It doesn't run on batteries and I can listen to my MP3 collection with any PC with speakers. Cool? I think so! And it would do the same thing as a MP3 player that only has 1/8 the hard drive space! When I get enough hard drives, I can just buy external cases for them and take them on the go. Such as I have a 60GB hard drive collecting dust at home, and for 20 bucks, I can put it to use again.

Something's a little scary, I'm starting to like Rommstine, the "Metallica of Germany" band. I keep the songs on my MP3 player along with 15 other heavy metal bands. I don't listen to Rommstine, Metallica, Black Sabbath or other forms of music as much as I do trance.

I'm doing a hybrid of version 4.0 on my site. Though I wonder if I should use NukePHP? It was like Movable Type, I can't figure out how to add information to them. I know for group purposes it's much better than HTML, but I don't need login names for my webpage or comment stuff. I operate a small reviewing site, I don't need state-of-the-art template code. Modblog is a perfect example of someone who's doing this. iMike and DentesenGT made this site (modblog.com and deskmod.com), I don't know if they just stole code off other websites or if they found some advanced NUKEPHP script off a underground server! Maybe Modblog is an enhanced Moveable type site? Though I don't know if that is stealing because moveable type is an open source blog-friendly template. Maybe in the future, I will learn how to do moveable type. It would be nice if I could extract all the files in the moveable type zip file and it would automatically set itself up for me on the geocities server if it even supports php. How does iMike find errors in the source code for Modblog? Does he get emails constantly? On his blog, he tells us that his inbox gets full every 10 minutes with hate mail / suggestions.

I have a question for iMike...I wanna know how the zip blog backup system works? Does this site have some kind of gzip intergraded into it?

School ends....now I can live free for 3 whole mon (2004-05-10 13:04)

Playing: ATB- Sunscreen

I am not about to say how things are good, when it's been a substantial weekend to say the least. On Friday, the sewage failed and we got decapitated water in four rooms. It spread in the walls into my computer room, I was relieved that my computer was okay. My parents had a wet-vac, and used that to delay the water. On Friday the water kept coming in my room whenever someone flushed the toilet or used a sink. That only happened once. The plumber came the next day and got the drain unplugged in our basement. So we tore up the carpet in the family room got rid of the decapitated parts. Now we won't get sick! Our basement is now half-carpeted, half concrete. My room is a mess right now, after mom and I cleaned it up good (got rid of a lot of paper and garbage.)

Bob couldn't make it over again this weekend. Understandably he has finals. Makes me kind-a wonder what he's up to this summer with no school. Bob and I go back a long time, maybe 7 years. With the health hazard over with...he might be able to come over this time. I want to show him Kingdom Hearts. Ya, it's Disney and more suited for young people. I feel like it brings out my inner child if there is such of thing. I like many gamers who know around RPGs fairly well, don't care how cute it looks as long as it plays well and is rewarding. I know I got confused a couple spots here and there. It took me an hour just to get out of the Tarzan level because I forgot to look for Jane in the tent before the boss fight. I'm about 11 hours into the game. Right now, I can't figure out why the red trinity right before the boss fight has boxes in front of it at Tranverse Town . I can't remove them so no boss fight. I have a hunch that I need to give Cid a gummy part for the Gummy Ship to have warp speed. My favorite character in this game is probably the Evil Witch in Snow White & The Seven Dwarfs, because she's the most sinister of the villains. Mom got the movie when I was 10 so I know the movie fairly well. Once I get half-way through the FAQ, I'll post a game review at http://www.geocities.com/nightwalkers101/2004e_ps2reviews_kingdomhearts.html This review should not be read for at least one week.

At school I'm doing fairly well. Not an A student, but not a failing student. I installed Windows 3.1 on a computer in hardware / software installation. It was really easy...no effort. Then Partition Magic 7 wouldn't install on it. Well I didn't say anything.. of course, Win3.1 only runs 16-bit applications. I took a copy of Windows 2000, and tried coping it with Alcohol 120 %. It didn't work. So I guess I just gonna keep the CD. It's a copy of the original copy ...I have no idea how someone copied it. The advantage of Windows 2000 is its fully unlockable after you put in the serial.

Last Friday at school, I'm going to find out if the janitor turned off the computer with my downloads. The Number Lock light was on too, I turned the monitor off before I left. I'm downloading betas of Doom 3 and Half-life 2 over Overnet. Even if I left it on for 60 hours, I don't know if the file(s) downloaded completely. I like to play games, so I'll have all of it for myself. Hey, I'm all for it....my friends don't know what they're missing! Ha!

(This Week) I find out that the janitor did uninstall overnet and leaving the Number Lock light on was a mistake. All my downloads got deleted. This time I installed overnet on a different computer, set up the Doom 3 download, turned the monitor off and the NUMLOCK key to off. Fortunately no one blocked Overnet this time. Today is the 2nd to last day of school so I'm thinking I should get everything uploaded tomorrow if possible. I didn't exactly do too well on hardware/software installation. I think I passed it, that's the good news. The bad news is that it was average at best. :)

Tomorrow being the last day of school, I think I will get to know Diablo 2 a little more. Lets face the fact - I have way to many games to play at once. It is true (and I can't deny it) that I play only my newest games. This includes games I haven't played (I have 8 of them) Right now I'm really enjoying one of my newer games, Rallisport Challenge for X-Box. I had enjoyed games like Sega Rally Championship 2 and Test Drive V-Rally for Dreamcast because they require skill. I've have must more driving skill than lets say action game skill. V-Rally was in my opinion better then Sega Rally Championship 2 because it offered more tracks, better music, more cars, better graphics. RSC delivers a lot...with more tracks...about same selection of cars..music is the same, better graphics, and pretty much same controls.

Bob, if you're reading this...remember to call me. We have to do something together. Play Diablo 1 or whatever you want. My room is a mess right now, but it's dry! I'm going to have to spring clean earlier than I thought.

Playstation 3 games will look something like this (2004-05-11 13:05)

You know how I am about games...games become out of date so quickly, I know. But Modgamer's Blog just gotten overrated ya know - 360 hits in one day? Man - I don't know what he has...but IGN.com does the exact same coverage. His E3 article got so many hits which he could have and may have gotten the screenshots off Gamespot.com. The pic of the Unreal 3 engine is amazing! This could defiantly be used as a first Playstation 3 picture. We know PS3 will have a 256-MB ATI videocard inside powered by a .11 micron IBM processor more powerful than 1 GHz. Epic may indeed be developing Unreal Tournament 4 for it. Half-life 2 will look as good as this. Again I wonder what video card is used at what resolution? And it'll keep improving too. Look at the screenshots of Xenosaga Episode 2 for Playstation 2...it is much better then Episode 1. The limitation of the Playstation 2 is this...when you have models far away, they look awful, but when models are close, they look better.

::: American McGee's Alice Movie still out there :::

Anyways on more games to movies feature, Wes Craven (Director of Wes Craven's New Nightmare, and Nightmare of Elm Street) is going to direct a movie called Dark Wonderland due out this June. Film Force @ IGN.com says the project is still alive. The movie comes from the 2000 Platform Game of the Year, American McGee's Alice. It had very good graphics at the time, still does if you max out the settings on your new computer. The game was scary in a way. Still it is unique from other platform games and received the M rating. The first mature platform game was Cocker's Bad Fur Day for the N64. In the IMG interview, the movie has full backing by veteran horror director Wes Craven, and probably won't have 1 star attached too it. Okay so I thought that Resident Evil: The Movie was going to be somewhat good. But it's not good at all...just some first time actors doing mediocre acting. I heard they took any townsfolk and make them all zombies! Film Force at IGN.com has a very detailed and updated section on Game-to-Movie conversions.

I want to see the Steven Stelberg version of Fatal Flame. Yes, I was surprised Steven was going to produce a game-to-movie conversion himself. Fatal Flame 2 was released on PS2 and remains the scariest and most detailed horror videogame for the console. It looks better than Silent Hill 2.

::: Dead or Alive Extreme Beach Volleyball in the News! :::

Dead or Alive Xtreme Beach Volleyball (2002 Tecmo)

Here is the most ridiculous news of the day. Dead or Alive Extreme Beach Volleyball has been out for over a year and the news media just found out about it this week? Gee, they are slow to cover these things. I hear lawyers are trying to sue Tecmo for showing half-naked Japanese animation in their popular Xbox game, Dead or Alive Beach Volleyball. Tecmo fights back saying that what they are doing is completely legal by the ESRB limitations. I like to say I own this game, and I admit, I never play this around my parents since it may make them....you know...uncomfortable, these girls have big boobs thus making them pretty enough to turn some men "on!" Don't forget THQ has released a bikini volleyball game of their own complete with naughty pictures for the Xbox exclusive title, Xtreme Beach Volleyball. When Xplay covered this game, they were some parts they couldn't show on television because it was censored stuff! Rumors are you can play your characters completely nude during gameplay by unlocking a mod! Why else would they make Xtreme Beach Volleyball M rated? It has something to do with "stretching." So why are they trying to go after Tecmo? I'm more mature than to go completely gaga over DoA Beach Volleyball. It just makes me a little less "lonely" when I play it. Of course, I am also one of those guys who can consider anime girls cute. "God, have I sinned by playing this game?" Comment on your thoughts on this. I know I would buy the sequel if it ever came out...that would be fun.

New Zelda game shown at E3, Los Angeles (2004-05-13 13:05)

Unofficial Final Fantasy Webpages seem to disappear as quickly as they appear! Popularity of Final Fantasy games is huge...I own all the Final Fantasys except for Tactics for PSone. I like to give attention to this site http://www.geocities.com/ff_xi/main.html it's not mine, and it's been updated a few times. I like it because it has a lot of screenshots ordered into categories. If you want to see the end of Final Fantasy X...go ahead. One thing that I gave this site a FIVE is that Final Fantasy 1 - 9 don't apply. It seems to me that a lot of these sites like to include Xenosaga in their reviews because it is thought as "Final Fantasy in Space." In my page I like to include Disgaea: Hour of Darkness, Legend of Dragoon, Arc the Lad, Xenosaga, and Grandia. I believe that a fan site shouldn't be restricted to just Square-Enix games. Yes, it is true Square-soft comes out with the majority of console RPGs, but remember there is also RPGs that are good not under the Final Fantasy category or Square-Enix category. It makes me want to greatly improve my Square-Enix page beyond just reviews and character BIOS. My page will have screenshots and other console RPGs including Kingdom Hearts if I can get a review up. I'm about 90 % finished with Kingdom Hearts. I also made a webpage section last year for Diablo 2, Dungeon Siege, Final Fantasy X and Neverwinter Nights called Ian's RPG Guild. While not very updated with PICs and gamefaqs. I use to like to keep personal updates. You can go to it here: http://www.geocities.com/nightwalkers101/rpg_d2_online_v4.html

It seems that Nintendo released a bomb on E3 in Los Angeles yesterday. One of Nintendo's top secret titles was a Legend of Zelda title, and not the cell shaded link either. The game looks every bit as good as Resident Evil and Metriod Prime 2: Echoes, and Link is all grown up this time. Gamers had a short FMV in Space World 2000 with Link...Nintendo gamers have gone crazy I tell you. As you know Wind Waker was one of the highest rated games on the Gamecube. It seems that Legend of Zelda (tentative title) either will be a sequel to Orcania of Time or a remake of Legend of Zelda for the NES. I can't tell. I am a fan of Zelda games, this will be a hot game when it comes out. Looks to be the best console game from E3 in my opinion! I think it will play like Orcania of Time. Cube.ign.com covers the whole conference. Nintendo is doing something right...this is an example of it. Screenshot below. The 3 console manufactures are suppose to show 2006 consoles either tomorrow or next day. That'll be exciting.

Legend of Zelda - Gamecube (TBA 2005)

Okay, what have I been doing today? Well - I went to school and signed up for fall classes at WITC. I am worried about Network Industial because companies do DOS and it is obsolete in my opinion. Hate to offend hard working 90s era technicians, but this is the 21st century we're talking about. DOS doesn't crash, but Unix will not crash that often either so why not upgrade? Some larger companies don't see that they need to upgrade. For example Thicknet will work fine for DOS and it's dirt cheap to install and get a hold of. I want a GUI on my job, Damn it! Not very interesting except I did get the first cd image for Doom III beta. The 2nd part didn't download - it's downloading as we speak. I don't see why Doom III is more popular on Xbox? I know people some people don't have a powerful computer that does graphics better than the X-Box. Good for them. First Person Shooters rule on the PC - and no one can change my mind about that. I went to Gamestats.com and they have all the games listed in popularity. Doom 3 for Xbox was ranked 3 in popularity. It's a fun site because it shows on a daily bases if a game gained popularity or not.

Afterwards I got to scrape mold off the floor - Dad and I tore up an old carpet, and there was mold underneath stuck to the floor with glue. It was grunt work. Dad ran out of Coke so I ran into the gas station to buy him two 24 pack cases.

Yesterday Randy and I found some time to spend 3 hours together. He's one of my friends - and I have a very short list. He was looking on E-Bay on some cars. He wants to install a Chevy Corvette engine in a quarter ton pickup and make it 400 plus horse power. He's not doing it himself - he has help from the local car mechanic. He says it'll skid when you press the gas because the torc is too much for it. It's his "fun truck." I showed him my Playstation emulator. It didn't work the first or second time - but I finally got it too work after 10 tries. He commented that his computer doesn't like being a Playstation. I told him about school and he told me about work and his future projects. I told him that MTV rots his brain and he laughs. I can say things to him and he takes it with a grain of salt....that's what I love about him!

Hey, I recently added a news widget from www.widgetmate.com to my blog. It shows the latest news, and just took a copy and paste to implement. Might interest you too.

CD64 and Doctor v64 : N64 CD backup (picture fix) (2004-05-15 13:07)

Welcome to a special segment of my blog. There was an 8x CD-ROM add-on for Nintendo 64. Awesome! UFO, a 3rd party manufacturer, added a CDROM to the bottom slot on the Nintendo 64 called the CD64. It comes with a backup function so you can backup your N64 games to CD. Probably a ROM format used in today's Windows emulators. If Nintendo did business with UFO 5 years ago, we might have seen N64 games on CD-Format. The CD64 is now used as a place to emulate Super NES ROMS and other emulators. From the looks of it – it has a standard CD-ROM built in a hardware hub. On the official website...it reads that for some games...you can't download them directly off the cartridge because of software encryption. The device needs a patch be downloaded onto it.

CD64 Backup Device

But think if N64 games based on CD – think of the improvements the N64 could-of had. Final Fantasy VII could have been on it. Square left Nintendo because they couldn't put FFVII on a cartridge at that time. It was too small of space. And if they would-have had the space for the game then they could never have had movies on it. But it wouldn't sell millions of copies if it was released in 1998. Perhaps Nintendo never thought of doing business with UFO because with the Sega 32X, a cd add-on of Genesis only had 1 or 2 good games and it failed to market well. Plus the Saturn was less than a year away.

On my second subject I also have downloaded the 1964 N64 emulator and it works better then Nemu 64. I was excited to be able to play Goldeneye on the computer. I have a CD full of Nintendo 64 Roms – 16 in all. Back then I forgot about them because I used Nemu64 0.7. This was the best there was in terms of emulation in 2000 and 2001. However 3 years have passed since then and well....graphics have very much improved. Even N64 games run in high resolution! Whoa! I first realized it today when I downloaded 1964 for Windows. The newest version .99 supports Internet play and community graphics Direct X 9.0 plugins. I can say when Nemu64 only ran Super Mario 64 and not anything else...that was the truth. 1964 runs Goldeneye and Perfect Dark very well. I got my Nuko Air Flow Pro Controller to work with the default controller plugin. Okay Goldeneye and Perfect Dark now run at 1600x1200 where on N64 they just ran on 640x480 res. There is a noticeable difference from what I can tell and they run in high res. Maybe because they run in high resolution that there is a noticeable difference? Now if only someone could develop a plugin that makes PSone games run in High Resolution on my pc? Right now, I'm in the process of downloading Turok II Seeds of Evil off Emule 0.42g. You can get all the plugins off <http://NGemu.com>.

And I guess this isn't the only CD backup device for N64. There is also Doctor V64, which is more stylish version. It's manufactured by Bong. The device apparently has 128 MB of internal memory. Remember that most carts weren't above 128 MB anyways. Super Mario 64 was only on an 8 MB cartridge. Goldeneye was on a 32 MB cartridge. The games were very compressed. Anyways here are some screenshots of Doctor 64

Doctor V64 (no longer manufactured)

Yes, in case you've been wondering, I have heard of the Nintendo 64 Disc Drive. It had Legend of Zelda Master Quest and Mario Paint and Simcity 64 on it. I hear it was on CDs, but the lack of games outweighed the cost of the disk drive. Failed to sell well in Japan. This is officially Nintendo's first adaptation to the CD disc. A little too late. And this article is about the only CD-ROM for N64 on all other continents (and islands) other than Japan.

Here is a list of ROMS I had from my 2000 disc.

- Super Mario 64 – works excellent, no pixilated edges.
- Legend of Zelda Ocarina of Time – No missing Frames and it runs in higher resolution than the Gamecube Bonus Disk that came with Wind Waker. That's fricken awesome!
- Mario Kart 64 – No missing frames and in high resolution. No pixilated edges.
- Turok – some missing frames but it's playable
- Legend of Zelda 64 – Majoria's Mask – works as well as Ocarina of Time
- Madden 64 – sound and graphics work.
- Goldeneye 64 – works Excellent
- Perfect Dark – works Excellent
- RUSH! – works good some missing frames
- Extreme G – works, a little buggy with the graphics engine and the game pops up every 10 seconds, put that didn't stop me from playing one of my favorite N64 games!
- Extreme G 2 – does work too well. Foggy. Sound is good though.
- Beetle Racing – Works Excellent
- Glover - works
- Bomberman 64 – works
- Doom 64 – engine works, sound works, it's old and the best looking doom
- Kirby 64 – works beautifully
- Forsakken 64 – not tested yet
- Banjo and Kazooie – sound and graphics work. Control of course works cause it's also emulated. A few minor glitches here and there.
- Top Gear Rally 2 – not playable because of the massive empty frames but works.
- Star Fox 64 – Very playable, Works excellent – sounds a problem though
- 1080 Snowboarding – Rocks! Runs in High Res. Sound works beautifully
- Crusin USA – Works Excellent Sound Great, Graphics on par

Actually I've been playing 30 minutes of Super Mario 64 with my gamepad. It's an oldie but it plays like a dream, and it's in high resolution. Remember this improvement came as a surprise. Nemu64 didn't let any N64 game run in High Resolution at 60 Frames Per Second (FPS). I don't know maybe it's 30 FPS.

I finished the final battle with Adult Riku in Kingdom Hearts at 4:30 AM today. I'm surprised, the phrase Kingdom Hearts comes from multiple worlds each representing a heart. I thought that Hearts came from Alice in Wonderland. The ending was what I've expected it too be (big hint in first part of the game). I knew Riku was going to be evil. The heartless come from that movie, Fantasia, I see. I beat the game in just under 29 hours. It was more fun then I expected it to be. The game definably was cheesy at times. The Star Fox style rail shooter in-between worlds seemed out-a place to me. It's one of the mini-games in Kingdom Hearts. KH seemed to be an action platformer instead of a RPG - kind of like Ratchet and Clank. It had some RPG elements like the parties, exchange items, customize items, gaining experience. But it seemed to be as much as a hack 'n slash game as a role playing game. The difficulty of this game is about medium to my skill level. The last part was a challenge that I've mastered after 5 tries.

I'm starting to play Summoner 2. Summoner 2 is a role playing game...not as good as Final Fantasy...but equally as fun as Kingdom Hearts. I've had time to waste. When I'm not playing Summoner 2, I'm playing Unreal Tournament 2004. Except today I was playing around with Super Mario 64. Today I didn't have too much to do. I'm accomplished Kingdom Hearts. I only beaten Diablo 2, Neverwinter Nights, Final Fantasy X, Legend of Dragoon, Chrono Cross and Final Fantasy 8 in the RPG genre. I know many of you whom play games regularly beating more RPGs, but I agree that you know the battle system more. I have a hard time adapting to new battle systems. I, however, picked up on Kingdom Hearts within the first 10 minutes. See I'm not dumb when it comes to RPGS!!! Message me and we can talk RPGs sometime.

Heya! I understand this is sort of off-topic but I needed to ask. Does managing a well-established website like yours take a large amount of work? I'm completely new to writing a blog but I do write in my journal everyday. I'd like to start a blog so I can share my personal experience and feelings online.

Please let me know if you have any suggestions or tips for brand new aspiring bloggers.

Another rainy spring day during summer vacation (2004-05-17 13:08)

Okay so you didn't like my last blog...yeh I know...N64 is dead so why give it a second thought, right? Gamecube has been out for 2 years and 8 months if you known or already thought of buying one...you've would of already. Isn't that the truth. We had a thunderstorm about 6 hours ago...first thing I was worried about was my computers...though they have surge protection...I still worry about them. Hmm I was playing Final Fantasy IX - it completely froze up...I look at the disc it was free of scratches. Then I put it down and play Summoner 2, a game I bought long time ago, but haven't played yet. That froze, though it was full of scratches. So I stick in ICO and that froze. I think it's my PS2 DVD-ROM. I don't know if the drive is worn out or not. I never abused it so I don't see why it would suddenly freeze like that. I was hoping that it would last me until I get a Playstation 3 in June 2006.

As for further bad news, Bob didn't show. Bob and I were suppose to do something yesterday - but he never picked up his cell. Last time we spoke, he told me that he would find time for us to do something. I was thinking that we could-have played some Call of Duty. (If you haven't heard of it - it's a WWII PC game by Infantry Ward) I want to kick some crout ass! Honestly I haven't played online with it for weeks. I've been on multiplayer and it's smooth through a modem. Call of Duty doesn't lag nearly as much as Unreal Tournament 2004. I got to the 7th level in Call of Duty in Single Player without cheating. Bob and I usually like to play old-school games...like Diablo 1. I don't think Dreamcast is quite old-school yet. Maybe it's a modern old-school console? Old-school is anything a generation old in my opinion and Dreamcast meets that status. The 128-bit generation (1998 – Present) is the longest generation of any previous generation. It is longer then the 32/64-bit generation (1995 – 2001). Now I couldn't have gone far back before the NES. Then you've would-of had Pac-man like graphics and that wouldn't interest me at all. In case you were wondering what my favorite game for Dreamcast was (it wasn't Soul Caliber), I'll tell you because I like you guys...it was Crazy Taxi.

Today I had beaten Perfect Dark – because I downloaded it from the Internet and used Project 64K to emulate it. I didn't want to hook up my N64 and play it. You know once you take it out – you either have to leave it out or put it a way again. Makes you wonder when the Xbox title Perfect Dark 2 is coming out? I rather enjoyed playing Perfect Dark again with graphical enhancements. It's interesting that a N64 game would have difficulty running my other 2.0 GHz Athlon XP computer. I also run a Geforce 4 FX 5600 256MB version GPU in that machine. About a 70 dollar video card now-a-days.

As for further bad news...no one hired me. Target didn't want me – and I'm a good guy...I don't see why they didn't want me. I was going to work at the hospital since that got good pay 10 dollars an hour for cleaning beds and doing janitor work. But to me I rather work at a hardware store like Home Depot and Fleet Farm. Did I mention that there is now a Home Depot in Hudson, WI now? It's incorporated itself there last November. Home Depot is replacing K-Mart in that town. I mean who goes to K-Mart? Wal-Marts better. I haven't been inside Home Depot yet. It'll give me something to do later today.

I have some good news – I updated my Geocities webpage! For those of you who stared at my logo and thought it was too cluttered....I whole-heartedly agree. So instead of having 6 characters...I just had one videogame character and myself. The unreal tournament guy had his legs cut off...that looked awful didn't it? I had to stare at it too for a while when I knew it had to go. So I put a classic videogame character that 99 % of anyone knows....Cloud Strife on a motorcycle. That'll up my ratings I hope. I hope my webpage didn't die and go to heaven. Stop by some time.

Bought 2nd N64/Saturn, thinking of Zodiac in futu (2004-05-17 13:22)

Webpage Alert – I've created a new section on the 512MB generation at <http://renegadevikings.cjb.net> called "Ian's 512-bit Generation News Page." This new webpage will be completed 100 % functional in 1 or 2 days. I'm in the process of collecting all the information I can include interviews, and adding them on my page. Come take a look, I have your questions answered in this informative webpage. Please post a message on my message board, no membership required – it's Bravenet!

- Show Highlights on Nintendo Revolution
- Microsoft's Xenon
- Playstation 3
- Nintendo Dual Screen
- Sony Playstation Pocket

Today I opened up a section of my webpage that looks exactly like the template I'm using now. This new webpage is called Ian's 512-bit Generation News Page. I could call it Red Dragon Productions, but this time I decided not too for the reason of copying another webpage that has the same name. There is this website called RedDragonProductions.net that does videogame music, and I didn't want to be inferior to that. This section is going to be a new "Red Dragon Productions", following up on Nintendo's Revolution, Sony's Playstation 3, Microsoft's new project, and the new handhelds. The world now knows the next console by Microsoft will not be named Xbox 2. It's hard to an editorial page without pictures since there aren't any at the moment.

Today I went to the Toy's 4 Trade in River Falls. With 55 dollars in my billfold to buy another game, I decided to get a console instead. The last generation consoles are so cheap now-a-days it's unbelievable so I got both a Saturn and N64 for 55 dollars. Used N64s and Playstations only cost 20 dollars! Consoles don't come any cheaper than that! This is a different store from what I usually go to. I go to the one in Hudson and this one is located in River Falls. Apparently N64s are 20 dollars less than Game Stop. It's a great bargain especially when you want an extra console. I wanted to get one because these consoles may go up in price as soon as they are less in quantity like NESs. Used Dreamcasts are also a great bargain costing only 10 dollars more than used N64s. I bought a Saturn because I felt I needed a second one....for backup purposes. Next time I go over there I'm getting a 3rd Dreamcast so I never have to open the new one I bought at Wal-mart days before the store took it off shelves. I know why too, the Dreamcast's quickly sold out, and Sega wouldn't replace them so Playstation 2 was all there was. In 2000, Playstation 2 only had 2 good games for it, Midnight Club and Tekken Tag Tournament. At least I thought so. The first Dreamcast I had was fresh out of the box the first day it was released in North America, 09/09/99. Dreamcast became the year's best electronic device by Time Magazine, and I believe Wall Street also wrote an article on it. Yes, you've heard right...awarded #1 for the best selling videogame console of all time in the USA. As you may know, Playstation 2 broke Dreamcast's record in a matter of a week. Time says DC was a year ahead of it's time (probably because it had internet for free!) I remember ZDTV shortly after it went on air, the channel was talking about Dreamcast all the time. It was the highlight of Fresh Gear, and ZDTV news for the first week. Gamespot did an exclusive episode on just Dreamcast games. I've been using the Dreamcast for nearly 5 years, and a new one never used, I like to keep it that way. I have over 40 Dreamcast games to play, and I might as well always have a working Dreamcast. Okay, the truth of it is Sega had their chance with the Saturn and blew it. So while the Genesis was a better videogame system than Super Nintendo, the Dreamcast is in my opinion the best console Sega ever made. Okay, my reasoning for this is the 3rd party developers ported some recognizable Playstation games from the 1999 – 2000 period including Tony Hawk, Resident Evil, and Street Fighter to name a few. Plus the console continued Sega only series like Phantasy Star, Ecco the Dolphin, Sonic the Hedgehog, Virtua Fighter, Daytona USA, and Sega Rally Championship.

Okay, enough about how I bought new consoles. The new subject of today is about the Zodiac and GP32 handhelds. The older of the two, GP32, is a little bigger than Gameboy Advance. The new handheld has an open source operating system (not palm based) based on Linux that'll play ROMs. ROMs are games someone ripped from older consoles which can be downloaded off the Internet to be playable on PC. Microsoft also released WinCE 4.0 for GP32 so I can also play 32-bit Windows applications or games like Doom II or Quake, etc as long as it fit on a memory stick. I'll get to hard drive usage in a minute... The whole deal is open source so I get to download free content off the Internet legally. The handheld uses 128 MB smart media cards, but will take any FAT16 formatted smart card. Maybe it'll be able to recognize thumb sticks, which would be really cool because I download stuff to them as my primary removable memory of choice. GP32 also has a keyboard port (PS2 port) for word processing and Internet browsing.

An idea I had with GP32 is that you can hook up an external hard drive or Mp3 player to it, and use the data storage instead which will cost a lot less than a 512-MB or 1024-MB flash cards. I much rather have this next handheld I'll talk about, although GP32 would be my second choice if I can find one.

The second handheld is called Zodiac made by a new company called Tapwave [tapwave.com]. This advanced handheld acts as an underground handheld to compete against GBA or a PDA with keyboard support. For Zodiac, you'll pay about 70 dollars more than buying a GP32. It comes in 2 versions. First is a 32-bit version with an 8-MB ATI graphics unit, and 200 MHz CPU (really, really small). The 128-bit one comes with 128-MB of RAM instead of 32-MB. The Zodiac is already more powerful than Nintendo's Dual Screen! The Zodiac 32-bit version has a nice high resolution touch-screen I can easily take notes on, and save it to removable memory. The Zodiac runs the latest Palm OS (v5.2T). Palm can support 3rd party software meaning buyers can install new software on it for free from anywhere off the Internet! Palm OS also runs a lot of console emulators, Palm software, and DOS games. If you just have to have Microsoft Windows, Microsoft allows you to download WinCE 3.0 for free on Microsoft.com. I always wanted to play my Gameboy Advance ROMs on a handheld like Zodiac. Gamers can also save various pictures in JPEG at a really small resolution, and show off the personal photo collection on its 24-bit LCD screen. The Zodiac also has it's own DivX player software so someone like me could encode or download Mpeg 4 movies if it was a super low resolution. If I wanted too - I could use it as a MP3 player while I take notes.

Zodiac 2 - released date: June 2004

Zodiac is a gaming platform meaning it has a D-pad, and buttons organized for game play. The handheld comes with a keyboard input, I wonder how that'll use up battery life though if not connected to a AC circuit. There are PDAs that are twice as expensive, and do not have that amount RAM. To be clearer on this, PDAs have 16 MB of RAM, not 32 MB, because their primary an application based computer. Zodiac runs on a cell phone based 200 MHz CPU, one of the most powerful handheld processors on the market this year. It'll sure be a birthday present in November. I want to play Mario Kart Super Circuit on one of them - if I can somehow get 300 dollars together to buy one. This baby also has an expansion slot to run PDA devices like digital cameras.

Even with all this hype over a tiny handheld...it seems too good to be true! Download GBA roms or any other rom onto the Zodiac via USB cable, and enjoy playing them on its superior processor, and the buttons in the palm of your hand too. GBA SPs costing only half of what a Zodiac 32-bit version would cost someone, it's easy to see what a gamer wants spend his/her money on - a GBA SP. But with a touch screen, and free downloadable content, the Zodiac is a nice portable gaming system if you can afford one. That's all I need it for....playing games and taking notes. Although I would like a Zodiac, getting a GP32 with it's 32-Bit processor and removable memory is a better deal than Zodiacs. I wish it would use memory sticks instead of the standard smart cards it uses. I need to get realistic here since I need a PDA with a digital pen for school. A Palm Ille at Tigerdirect costs 40 dollars, and it comes standard with a touch screen.

As far as consoles go, I can buy a used "Game Boy Advance" (not GBA SP) for 50 dollars at Toy's 4 Trade or a Playstation / N64 for 20 dollars used. Hmm, if I wanted to play games that badly, I could save 85 % on the Playstation now, and 80 % on Dreamcast consoles if I were to buy them instead of a Zodiac handheld. This and each time I'm home on my computer, I can play all the old console games for free! Should I wait until the 256-bit Zodiac comes out so I can money on the 32-bit Zodiac? Saving 50 dollars on Zodiac at the expense of power is not worth it. The law of diminishing returns also applies to the Zodiac, you know? The Game specialist stores won't see them because they're supposed to be really popular right now. Might as well get the high-end 128-bit version new then. I want one although I'd be better off to get one from my parents for my birthday than I paying for one. I already know the Zodiac will get a lot of usage in my home by me of course. I don't need any commercial games for it, although I find it interesting that the games made for Zodiac could also play on other palms as soon as they are as powerful... Zodiac is probably the most powerful PDA / gaming console related handheld out there. I already have a large collection of ROMs I collected over the 2003 – 2004 period.

Well that's it for today. Have to find something to do today. I slept well last night. I'll dream about Zodiac. I remember in the past - in 2000 - I had this very unusual dream. I was a little kid and it was before 2000 and I wanted to have a Saturn, and it was packaged on the top shelf in a Toys R US store farther than I could reach...so the whole dream was me getting that Saturn, because it was the last one available. This was before I went to Game Stop. I wanted to play NIGHTS, it was weird....I don't know why I still remember it? Perhaps it was because David always had his Genesis and we played it all the time. Saturn just came out and was suppose to be really powerful being capable of 3D when 3D was a big deal for a 12 year old. I know I've haven't quite grown out of this gaming stage... on the other hand, I hope I'm a gamer forever because I found out adults think games are cool when I started to play Diablo 2 in 2000! Over half of online players playing Diablo 2 players are over 18. The newest game trend back then was before the Internet came out, and the game reviews passed by one's own opinion or Game Informer Magazine. Soon after Sega released Saturn Magazine and Sony released Playstation Magazine so that helped people find the right game that suited their tastes. I remember hearing about Final Fantasy, Legend of Zelda, Super Mario 64, and Crash Bandicoot a lot. My first console was an N64. In 9th grade, I got a Sega Dreamcast. I always wanted a Sega console. I wore the Sega Dreamcast shirt every week. I remember when the teachers use to say stop wearing that shirt, its advertising, and the school doesn't like it. I knew what it meant though...don't support Sega, route for Playstation. Well neither Sega nor Sony, she says. I couldn't possibly offend someone. That's when I was a 51 % Nintendo fan and 49 % Sega fan. The opposing side finally caught of with me, and I became 50 % PC fan, a 25 % Playstation fan, and 12.5 % Nintendo fan, 6.25 % Xbox, and 6.25 % Sega Dreamcast fan. Sega's gone multi-platform since 2001 so they've became one of my favorite developers. My favorite developer is Squaresoft, my second favorite, Nintendo, and 3rd favorite, Sega. Then you know I buy all the Unreal Tournaments, all the Metal Gear Solids, all the Grand Thief Autos, all the Bioware games, all the Diablos, all the Final Fantasys, all the Halo(s), all the Mario platformers, all the Jak and Dexters, Most of the Sonic the Hedgehog games. I've got to get going, webpages to develop, ya know?

Free Software pick of the Day:

Irfanview 3.85 (<http://www.irfanview.com>) - an awesome digital image viewer that can also compress JPEG, GIF and PNG at an awesome ratio. Also has support for TIFF and JPEG 2000 plugins. I've been using this application for 5 years and still use it.

I crave computer games no doubt about it :) (2004-05-24 13:09)

What's up again? Today was another interesting day, my room is missing the lower half of what use to be a wall. I can only use computer games for the next week since everything is covered in painter's plastic. That stinks especially when Bob is coming over to play games tomorrow. Yesterday I went to his house, it must have been weeks. He hasn't changed though his friend, Angie, lives with him now. Hmm, ya I know...usually people don't live with each other unless their married. But hey - free country, right? That's what I thought. Bob has his computer full so he has no room for games so he plays his Playstation 2 instead. Plus he can't go on the Internet because he thinks there is something wrong with it. When I came over he showed me Baldur's Gate Deadly Alliance (I have this game for Xbox.) He says he beat it already. Bob likes to play soccer - the wonderful game of soccer. Bob was getting the red cards, and he accused me of cheating because I get the yellow cards. He was just bossing me around which is fine when it's multiplayer. He likes to customizable settings in Winning Eleven though he dislikes Winning Eleven 7 for whatever reason....I think that's because he doesn't know how to turn penalties off. Then we played Versus in DOA Extreme Beach Volleyball. Who ever did the soundtrack should be shot. LOL! Yes, it was that bad. Bad 90s pop riffs. Though it did fit the scenery. The game is as good as it is in the screenshots. Most of the time I felt that all I had to do was hit A button on the Xbox controller to do everything. I am a little afraid the whole game will be like this. Being overly simple isn't good. Although that also could be good game design. Probably not use to the game's excellence? Or is it? After 40 minutes of that, Bob and I went on to Rally. Bob is neutral when it comes to racing games. He doesn't care for them I don't think. So I kept beating him in Rallisport Challenge. He's not very good partly because he's never played it before. Each race was a within a couple seconds of each other. He likes to make his car accelerate faster sacrificing speed which I don't think helped him in the long run. Bob wanted to play Halo because it was a FPS. As I said before he's not as much a racing fan as I am. We went into sniper arena with the tanks. But he got me 3-1 each time. I finally got into a system where I sniped once than used my revolver to do the rest. That worked a lot better than trying to get him the first time around.

Today I just had to have my computer. I couldn't live a week without it. So I brought the heavy 19' inch monitor and somewhat heavy tower upstairs so I could "game" while the cleaning people did their thing downstairs. I talked to them a bit. I stood there for a minute and they really didn't have much to say so I asked them if they wanted to talk about games in general. They agreed. We some how got off subject and talked about burning audio cds. I told them I've been doing that for 5 ½ years. I can do that in my sleep and then some. Because I was sick of playing computer games, I went to town to get McCollen's Rally 04 and Prince of Persia: Sands of Time for Xbox. I originally was going to get Splinter Cell 2 for PC, but I reminded myself I am already playing 3 games (Far Cry, KOTOR, Diablo 2). I got both games for 48 dollars, a real bargain at the videogame store.

In case you were wondering PC is still on top of my list. This free emulator software is getting pretty big. What console can you actually surf the Internet with besides Dreamcast? In recent years Sega tried releasing new browser releases as a freebie in their online games such as Phantasy Star Online and Daytona USA to try to have a advantage with internet. In fact, MSN-TV could have been blown a way by Dreamcast's browser if it wasn't buggy. It did have many issues such as it handled javascript badly, it couldn't read Media-streams at all. DC's browser also allowed local ISPs to connect to it for free. All and all it was a welcome alterative. I went online with Dreamcast's web browser too. Why can't X-BOX do this without hacking into it? The only way you can surf the Internet on your videogame console is to get it modded or hacked. My thought about modding is it's too expensive right now for me! Don't get me wrong I would love to get my X-Box modded so I can play emulation ROMS and store MP3s on the hard drive and play games while listening to them! Microsoft had nothing to loose by allowing playable MP3s be listened to on Xbox - but Microsoft likes to do things the hard way though they are a multi-billion dollar company with no competition. Unless you've found a website that'll give you game copies for 10 dollars, it's really not worth it. Ripping the CD image onto your hard drive for coping is I guess okay for a PS1 game, but PS2 games are way too large. It's a lot of hacking just to say I played a game copy on my PS2 yesterday. In a couple years PS2 and XBOX emulation will be at a point where they can be played on the PC fully emulated. In fact the current PS1 emulator EPSXE can read game backups no problem. Alcohol 120 % can make the backup. Just as long as you have a recent version of Alcohol 120 %.

To get back to the Microsoft issue. The Microsoft anti-trust in 2002 was just to make Microsoft smaller...and they did by calling their game's division Microsoft Games Studios. They also allowed 3rd party software to be added to their OS. Which kind-of makes me want-of laugh because all I download is 3rd party software. The vendors such as Dell, Compaq, HP and Sony all include third party software with their operating system that includes a recent version of Netscape. Everyone likes Internet Explorer, but I found something better - Mozilla. And why does IE crash more when there is spyware on your computer? Because it does. Spyware tends to attack IE and Netscape. Mozilla and Mozilla FireFox don't crash as often and it's surfing speed is faster than IEs. And they have Anti-spyware software in the browser itself. So if it's free, why don't people realize that IE and Netscape aren't the only options? Netscape tends to take more resources than Mozilla Firefox so I stay with that. Firefox is a great browser!

I have a feeling that I may be going to bed early. Like at 10:00PM today, I am really tired, more than usual. Well than, goodnight everyone! If bob comes over tomorrow we might have to go to a movie because it doesn't look with all the construction and plastic over my stuff that I'll be doing LAN any time soon.

First Teenager in Space? China to land on Moon? (2004-05-26 13:11)

Hello, I'm glad the majority of you liked my last entry. I am not very interested in space exploration although today I heard about this Justin Houchin who is going to be the first teenager in space. He's also going to be an Eagle Scout...how surprising. Normally I don't give a sh*t, but the mission is going to be historic. Official Website: <http://firstteenagerinspace.org> for more information. Is a teenager ready for space exploration? Can he take the extreme Gs? I first heard of him from a Planetary Radio broadcast. Go to their site <http://planetary.org/radio/> to download the WMA/MP3. One hundred years from now astronauts will be living on the moon.

In other space news, China may be the second country to land on the moon. China has their own space organization and their own space shuttle complete with launch platform and Chinese astronauts. We know China isn't stupid, but China also has the most people on the Earth like 1.8 Billion so when China talks about space, the rest of the world has to listen. It's nice to see a country besides us to do moon landings, I wish it wasn't China though. 45 years have passed since Neal Armstrong landed on the Moon and sooner or later someone else would land on it. The good thing is China is doing their own funding. George W. Bush isn't lending money to help China land on the moon. China is communist country like the USSR was so it stands to reason that we only go so far as to trade with them. We may of sold a few Hummers or F-16s to them for $ $ $ over the course of 20 years. China doesn't want to conquer land that's why they are apart of the United Nations. That's an obvious observation though. Before you know it China will have their own satellites in space decoding American messages that could be military information. In another 10 years China is going to have their own squadron of Stealth aircraft and nuclear long range missiles and we can't stop them. They probably got a good chuck of this from the Koreans. Those who spied and took from our country to benefit their own. That's why no one in our country likes them. I don't think that'll happen while the Iraqi War is going on. Don't get me wrong...I'm not racist to any color of skin. I don't like what China stands for.

As for other news I found an open source movie player that'll play DIVx, some DVD movies, and other audio and video formats for MS Windows, MAC and Unix. It's not pretty, but this program is still in the beta version so it'll be interesting if it'll turn out like it's commercial cousins. VLC is available off <http://Downloads.com>. Check it out too!

What format will replace MP3? (2004-05-27 13:12)

I was really disappointed when Bob didn't show.... I had to watch Lord of the Rings The Return of the King by myself. A movie of epic proportions...maybe. The movie was 3 ½ hours long and that is a very long time watching a movie on my computer in a very unconformable chair. I was amazed that Frodo escaped the spider in the cave scene. I mean the spider was ready to stab in from above and Frodo gets away before sticking it in the stomach? That has to be Hollywood! How did Gollum survive the fall? He just sort of re-appeared at the end. Sam should have finished him when Gollum didn't lend Frodo a hand...but the book the movie was based on had to have Frodo go soft on the creature. After seeing a lot of old westerns like Up to Alaska, Shanadoha, and The Good, The Bad and the Ugly...Lord of the Rings doesn't seem as good in my opinion. Nobody does a better job then Clint Eastwood or John Wayne in terms of acting.

I don't know about you guys, but I always want to search the Internet for something that does audio / video a little better than what I have now. I don't know if it's crazy, but would you stop using Microsoft Word's doc format or compressing files in Zip because it's too popular? With the Internet I know there is always something better that's going to come out. What's the next format that'll replace MP3? Will it be APE, WMA or OGG? I'm almost positive that people will change from 128 KBPS to 768 KBPS format. MP3 can only go up to 320 KBPS. Actually, I never tried to start a music collection in APE. APE sounds a lot better than MP3s at the cost of space. One APE file could be 4 MP3s but sounds as good as it's WAV counterpart.

Here is an example; the most popular compression is MP3 compression at 128 KBPS. My favorite encoder is LAME although some people like Xing or Blade.

Time Compression KBPS Size 700MB CD

3 minute 40 second song MP3, LAME 3.96 128 3.31 MB 211 approx

3 minute 40 second song MP3, LAME 3.96 320 7.42 MB 94 approx

3 minute 40 second song APE, insane compression 768 11.20 MB 62 approx

So would you rather have 211 tape quality songs or 62 excellent quality songs? I go with 62 excellent quality songs. Since 100 % of my collection is MP3 there would be no sense in upgrading those songs to APE. Be warned for those who are skeptical about using hard drive space, APE is not for you. The best places to find ape encoders is using CDEX <http://cdex.n3.net> or downloading Monkey's Audio 3.99 <http://www.monkeysaudio.com/>

As for new software, there is always something new I haven't tried. Today is no exception. I used iTunes for the first time. Normally iTunes is for OS10, but Apple ported it to Windows for free. It does have a few features like a MP3 to Audio CD burn option and an online radio service, but not much different from Nero 6.1. The Interface is pretty slick, I like it a lot. Anyways I don't regret downloading it because I got it at the school's server. Only took 3 minutes to download and as a bonus, it comes with the full version of Quicktime. I still like to use my QCD or Winamp players better.

Can any one tell me what format will replace MP3 and why? I'm interested in what will be the next popular format? The MP3 has been around for 6 years now and they've created portable MP3 players.

LAN party @t Mikes (2004-05-31 13:13)

I know this entry is about the LAN party, but I have some not so exciting news to tell everyone first. Okay, remember that entry about G4TV (Television with Gamers) I made about 2 months ago? Well they've apparently sold out TechTV and now TechTV joined forces with them. Although TechTV use to be my favorite channels until May 28th showed up, I found out that The Screen Savers and Call for Help is still on in the morning. So technically speaking G4-TV is added to the long list of DirecTV channels. Occasionally I flip back and forth between Anime Unleashed and Adult Swim (Cartoon Network) at midnight. G4-TV spokes-people ware creepy tattoos and punk cargo pants now making G4-TechTV a mixed bag in my opinion.

[May 29th] Later on today my cousin gave me a call from California. David's going to Japan in 2 weeks. He's in the Navy because he learns to be a helicopter mechanic. He's done with school and he's gonna be living large experiencing whatever he learned over the past year at military school. This is his military job not his civilian life job. I think he wants to become a carpenter after the military. We use to spend a lot of time together as kids so naturally we get a long together quite well. Today was a little different. We talked about Power Rangers and the call ended up with him saying I have a serious problem for knowing the actors names that were cast in Power Rangers. This all started when the White Ranger (Tommy Oliver, not his real name) in the old Power Ranger series shows up in the new Power Ranger Show, Dino Thunder. Not that it matters to me now-a-days. But I look up the actor's bios and this particular says on his fan site he likes Korn and Linken Park. Same guy I saw on television when I was a kid, though now I have lost total respect for him now that he's a hard rock enthusiast. He just seemed to be a nice guy in the old shows.

[May 30th] I went over to bob's house to get rid of a TV and weight set. The TV was about 25 inches, but low resolution. My parents actually wanted to get rid of it. I took Bob to my house and we loaded the Compaq and Custom PC in the Jeep. I took all my hard drive backup cds along...just in case. Bob and I had a long conversation of when Bob and his girlfriend Angie are going to move out of his house to an apartment in River Falls, WI. Closer where he goes to school, after Bob, his dad, Randy and his dad go fishing up in Canada.

[At Mikes House] The game of choice was Unreal Tournament 2004. The people there were Bob, Mike, his wife, Jim, Joe and that other guy. Mike had a hacked iso image of all the UT2004 cds to install on everyone's computers. It was the only way we could play UT2004. I got a couple game images and mp3 files on my hard drive from all of this. Jim was rocking (I don't know how else to put it) Jim had like 36 frags to the second place person 20 something. I only lead the game once, that's because I did something crazy in the game. Jim knows a lot about computers, there is little he doesn't know. The UT2004 patch messed up our ability to use the no-cd patch. So Jim's brilliant know-how got us all playing together again. I also downloaded MP3s from Jims server, which was cool since he had 35 GB of them. Some Pink Floyd, Third Eye's Blind, and a whole bunch of music off Jim's hard drive. I went home at around 2 AM because, well Mike was getting tired....that is until some of the guys started to look at porno. No comment here. So, Yep, time to leave!

[At home the next day] I rushed to rip the Final Fantasy VII image to CD-ROM so I could play it. IF you haven't known, I also own the PSX version, and I was thinking of playing the PSX version this week. Than I realised that Mike had FFXVII in his collection so I was very, very, extremely thrilled. I know it's one of the best PSX games in exsistance and refined the RPG genre or so I heard (one of the first RPGS with C.G. Cutscenes, but cheesy ones at that) I had a glimse at the game when Bob played it at his house. When FFXVII installed, the game crashed for being ment to run on Windows 95. But luckily I found a WinXP patch for the game. I plan to install Star Trek Elite Force II and play that. While it is a FPS, it does have Star Trek from it. The Federation has the most advanced technology in any Star Trek game / movie. I don't know what the "star date" is, but it takes place in the future so I'll live the Star Trek genre in first person form. You are a commando type recon party whom goes against the almighty Borg (seen in ST: The Next Generation, ST: Voyager, and ST: First Contact), I thought how cool! ST: Elite Force II has good reviews at IGN.com, Gamefaqs.com, Gamestats.com. Star Trek I know is a dieing franchise, but the game wasn't a poorly financed, poorly designed game at all. In other words, it makes Star Trek look good from what I read at my favorite site, IGN.com. It got a 8.4/10. Sure, it runs on the aging Quake III engine, but it suprisenly I looks quite good supporting 1600x1200 with software anti-analyzing (good stuff.) For a long time I thought Star Trek - Elite Force II was a sleeper hit when I was thinking of buying a copy with my hard-earn cash. I found that Jim had a backup of the game so I copied it instead. :) The game disappeared from Wal-Mart this month. I wasn't really looking for it anyways, I wish they've would have kept it on the shelves. I understand though software coming in the dozen by the month so of course older software will be pushed off the shelves.

Here is a list of copy protection to help people out when backing up there games
Use a retail version or shareware version of Alcohol 120 % 1.4.7 or better.

Tested OK:

1. Unreal Tournament 2004 - Securom 4x/5x | 2x speed
2. Unreal Tournament 2003 - Securom 4x/5x | 2x speed
3. Far Cry - Securom 4x/5x

13. Unreal Tournament - General Protection or Laser Lock
14. Final Fantasy 7 - General Protection
15. Freelancer - General Protection
16. Quake III Arena - General Protection

18. Any Games older than 2000 - General Protection

For more information on copyright protection look at <http://afterdawn.com>.

As for the MAC emulation I'm doing. I am going to hold off until later. My emulator of choice is Pear PC because it's website (<http://pearpc.sourceforge.net>) has a full documentation on how to install MAC OS 10 on PC. I'm currently on the GCC step and still have a ways to go. I need a compiler apparently to add source to the file where MAC is suppose to be placed in (called a virtual drive.) I got the GCC compiler at <ftp://ftp.xraylith.wisc.edu/pub/khan/gnu-win32/cygwin/gcc-2.95.2/> .

Cheerio dudes! Tune in for some exciting updates on this page in another 3 days!

Getting MAC OS 10.1 to install on my PC

Date: 5/28/04 at 12:58PM

Speaking of which, I was searching on the Internet today and I was looking at Windows Emulators for Linux. I disliked Wine and I need something else. So I found WintoLin 3.0 on Emule. It doesn't download at first...which doesn't surprise me. It's commercial software for Linux. I thought that everything on Linux had to be open source. Well it's being sold for 50 dollars and comes with its own Installer. Why can't the software take the Windows partition “/hda1/” and boot it in a window in Linux? That would be so much easier than trying to “emulate” Windows.

EMULATING MAC OS 10.1, FACT OR FICTION?

I will emulate MAC OS 10.1 if it's the last thing I do. I may have not told you this, but I snuck a retail version of MAC OS 10.1 home from school about a year ago. MAC OS can not be installed on PC for processing reasons without an emulator. MAC OS runs exclusively on Motorola processors which blocks it from being installed on an IBM machine. Today I was looking at MAC OS emulators which claim they can set up a 'virtual drive' for a MAC OS to be installed. The emulator emulates the Motorola processor and Mac file system. I heard this DOS emulator Fusion 3.0 is good. It use to cost 50 dollars back in 2000, but since then it's been abandon-ware so I can download it for free off <http://emulators.com/fusion/> Now if only I could get OS 10.1 to install on it in the emulator window, that would be awesome. All my friends would ask me how did I emulate a MAC on my PC? I would smile back with a questionable grin not saying a word. I'll tell you guys if I get MAC OS 10.1 running.

I'm also trying to get an emulator I think has some promise called Soft MAC 8.2 for Windows. However, when I run it, it says ROM file not found. I don't know what that means? I know I want to install MAC OS 10.1 on my PC so therefore technically speaking there isn't any software on my PC yet. Or does it mean virtual drive file? I don't know the answer. It's bugging the crap out of me. And if it is a virtual drive, how the heck do I get the emulator to see it? I got all my applications off <http://www.emulators.com/download.htm> and <http://www.zophar.net/mac.html>.

On another note, I also downloaded Pear PC 1.2. Pear PC is free and a very small download - 224 KB. When you extract the zip into a folder, it'll be 620 KB. It doesn't come with any OS10 disk image maker to install any OS on which is a little confusing to a novice MAC user like me. I need to find Macintosh bios too. Who wants to emulate a MAC, it's so evil. MAC users are evil, why emulate it? Yes, I have to know what they know! It's the only way I can become a genuine computer guru.

MAC OS has a Windows emulator called Virtual PC and it does fairly good job. It can emulate running any windows application on a PowerPC. I saw it working on TechTV's The Screen Savers. Any of the dozen MAC emulators could do the same thing for my PC, right? That's my way of thinking.

Come back soon, I'll modify this entry as soon as I get MAC OS 10.1 running on my Windows XP! I'll be sure to include a non-modified Paint Shop Pro image. And those of you who are already doing this...just laugh on your own time, okay! But if you have any comments to help me emulate it, please write something! I need all the help I can get.

I got Longhorn XP Pro free, and it isn't stealing (2004-06-01 13:14)

Do you want the next version of Windows Free? Then head over to Soft32.com to download your free version of the Longhorn Desktop Enhancement 6.0 Software. I'm only the 151389th one to download it. What it does is changes your desktop to look like the Longhorn Professional screenshots you see on the Internet now-a-days. It's also supposed to fix some bugs in Windows XP. Interesting enough it looks just like the screenshot in my Longhorn entry. Looks can be deceiving since the Microsoft team may develop a more stable version that'll cost 200+ dollars when it comes out. The interesting part is Longhorn Professional XP's (Freeware Version by unknown third party) About box. The About box gives all the credit to Microsoft. Longhorn is patented by Microsoft isn't it? I know Longhorn runs on top of WinXP. I look at the Windows version it is still 5.1.2600, same exact number it was in Windows XP. I hope Microsoft doesn't track down the developers of the Freeware application and sue them. They did give Microsoft all the credit. No names appear from anywhere.

Features in the Longhorn Pro XP Mod available at <http://www.tcmagazine.net/> and <http://Soft32.com>

- You can change your Start menu to have 5 different themes
- It's a lot like Windows Blinds except more stable.
- 5 themes that look like the screenshots that changes the taskbar, the scroll bar, the Start menu, the color of the toolbar, the outer rims of the graphical user interface
- Puts a drop down menu on top of each directory window. If you don't like it, you can always remove it.
- The ability to go back to the WIN XP PRO theme and WINDOWS Classic theme without uninstalling the Longhorn Pro XP Much of Win XP Pro stays intact
- Changes Boot Screen to that nice Green Hills, Blue Sky theme with the Longhorn Logo on it.

Some very cool sites to check out

1. Fasterfiles.com - Here is a very, very cool site for downloading UT2003, UT2004, Quake 3, Half-life, Far Cry, Neverwinter Nights mods (includes maps, skins, models, uploaders)
2. Soft32.com - This is where I found the Longhorn tweak for Windows XP. Counter-strike 1.5 and 1.6 can be downloaded here as well!
3. IGN.com - A site that specializes in reviewing games, movies, cars, models and supporting RPGs with <http://nwnvault.ign.com>, <http://ffxivault.ign.com> and such.
4. Sourceforge.org - has a TON of open source software. Some programs carry over from Linux like Gimp 2.0, and Gaim and make a 1st appearance on the x86 Windows OS. Other programs like CDEX use Sourceforge.org as their primary server. Most of the downloads there are supported by phone company servers and university servers so you're likely to get the best bandwidth 90 % of the time.

5. lame.sourceforge.net – the only open source MP3 encoder and in my opinion one is enough because it does compress mp3s at a good ratio and does sound as good as any other MP3 encoder. Computers are fast enough now-a-days that speed isn't an issue. An example would be on my computer, a 3 minute 50 second song compressed at 128 KBPS takes approx. 23 seconds. Real.com says Xing is faster. I don't need an encoder 5 or 6 seconds faster than LAME that makes you pay 40 dollars for it. In fact you don't have to pay for Xing, but it's really hard to find the MP3 encoder. I just found the Xing MPEG encoder.

6. <http://www.tcmagazine.net/> - Full of hardware / software reviews and top downloads for the latest software.

[#2 Topic] Like I said before, gamers like to go all out and they can't do that with the game lagging, that's why we have the wonderful thing called patches! While patches don't necessarily make the game more fun, most of the time it does. Patches are made famous by fixing those crash bugs that are no fun at all. I know I'm getting a little off topic but the difference between Diablo 2 v1.0 and v1.7 was enormous. I know the v1.03 patch is famous because Diablo 2 Battle Set comes pre-loaded with it.

The famous game, Planet Side, became famous when the patches made the game much worse than the retail version. It started off very popular and it got less and less popular as the patches were released. This is an example for the industry of what not to do when making patches.

I went to school to download Counter-Strike 1.5 and Counter Strike 1.6 off the T1 server right before I wrote this entry. It wouldn't be a great idea to download over my modem. :) The CS 1.5 is about 150 MB and CS 1.6 is 340 MBs. I have them on CD if anyone wants to play them with me. I find that Counter-Strike is by far the most downloaded mod on the Internet. I know when I go to Soft32.com, it is amongst their most popular downloads. I wonder when Ritual will develop CS 2.0? Perhaps when Half-Life 2 comes out? Who knows...maybe there'll be plenty of Mods of HL2 for anyone to be trigger-happy for over a year? HF2 popularity has only increased keeping in the #4 place at Gamestats.com. I pretty much said all there is to be said on Half-life 2 right now (AKA I had 4 blog topics on the subject). Some people like to play CS 1.5 on X-Fire so I wanted to download both versions. I have to install both one of these days and check the servers. I'm not going to play CS now. When I downloaded 50 maps for Unreal Tournament 2004, I know I was interested in it for 4 days straight. Will I have to learn a whole new learning curve with Counter-Strike?

I'll end this up by showing the top 10 software picks of last month:

- 10.) Microsoft Office Professional 2003
- 09.) Gimp 2.0
- 08.) JASC Paintshop Pro 8.1
- 07.) Digital Sound Recorder (records sound from your desktop and can convert them to MP3 format)
- 06.) Quintessential Player 4.51 (mp3 player also rips shoutcast music or any mp3 / OGG based broadcast)
- 05.) eMule 0.42g (person / person file sharing unity)
- 04.) Namo Webeditor 6.0 (it's like Macromedia Dreamweaver)
- 03.) Longhorn XP Professional 6.0 (Desktop Enhancement Mod)
- 02.) CDEX 3.51 (MP3 Ripper also has Ogg Vorbis and Monkey Audio encoders)
- 01.) Mozilla Firefox 0.8 (web browser)

Yet another webpage design by me! (2004-06-05 13:03)

Brand new webpage template I've made. It look better then my previous webpage. Address didn't change. It has Gordon Freeman on it. It took me from 5:30am to 11:30am to do everything. I saw this page called Final Fantasy Dream, and it seemed to be pretty popular, so I copied her design. I tried to keep anime out of my webpage design, but I was compelled to have one from Soul Caliber. Besides I have a Squaresoft website http://www.geocities...01/square_index.html . Squaresoft should surprise fans with Chrono Break screenshots anytime now. Chrono Break is suppose to talk right after or years after Chrono Cross, which I played through, it was okay. The characters didn't talk...and there is something about silence. I mean if voice acting can destroy a game....why even have it? Good example, Super Mario Sunshine.

I started a Live Journal website [<http://www.livejournal...com/renegeadeviking/>] I only had two entries. I started with introducing myself and what I'm was doing that day. It seems like the only way to start a new blog. About Movable Type, my ISP and Geocities don't support PHP so there's no way I can play with Movable Type. The directions are easy to follow. Earlier I was looking at a bluish theme for my movable type webpage.

Wednesdays are my days off from school. I watched The Rock (Sean Connery + Nicholas Cage) and Dirty Harry (Clint Eastwood) I forget the tag line in Dirty Harry. Dirty Harry is better because it's a man to man action flick. Kind-of like The Godfather was. Two vendetta's face each other in the whole movie. The good guy always wins. The two movies have nothing in common.

I had to make due with my free time. My cat was sick and crapped all over the house and mom brought him to the vet. Bob and I planned to do something on Monday, it seems that he has to look for a new house. Bob's 20 and he's going to school. Maybe his sisters are driving him nuts over Internet usage. He's looking at a place in New Richmond. Plus he seems to be always busy which doesn't allow time for friends.

In reality I was looking for a new friend. I lost all my high school friends. And I've been home mostly. I wanted to go to the beach at Willow River State Park , but that requires money for a window sticker. Riding bike means free access, though it would tire me before I swim. I think a sticker is $15. If it was that much – I would have gone swimming at the YMCA.

Chow! Until next time!

My cousin got to fly in real navy simulator this w (2004-06-06 13:15)

It is only fair that I tell a little bit about stealth aircraft. Unless another country has an aircraft using stealth technology, none I know about. Only Americans have aircraft's that show up as a small bird on radar. I know to some people that may be really cool and to others is very disturbing. The fact is the US government is not sharing any information on what alloy the airplane is made of. FACT: we know its very light and an extremely reflexive metal which forces radio waves to bounce off into space not returning to the radar command post. That's a good thing for the pilot. THE F-117a Nighthawk is entirely controlled by computers and supposedly can not be flown without them. Nighthawk bombers were used in the Operation Iraqi Storm last year bombing military bases.

I think the most interesting plane in my era is the F-22 Raptor. It's not only stealth based but also can go past MACH 2 and has alternating jet engines for those 90 degree angles without the plane locking up (Stalling) or blacking out. It's cruisin' speed is just under Mach 1. Some say the Raptor is one of the easier aircraft to control in the air force.

I have this cousin, David, who is assigned in the West in California somewhere by San Francisco at an naval academy where he says there is a very, very cool air-force simulator complete with all the bells and whistles of a real aircraft also having spectacular graphics. He said the airforce academy got it this year. I assume that this simulator can only simulate one type of aircraft. I mean look at the screenshot. The detail in the game is much higher than any computer's hardware ability today. Even if you have your Microsoft Flight Simulator 2004 pumped all the way at 1600x1200 with 16x anti-aliasing, this air force simulator would have more detail (higher resolution) than anything ever seen to the average computer user. AHEM! Non-navy people that is.

What's interesting is the military simulators that the Navy uses are designed to control exactly like the airplane even the stealthy F-117A, so my point is, in a game like MS Flight Simulator 2004, how can they know about how a Nighthawk would fly if it is unlikely that one of them ever flown in one? I haven't really seen anything big in flight simulation since it's first appearance in 3D. Maybe I'm wrong and something in the "gameplay" has changed. The computer knows over a billion worst case scenarios. David says it took him 10 times to get off the ground. I suppose there is also a tutorial on these simulators as well, so I mean he wasn't in the dark when he first controlled one. I mean where do game designers know how military aircraft jets fly if they are only game designers? Thus, I conclude most game designers aren't retired civilian pilots and ex-navy pilots. I don't know maybe there are a few ex-navy pilots who develop games after serving? Of course actual pilots have to test the simulators to see if they work just like in real life.

It's like this....I like to speculate. I also wonder where the Navy gets it's hardware because no company can make processors this fast yet except for maybe IBM or Intel. And making them costs as much as $3000 each. Maybe IBM hardware designers get the RAM, and sound-cards for the simulators at Best Buy or something?

So now I end my story on flight simulators. And if I had something like a high quality Logitech yoke pad and Flight Simulator 2004 or even Microsoft Combat Sim 3, if you got past the basics, how much more life-like can the game play be? I have a game called Falcon 4.0, developed by Microprose. Microprose did make 50 maps for Falcon 4.0.

It's very hard, was made back in 1998 and use to crash often on my computer. Back then it required an 8MB graphics card and 166 MHz CPU. A Pentium II at 400 MHz with 128 MB or RAM, and a 16MB graphics card was recommended. So it's just a tad out of date graphically. LOL! But do graphics really matter that much? I don't think they do last time I checked. The game had bugs even after I used the patch. However, it still could look very realistic on my PC, still had a lot of "flat terrain" that looked flushed out for some reason? Anyways, the instruction booklet for the game is damn big - like 400 pages thick! I didn't bother to read it all just jumped into the pilot's seat and learned by crashing. I learned that flying is much easier than landing. Landing is a whole different can of beans. Flying is just about staying in the sky, but all things must come down sooner or later. So if you learn to land your aircraft, that's about 2/3 of the whole game. I successfully landed a F-16D Strike Eagle in this game many times...though I keep running off the road. I'm only begining to fly in aerial combat. The instruction booklet comes in a 3 ring binder...ouch! Other flight games I've played are Ace Combat 04 and Air Force Delta I have flown in a real aircraft, never piloted one.

Patches I use for Falcon 4.0 are:

- Official patch from Microprose v1.08 (17 MB)
- Super Pack 4.0 (134 MB)
- SP 4.1 hotfix on top of SP 4.0. (8 MB)

Running Dreamcast Games on my PC today (2004-06-06 13:16)

Hello world again. Tomorrow is the 60th anniversary of D-Day. I have nothing to say about D-Day except a lot of people lost their lives trying to keep world peace. I seen D-Day in a lot of WWII films like Band of Brothers, Saving Private Ryan and The Longest Day so I guess I have an idea what it was like on June 06, 1944.

I was practically running Sega Dreamcast discs on my computer. In reality I was only playing a Tetris demo that ran on Chankast. So techicially speaking I was playing a "Dreamcast game." I know a few of you are really excited to emulate the Dreamcast, that's why you came here today. Chankast 0.1 is the best Dreamcast emulator out. It runs the Dreamcast boot screen fine and detects my controller. Someday I'm going to buy a nice Logitech gamepad for my PC. I have to go all the way into Woodbury, MN to get one because no one sells any in Hudson, WI. Wal-mart sells Microsoft Flight Simulator 2004 and they don't have a Flight Yoke to go with it? Don't they know that plenty of people will cash out 30 dollars for a decent Flight Yoke USB 2.0 controller? I got Nyko Air Flow PC for 30 dollars, a pretty good deal considering that you'll pay twice as much for Logitech's. I use a controller to play games emulated with Project 64K, EPSXE, Gens, J Nes, Falcon 4.0 and now Chankast! I don't like Flight Yokes as much as Gamepads, period! I read off NGemu.com that Chankast is the only emulator that can emulate games, thus being light years ahead of other Dreamcast emulators available for download. Again - with some difficulty to emulating the game. I expect this though. Some emulation is better than none. Soon we won't have to burn the disc to our hard drives, Chankast will just run it off DVD-ROM. I haven't seen a specific plug-in for Dreamcast games yet. I think it's really awesome that there is a way to play Dreamcast games on my PC - that is if I can copy an ISO image. For those of you who hate to look for proper BIOS, I made it easier for you. I have copy on my server.

The clerk at the videogame store in Hudson told me that Sega discontinued the Dreamcast because the some one came out with a Boot Disk which could boot the Dreamcast enabling copied games to playable on it. Only a small portion of the GDROM can be read by CD-ROMs. The only way anyone including me can play Dreamcast games on the computer is to download Dreamcast images off the Internet. Discontinuing Dreamcast was a good decision on Sega's part because in 2001 they told IGN.com that they were barely breaking even on production costs. This was when Sega stock was down and Sammy Corporation bought them out as of 2003. In the gaming industry's view, Sega's Dreamcast is a failure, although I believe most people say that because they never owned one. Oh yeah and the little fact that Sega stopped making games for it. Sega stopped making Dreamcast games because everyone was saving for Playstation 2.... I had my Dreamcast three years earlier than my Playstation 2. So come on! Dreamcast had Soul Caliber, Resident Evil 2, Street Fighter 3 Alpha, Crazy Taxi, Skies of Arcadia, Grandia II, Chu Chu Rocket and one of the better 3D Sonic games. I personally loved the Dreamcast for 3 years (1999 - 2002) until I got a Gamecube in 2001.

Required Files to Emulate DC disk:

- Find game image off the Internet (impossible to play discs on PC)
- DC BIOS (multiple languages) <http://pressenter.com/scampbel/dcbios.rar> 986 KB
- Chankast 0.2a <http://www.chanka.org/> 600 KB
- DAMEON TOOLS 3.46 - <http://www.daemon-tools.cc/dtcc/portal/portal.php> 500 KB (to mount cd image to a "virtual drive")

I've played around with the Sega Saturn emulator, Saturone, and it's coming along. I found a working USA bios for it. It was a little difficult finding one because most bios on peer networks are the Japanese bios. I tested the emulator with Sonic 3D Blast which ended up with the Sega splash screen and Travelers Tales screen loading, and then the emulator crashed. The BIOS screen as some gamers like to call it shows up flawlessly. In fact I played an audio cd and it worked which proves the BIOS works. Now it's up to the people working on the emulator to make it emulate the games. It's hard to say this is illegal because I'm running legit Saturn CDs in my CD-ROM. And it is unlikely for someone else without Saturn CDs to use this emulator unless you've either a.) Played a demo or b.) backup a friend's Saturn game and used it in Saturone.

Other BIOS on my server:

PSX - <http://www.pressenter.com/scampbel/psonebios.zip> (works with EPSXE) 400 KB

PS2 - <http://www.geocities.com/hoppymister2003/ps2bios.zip> (works with PCSX2) W O R K I N G L I N K !!!

Saturn - <http://geocities.com/hoppymister2003/SaturnBios.zip> (works with Saturone) W O R K I N G l i n k !!!

Fact for Europeans - Gameshark or Action Replay will allow any Playstation to be multiregional and this also works with Playstation emulators and the like. I've tested Action Replay on EPSXE for Legend of Dragoon and the cheats work with it.

As for today, I'm going to try to contact one of my friends. Meanwhile, to pass the time, I'll watch the whole Lord of the Rings trilogy. If I start at 8am I can watch non-stop until 5:30PM. Two best friends of mine drove back from a week fishing in Canada. I don't think neither of them will want to come over since they drove 100 miles. Again, Bob will probably want my help either tomorrow or Monday moving stuff to his new apartment. His girlfriend lives with him now, and they need a place to stay. My parents and I have gotten along well. I can go pretty much where I want without having to worry about gas money. I know that's a great trade-off for cleaning my room and helping out with what ever needs helping out on. My parents are getting old so they like to have a young man around the house. Getting a job has crossed my mind hundreds of times though I'm having so much fun downloading stuff. I'm on the Internet most of my time. I do try to get away from this blasted computer some days. Today wasn't anything special so instead of wasting it sleeping all day, I play some games. I really want to get Direct Way. I occasionally day-dream of what I can use cable/broadband for. With the water damage costs, I may have wait into 2005. Downloading the big files off the T1 server at school is really fun. What takes me a day to download can only take 30 minutes.

Home Movies on SVCD or DVD? (2004-06-06 13:18)

Welcome back to my humble site! I have to say congratulations to myself because when someone types in "Ian's Blog" in the Yahoo.com search bar http://search.yahoo.com/search?p=ian %27s+blog &ei=UTF-8 &fr=fp-pull-web-t &n=20 &fl=0 &x=wrt, I am the 15th listing. Having such a great place on the Internet excites me. Renegade Viking has the #1 spot on both Yahoo and Google search engines, type in "Renegade Viking's Webpage" in the text box. This wasn't the first time I got noticed by the big search engines, when I was formally known as Hoppymister, Spidey, and Nightwalker, they all had Google / Yahoo listings too. Red Dragon Productions was a nice site until I deleted it. I had Dreamcast, N64, Gamecube, and Saturn reviews on it. I tried reviving it, but it'll never seem to gather as many hits as it did in 2000 - 2001. I had 20 hits a day then, the graphics weren't too horribly out of date as one would expect from neglect over time. RDP had custom graphics with a dragon, a nice link menu and background. I wasn't smart and deleted it else I would give a hyperlink to everyone. The whole site originally was on a couple of floppy disks although somehow they don't exist anymore. If I remember right, the disks got corrupted from constant use.

I did two recreations of Red Dragon Productions after the old Geocities site got deleted. They aren't updated however.

I know, I am really not supposed to talk to strangers at the videogame store, but I talked to the clerk there yesterday. He always cuts me 10 dollars off of my buy since I am one of the stores best customers. Are you surprised? No really - are you? I spent 80 dollars, and received six games in return. I spent 2 hours there just trying to confirm my decision. After all it is my money. I knew I was going to get Panzer Dragoon Orta for Xbox. I have Panzer Dragoon I and II for Sega Saturn. Never played either of them, both discs are in excellent condition thanks to resurfacing at the game store. As for my Saturn...it's in very good condition. I bought 3 PSX games, and got Ridge Racer as a bonus. I know it's an old game...it is a free game, that's the beauty of it. Ridge Racer was one of the launch titles for the Playstation. When the development team tried making Ridge Racer Type 4 run at 60 frames per second instead of 30 FPS, proved too expensive, they used that technology for Ridge Racer so it wasn't wasted. Ridge Racer became the only racing game that could run at 60 FPS on PSX. If you look closely the interface in Ridge Racer looks a lot like racing games in the 16-bit generation. Namco tried saying that Ridge Racer ran in "high resolution." Ha! High resolution to what? Super Mario Kart or F-Zero? Anyhow, I was playing R4: Ridge Racer Type 4, and I got passed the first and second circuits on the first try. That says a lot about my driving skills, huh? I like the music in this game. It has a certain jazzy beat to it, which I like to drive too. Who says good music doesn't help you win races? It is true! It's much better than that "Garbage - I think I'm Paranoid" tune we hear over and over in Gran Turismo 2. PSX.IGN.com gave GT 2 a 9.3 out of 10. Gran Turismo 3 - A Spec had over 50 songs. Last game I got was Conker's Bad Fur Day. The truth of it was I couldn't buy Orge Battle 64 at the game store so I bought Conker's Bad Fur Day instead. Microsoft bought Rareware, the famous Nintendo developer, for 133 million dollars. Snuffle Ah, who cares, I own an Xbox, I'll get "Conker Live and Uncut." A note on IGN.com says that the Conker demo at E3 was drop dead gorgeous! I looked at the screenshots, and it did look like Conker was much fuzzier than the N64 game. Maybe with some luck, Microsoft will publish Perfect Dark 2 for both Xbox and Windows? Some rumors on the Internet that Microsoft plans to buy Capcom next. With out certainly. The software giant certainly has the money, although Capcom also has to agree to it too. It's not how much money Capcom is worth, it's how much profit Microsoft can make after Capcom sells stock to them. Microsoft can easily make up the deficit by selling more Windows XP Upgrade CDs. Plus, if this were the case, I think someone at Microsoft wants Onimusha 2, Onimusha 3: Demon Siege, and Resident Evil on Xbox very badly. [Note: Capcom put RE2 and RE3 on PC]

As for non-game related news today, I went to school earlier this week to download Ulead Video Studio 8, I'm sure there are better, but none that will let me download a trial version. I want to film the Internet and edit it and show my Internet short film on TV from a SVCD or if that's not possible, a DVD. I would use DIVX to compress the video except the DVD player we own won't support DIVx only MPEG 2, so I'm out of luck. This isn't the first time I made a home movie. I edited a VHS tape with Apple iMovie on the new ambulance building in River Falls, WI. I volunteered to make a short-film quality video last year in 12th grade. I edited out where the camera shook, deleting the blurry camera shots, and some unneeded talking until it was downsized as much as I thought it should have been. I wanted to do voiceovers, but that would take more time, and I couldn't find a microphone to speak into. I could have brought one from home, but I didn't to have done that. I put the edited stuff back on VHS tape via 'digital to analog video in' adapter (hub). And guess what? They wanted me to edit it more and make it even shorter. I said, "No!" Most of the time I was willing to help others computer problems all except for the typing, I was against typing for others. There was someone else at school, whose computer skills wasn't really known (known to his buddies in secret), and this guy gave me the creeps in 12th grade. He knew everything I knew and he wasn't going to college for it. He gave me a creepy yet strange erg to speak to him about Linux. I found out he knew a bit about Red Hat. I ignored my feelings about his creepiness and tried to be friendly with him for once and share a few pointers, but he barely spoke a word to me at school. Could it be that he was hinting that he hacked into stuff regularly? I stopped seeing him after high school ended.

At the end there was a celebration party, and Dr. Mottaz (our school coordinator) was there. As part of my job as an intern at the University of Wisconsin, River Falls - I had to make a film, I chose my Caribbean cruise, and ported it to DVD via Apple iDVD to verify that the DVD-RW worked in their burning room. The first working copy of my edited movie I kept for myself. I could tell that the compression wasn't very good since looked on the flip side and 7/10s of the DVD disc was a dark shade, the movie was only 50 minutes long! I want to know how someone can compress Lord of the Rings Return of the King, a three hour movie with MPEGII on DVD? What technique does the movie industry use? Theoretically the movie would run out of space, but it didn't. I also heard of this 9.4GB DVD format? The industry calls these DVD-9s and I just found out about it today. I haven't seen 9.4 GB DVDR packs at Wal-mart, that's probably why. I mean Wal-mart doesn't sell them at all. Anyways to get back on topic here, I also managed to make 15 minute short film of myself complete with dialog, background music, and a DVD title screen. I really didn't have a clue what I was talking about...just said anything for a long time, and I added that to the same DVD which I gave to the school. I can try to make a DIVX compression version of MPEG 2, but MPEG4 codec can't encode MPEG2 versions, for the same reason MP4 ACC audio can't be used to help encode MP3. The new DVD players on the market support Divx. If the text is somewhat readable on TV, that's all I care about. In my first Internet based home video, I plan to have voice-overs, and maybe even music playing in the background.... I have audio software saved on CD for that sort of thing. It would be nice if I only spend 5 hours to create a decent quality video on the Internet, to show people, edit it, add music and copy it to SVCD or DVD.

I spent some time using Ulead Video Studio 8.0 and its pretty good, very easy-to-use interface and simplified options. I can like go to the Window that compresses. Ulead also gave recommendations that I need. Ulead Video Studio 8 doesn't have a MPEG II encoder either. I was currently searching sites off Google for some hints on where the plugin folder is. I haven't tried adding Xing MPEG encoder with it yet - don't know which directory to put the files in? If anyone knows...be sure to let me know, okay? Real Interactive makes one of the best MPEG encoders available, or whatever compression polls on Afterdawn.com say it to be. I have heard very good news about Real's MP3 ACC audio encoder, Xing. There is also Xvid, but I don't know how good this encoder is. I only know I can fit 30 minutes of high quality video about 440x440 resolution on SVCD (Super Video Compact Disc) with the default settings. I may have to compress what I have in High quality MPEG1, and then find a MPEG 2 encoder to burn to SVCD or DVD. I don't know whether or not SVCD supports MPEGII?

The first video I made was on a VCD and the video image is really, really small. The big deal about this is MPEG is nowhere near as compressed as MPEG2. I have movies like Family Guy, Space Ghost Coast to Coast, Tombstone, and Tomb Raider on CDR thanks to DivX compression. The resolution is twice as large. People who like to rip DVDs do this sort of thing, I don't. My first disc worked playing the 35 minute short film on TV, but the sound cut out in the last 15 minutes. The video was really small, I couldn't see anything, not even the graphics - it was just a blurry image through-out the whole movie. I am going to have to burn on DVDR now, but before that I'll have to make a new video sometime. I hate to use DVDs up. DVDs aren't overly expensive, although I only would get a 10 pack of DVDRs for the same price of 50 pack of CDRs. Hmm - since 6 CDs = 1 DVD, I would get more MBs for the buck if I bought DVDs. I would even get more MB for the buck if I invested my dollars into a DVD-9 pack, if I found a vender that carries them. For someone who's not ripping DVDs like me, DVDs are just an oversized option. When the time comes that I need something more than 700 MB, DVDs would be a real option. Right now I backup everything I download onto CD every month. Last month I made 6 hard drive cd backups which are uncommon for a modem user to do.

I've been drinking a lot of Mountain Dew lately. I take in about two 24 ounce bottles daily. Mt. Dew tastes really good, and is very hard to put down believe me. Does Mt. Dew slow your thinking process or speed it up? It must have speeded my IQ just a tad since my hand / eye coordination was better than without Mountain Dew. Good for games! I beat R4 Ridge Racer Type 4 in less than 2 hours on normal setting. This includes learning how to drive, which was easy for the most part if it wasn't for the game's only limitation, only 6 tracks to race on. And during it all, I was speaking to the game throughout the race.

I am going to school for Industrial Network technician, but I also know basic knowledge for other things such as game emulation, website building, desktop management, finding files quickly off the Internet, using Redhat Linux OS, exedra... It's creepy to know someone who can figure out virtually any computer problem that accure with networking, and just about everything else. Someone who knows a lot about how to make 10 different types of cable including cross over cable. I only know how to make 2 types right now (phone line cable and RJ-45.) The scary thought of talking to a fellow computer user who has little interest with the subject you're suggesting, which seems to only amuse him anyways since he is much more knowledgeable about it than I am. There is always someone out there that knows more than I do. Most times I never really worry about it since I'm in my room surfing the Internet, and everyone's really friendly in giving advice on a certain problem. Where message boards are plentiful and where comments on help sites are just as plentiful. On this blog, I am already giving advice on stuff all the time. I often wish the real world would work this way and it doesn't. Making choices are much easier online than in the real world. The real world doesn't have rating systems. I often wonder if people go online to get away from it all interacting with blogs and instant messengers. Interesting enough, my CISCO class is entirely online. CISCO reading material is updated weekly. Such as when I took CISCO I nearly a year ago, I found myself reading information I never really came across before in my life. Which is normal for most people, but I continued to read the words and memorize it on the online class, doing my best at it. In 9th grade, I was the first student ever to do a math online course in the entire school (back in 1999). I did fairly well on it. It's like the math course in a sense, but with out the text messaging. It goes to show that text messaging along with online help is really an advantage to just reading material. If only Norton Netware would allow MSN messenger to log in at school, that would be very, very cool! I found out that AOL and Yahoo instant messengers still log on with Norton Netware running. Text messaging could be used as a cheating device at WITC. In fact college students are getting away with this type of cheating.

Joyce told students that Cisco is now at version 3.2 and that the version is entirely different from 2.4, making earlier classes invalid. This makes all the power point presentations I got from Phil last year, worthless. V3.2 involves a lot of rewriting of a lot of the information. Cisco does this to make students like me angry because it's a lot of re-reading in a slightly different way. I have to take CISCO 1 and 2 anyways as part of my curriculum this fall. I may find that I'll have to login to cisco.netacad.net, and download the newest version, and try to decipher it before school starts on August 12th. That is if someone didn't find a rogue student and delete my old account!!!

I like to close this up saying that summer vacation so far has been fun. I've been entertained thus far, might as well be entertained a little longer. I'll let everyone know now the Internet VCD turns out next time I write something. Bye!

Your blog reminds me of when I used to work very hard from 8 to 6 everyday and dated the girl from the office next door. I don't even know why, but it does. (Yeah, I am kinda crazy hehe)
Anyways, I should get back to working on my download free dvd movies site, just letting you know that someone from Guatemala read your site. Good luck with it.

I installed 1 more GByte stick in my PC today! (2004-06-06 13:28)

Hello once again. I got another Gigabyte of dual channel RAM, and eventually I installed it! The "Ultra 1 Gigabyte PC2700" came in the mail today all the way from Tigerdirect, Florida for $250. There is a smaller difference than when I went from 256-MB to 786 MB on my custom PC, which drastically increased by performance for games. From my gaming experience my custom pc can do Unreal Tournament 2004 at 1200x912 32-bit colors at 66 frames per second. I have a 256-bit Geforce 4, and with one of 'em laser mice...I don't have enough room on my desk to use it so I use it on a book in the top drawer. My way of thinking is reuse the older monitors so I have more desktop performance money. I was seriously thinking of getting a 17" LCD screen, but for that amount you can get a regular 21" monitor at a nicer resolution. Of course, my Dell is faster than my custom PC. My custom PC is 1.2 GHz slower than my Dell, and with a lot less RAM. Okay, in terms of UT2004, you know how the game maps take about 14 seconds to load? It takes about 8 seconds now. The graphics of course are lossness. My computer now does 59 frames per second on average at 1600x1200 res. I can't tell very well, but it looks as if it's running 60 frames. So the loading times have been cut in half because I put in another gigabyte of RAM. This is really nice, right! I have tried Unreal Tournament, and it runs very fast - maybe 200 frames per second. The graphics quality is over clocked, and it's running at maximum resolution. Every game loads quicker than with 1 GB as if 1 GB weren't enough already. What is there to say? Benchmarking is difficult when comparing 1024 MB to 2048 MB. It's like comparing a 27" TV with a 31" TV, not that much difference except for the price. Except if you are the die-hard gamer who needs the best performance possible...no one needs more than one gigabyte of RAM to run today's programs / games. It's just very cool if you do eventually put that amount in your PC.

I went to WITC, although I was under probation, and downloaded the much needed America's Army patch. I downloaded some Unreal Tournament 2004 maps at UT2004maps.com. I might add more maps tonight and play them, not online because of my very, very, low ping. So I play against the computer....which isn't bad....it's just not as fun. I don't mine Onslaught, but I prefer Team Deathmatch myself. Team Deathmatch is best because I like players on my team. Capture the Flag is cool too, but it doesn't have the oomph of Team Deathmatch or Onslaught. UT2004 can also play UT2003 maps, I only have a few I downloaded off the Internet. They aren't the originals. This guy booted me out of the room, and he said, "Dude, move to a different room." Then I went through an unlocked door into a next room to get on the Internet (cause the room I was in wasn't hooked up), he saw me and said, "Dude, you can't be in this room. You must be in the room I told you to be in!" I mean I dislike being called 'dude' from someone who I don't know. I do take it as a friendly jester for the most part. I don't plan to come back until school starts again. I feel great about being let back in school yet I also feel like I'm going to mess up somehow, and the year hasn't started yet. This is a normal feeling for most people.

For half of the day I had really nothing to do so I opened UnrealEdit 3.0, and I experimented with the tool bar. Right now it looks like a grid so I tried dragging stairways and walls to it. Anyways this is the 2nd or 3rd time I worked with this, and so far I learned how to use the SHIFT, and mouse to move around the 3D grid. I don't know how to 'paint' my map. I know how to add ogg vorbis to my map. Yay! I have this wire-frame map with music. Yay!...talk about boring stuff....learning this program couldn't be more boring. If it takes longer than 3 days to get this, than I'm going to go back to play the game, not make maps. Surfing the Internet or playing Unreal Tournament 2004 is much more fun. I say that to myself a lot so I don't forget. It seems that most games that come out including first person shooters or RPGs come with their own map editor. The Neverwinter Nights map editor could quite possibly be the easiest map editor I've played with. All the objects and characters were loaded on screen. The editor automatically generates a random map or I can modify one just by dragging pieces of land from the toolbar onto the 3D map. Building a map works a lot like the toolbar in Simcity 2000/3000/4. All the games have an option to import MP3s into their editor.

Doom 3 Release Date announced

I like to again thank those who come to my webpage on a regular bases. I don't always talk about games as you can see. iD Software confirmed that September 15, 2004 will be the official release date for Doom III in the USA. That'll be nice. I hear that it will not have a big multiplayer although the mod community can make more Deathmatch & Capture the Flag maps and some much needed multiplayer enhancements not in the retail version. I read off Doom3.com that the multiplayer aspect of Doom 3 will be very basic.

I am getting into the alien / space exploration / weird science stuff. Besides Planetary Radio, I heard about this radio station that streams audio over the Internet at <http://Coasttocoastam.com>. It's about weird news such as space exploration, and odd alien sightings. This Coast to Coast AM can't be any weirder than Planetary Radio. <http://www.planetary.org/radio/> The talk show hosts on that talk about some crazy space phonation stuff at times. To listen to the broadcast free go to this site http://www.streamaudio.com/radiostations /list.asp?type=state &criteria=MN-Minnesota, and listen to it every weekday at 12:00AM Central Standard Time.

Also download Quintessential Player [<http://quinnware.com>], and stream in this Californian station <http://www.ksco.com/kscolive.m3u> to listen to Coast to Coast AM or go to bed while ripping it to your hard drive using its unique MP3 ripping feature. The stream and the program are free.

Most Ridiculous News of the Day, “10 year anniversary of unrevealing of Roswell.” I watched the movie, “The Day the Earth Stood Still.” It was about marions which reminded me about Roswell. In 1959, a Marion escaped from Area 51 (a top secret government facility by Rachel, Nevada to return to ‘his’ home world before ‘we’ caught ‘him’. The other Marion was killed, and brought back to Area 51 whose body chemistry was examined (as you see in the movie Independence Day). The Army later sealed off an area in Mexico where “a sphere” containing space technology was taken back to some faulty also to be studied. This incident was called Roswell Incident (Roswell for short). The government classified the activity as weather balloons recover exercise. After all they don’t exist. Remember - in 1959 - no one had satellites burning up in Earth’s atmosphere because they weren’t invented yet except for maybe Soviet Union’s Sputnik satellite. The first time I heard about it was when I watched the cartoon show, “The New Adventures of Johnny Quest” which had an episode on Roswell 8 years ago when it first appeared on Cartoon Network. After all, there are no such things as aliens. I watched the whole mini-series of “They” on the SciFi channel, and the series had their own version of Roswell. It was directed by Steven Spielberg, the same director of “Close Encounters of the 3rd Kind”. Just remember there isn’t any such thing as marions until we have proof of them. And don’t think of connecting the Face of Mars with ancient alien technology because if you believe in that sort thing than watch the movie, “Mission to Mars.” To read the official unclassified Roswell report, go to <http://www.af.mil/lib/roswell.html>.

Probation stinks ... (2004-06-11 13:20)

Today is a big day and it’s Friday, than the weekend. After 2 weeks I may see Bob again. He may have already moved to this new apartment! It probably won’t look very good, but he lived in a small house, so his apartment at least has to be the same size. He says it has a pool.

I have to convince my school I can go back to school, even under probation, I can make the grade at school. Dad and I had a long talk about staying in school. I haven’t done very well last semester. I did pass my classes though, but wasn’t enough in the school’s opinion. He once thought I was in denial since I “denied” the fact that I wasn’t making the grade. The school’s dean put me on probation because in their view I didn’t want help therefore I didn’t want to be there. That is untrue. Most of the time, this is the reason for probation. I’ve been asked this question many times before, and I learned it’s better to admit you’re in denial. I knew if I didn’t, I would just yet into a complex loop of lies. At first, he didn’t believe me when I told him that I was paying attention to whatever was said at school. I never was talking to anyone during class 95 % of the time, therefore I was listening and doing most of the assignments during class. College is going to almost guarantee me a job with good pay, so staying in school will be a good idea. I like to be a technician as my career, and I don’t really like Cisco. I don’t think anyone does.... I hope that I’ll do well on my final chance to do great. I plan to do the writing questions after the review questions in each chapter in the Cisco book during the summer so I’m not behind during the year. It’s better to be safe than not – in case I get stumped in Cisco. I had a taste last year in Cisco1, and the course is entirely at Cisco.netacad.net reading and doing the tests online. It’s the 21st century way for big corporations to have proof that a particular student is succeeding or doing poorly. Cisco handbooks are hard to understand anyways, although reading is understanding, right? I started to get ahead of myself and pondered how it was a conspiracy against me in my head. Speaking your thoughts out loud can be dangerous. So after a night of pondering....I concluded conspiracies are more trouble than their worth so I stopped thinking of this nonsense, and paranoia and started thinking of how I can ensure success over there. Had this never happened, I wouldn’t have gone through the grief of having dad telling me to get a job instead or stay in school. I was a nice student, hardly ever rude, and asked a lot of questions. So it wouldn't be a conspiracy. I also had a habit at handing my work in late in both classes.

The top blog on the Modblog talked about how CISCO deals with hackers....and it just so happens that I am apart of that small group that takes CISCO classes though-out the Fall - Spring schedule at WITC. How do you think I feel about hackers? It is true that many businesses buy CISCO routers for the sake of having the most sound hacker proof router out there. Truth is any router or switch board can be hacked, Cisco just follows the rules of IEEE more closely than most. This little routers and switch boards have their own firewall to block alien data from entering. I like to use alien data because it sounds cool not that people use "alien data" as a technical term. Businesses are also coming to Cisco because the networking giant guarantees Gigabit bandwidth luxuries all the time. All the government buildings stick with CISCO because they fear they won't get high quality support from other vendors, Hewitt Packard is an example. Time is Data, therefore data is money. I'm going for the A++ certification at school. A++ is 2 grades lower than the Cisco certification, but I'll still receive a good salary in the end. If you have CISCO certification than you achieved the Doctorate of Networking and everyone will want you working for them. In A++, you can take the test for free, and can re-take the test for better competing scores as long as you pay extra for them. Hopefully half of those employers who want CISCO certification employees also want a few A++ certification employees. Hoping that's the case.

I like to say I love my Yahoo.com account. The only junk email I got in my account is from those Tigerdirect spammers and the Nintendo Webring I signed up over a year ago. They keep sending me news I don't want. I unsubscribed to it and they wouldn't stop sending me emails. When ever some gamer puts in a comment it is sent to everyone's email address. MSN messenger is great, never had spam on it, ever. Only one bad thing that MSN messenger doesn't have is an option to receive offline messages. I use Trillian so I have my AIM, ICQ and MSN accounts online whenever I'm on. I also have X-Fire, that's not my primary account.

My cousin, David, is in Japan somewhere now. He's getting Internet sometime, so I'll speak to him soon. I wouldn't be surprise if he learns to speak fluid Japanese while he's there. I never picked up a second language myself. His cell number is out of service, must have been a domestic only cell phone number? That sucks! He says Japan is 6 hours ahead of our time so I'll have to wake up at 1pm to talk to him. That's disappointing. Two weeks ago he mentioned that he's probably going to log onto Diablo 2 there soon. He didn't call me this week yet. I wonder if he lost interest in me? I want that Panasonic Q console. It is a Gamecube / DVD player hybrid. If Nintendo still sells that in Japan - that would be very cool or the PSX (PS2 / DVD burner hybrid). Both of these consoles are rare in the USA, but than again I have two DVD burners. So if you wanted to record TV shows onto DVD than that would give you that option. Hearing how much PS2 breaks down after usage, I wonder how the PSX will hold up. Don't get this confused with the abbreviations PSX meaning Playstation versions 1 and 2. PSone is version 3 of Playstation. The first Playstation released in 1994 had an expansion port for the GameShark or similar port. As Sony decided that there is no need for it, the Playstation version 2 came out without the extra port. This helped drive the price down. The PSone is about half the size as the PS version 2, and was released in 1999 bringing Playstation to 99 dollars.

I beat Star Trek Elite Force II...it was fun, a little short. It's funny, the aliens act human. The blue guy is very funny. Fighting the Romaneons was strange, I thought they were on our side. Maybe they were renegade Romaneons? I'm thinking I'm going back to play Diablo 2 as my primary choice just because it's online and the game is so addicting. I read somewhere that the game is unbalanced in gameplay, but after playing it for years, I realized that it's not the unbalanced gameplay, it's the straight forward hack 'n slash gameplay that never gets old. I have friends on Xfire that play Diablo 2, and I like to meet up with them. It feels like I'm getting something accomplished there. With Mountain Dew by my keyboard and Winamp playing my favorite playlist, I am ready for battle. My account could also be used in Warcraft III, but I'm not a big Warcraft fan. The battles are too short and I dislike the Player vs. Player aspect. That's one of the reasons I played Neverwinter Nights last year. I thought I could fight hordes of enemies in dungeons. My friend, Bob, hates Diablo 2, so he'll never play it. My cousin, Brian, is in love with Diablo 2. I never play him though. He plays on US East, I play on US West on Battlenet.

Freeware Pick of the Day

Xfire 0.14 - Xfire.com - A gaming chat client that automatically loads and connects to the server another player is using. It shows that a buddy/friend is playing a particular game. The client has not yet included popular instant messengers like MSN, ICQ and Yahoo. I have a feeling that it will incorporate them as new releases come available.

I had my Saturn emulator running Daytona USA!!! (2004-06-15 13:21)

If this is your very first time to my site - than I welcome you, if not, I still welcome you! I went to the game store yesterday to see if Baldur's Gate Deadly Alliance 2 was still there. It's one of the best used game on the shelf at the time...of course it's not there! I saw it a week before and someone picked it up since then. Before I go to this store, I read some reviews off IGN, my most trusting place to go for the latest reviews. Sure beats paying for Game Informer. For SNES and Saturn it's a bit more difficult to find a decent review. For Saturn games I always go to Dave's Sega Saturn Page <http://www.Sega-Saturn.com> for the best reviews. Screenshots are always nice to see. I pay of not told you this, but I actually dislike Saturn a lot for the lack of great titles that I know so well on the Playstation. There are a few exceptions (only 2 or 3 outstanding games for it) IGN.com deleted their Saturn section in 2001, so I haven't had very good resources on the web on Saturn lately. I want the same games everyone else wants (rare titles). The games that'll go up in value because they are rare finds anywhere. I probably won't play them. I have this bad habit of collecting games without playing them. In fact, in another entry, I list all my games, which will soon pass 300 titles. One is Panzer Dragoon Saga, the RPG based game from the Panzer Dragoon franchise. Radiant Silvergun (shoot 'em up exclusive for Saturn) and the all 3 imports of the Shining Force III saga. I would like to download an ISO image off a pear / pear unity when I get the chance. I like in-depth reviews that are 1000 words long at least. Sure, someone can like a game and write about it, but if they don't describe it well enough, I just go to another reviewing site without much thought. Gamerankings.com makes it easy for me in this way. I have a low acceptance level when it comes to used games, a game must be very good to excellent for me to buy it. Enter the Matrix is a great example of what not to buy. I thought of buying it with my PS2 when the game had a lot of popularity, but 6 months after I never hear about it. I heard the gameplay wasn't really good which ended up making the game overly difficult, not to mention the camera angles hurt the game. This year has a fair share of games with bad camera systems. I was ready to buy Dino Crisis 3 because it took full advantage of Xbox hardware with it's above average dynamic lighting and high quality artwork, etc....but than I read TechTV's review of Dino Crisis 3, and the article said the camera angles were so bad that it brought the graphically beautiful game to a screeching halt! (Where's the Dinosaurs? I can't see 'em cause of them damn camera angles! Damn, I died again for the 187th time!) Case and point graphics aren't everything. The key paragraph I look for in a game is the gameplay score at the bottom of reviews.

The guy I knew must have gone to Japan already, he said he would. The girl there was really nice about getting the games I wanted. Most of the old games are behind the desk so it is hard to see them; I often ask the clerk what they have. She asked me what games I wanted next time I come. I don't know what her name was (didn't ask in fear that she'll take it negatively so I refer most people by "you") so she'll go around in the Woodbury, MN store picking up games that I like to buy and make it much easier for me. I gave her some games to look for including these: Panzer Dragoon II Zewi, Panzer Dragoon Saga, Grandia, Mega Man X 2, and Mega Man X 3, Radiant Silvergun. I've been playing 5 hours of Panzer Dragoon Orta for Xbox and it plays well. Easily one of Sega's better titles on any console right now. Super Monkey Ball for the Nintendo Gamecube is a surprisingly good game, it was one of the only puzzle games I own now and the graphics looked better than 90 % of Gamecube launch titles. It was also Sega's first Nintendo title. I have Panzer Dragoon I and II for Saturn and I am looking hard, high and low, for Panzer Dragoon Saga. I'm hoping once Saturn plays games, I can stick in NiGHTS or Panzer Dragoon in the CD-ROM, and play it on the computer with a game pad. It is impossible to play NiGHTs, and enjoy it without an analog controller. I remember trying to play it on the regular Saturn controller. It played awful. How did Tomb Raider fans feel when the Playstation still had a D-Pad? In fact, the analog controller for Saturn is referred as the NiGHTs controller. Have you heard of these crazy unities that let you use Playstation controller with other consoles? Yes it is true that the majority of gamers like PS Dual Shock IIs the most so why not use it with your Xbox! IGN.com wrote an article on an adapter called the "Magic Box" which allows you to do this. <http://gear.ign.com/articles/364/364594p1.html?fromint=1> I really would like Sonic Team to make another NiGHTs game in the next five years. NiGHTs was the first fully polygonal action game for Sega Saturn, and it would be nice to have a sequel running in high resolution.

I never thought about inserting Saturn games into Dreamcast. Dreamcast will not play Saturn games, but strangely you can listen to music on a Saturn disc with Dreamcast's audio player.

[June 16, 2004 8:03AM] I stayed up all night trying to figure out this emulator. The first working Sega Saturn emulator, SSF v0.07 RC10, runs Daytona USA, but still has issues running the game and runs slowly. I was running the latest build on my very powerful Pentium 4, but instead it runs on my Custom PC which is a little confusing to me. My custom PC is 1.2 GHz slower, but it has a Geforce 4 FX 5600. The first game that played was Daytona USA and without sound. It plays the game with a lot of missing frames, for example the sky is missing. I spent all last night looking for this thing the emulator calls a ST-V bios without luck! Darn! I'll keep looking though.

I also downloaded another emulator called Saturone 1.1p, and for some odd reason WinXP Pro won't allow my emulator to read MSVCP70.dll (a Microsoft runtime file) required to run all the plugins. I'm positive that if I reinstall Windows XP, this problem will go away. I would loose all my software though and the Windows XP installation process would destroy my Linux partitions. I found out that one great thing about Windows 2000 was that it didn't delete present operating systems already on the hard drive. Than again that was the only good thing about it.

System Requirements for Satourne and SSF

Windows 98SE
Direct X 8.0 or better
CPU at 2.0 GHz
Geforce FX 5200 64 MB
256 MB of RAM (at least)

My configuration

Athlon XP 2600 clocked at 2.1 GHz
Windows XP PRO Service Pack 1
Direct X 9.0a
786 MB of RAM
Geforce FX 5600 256 MB DRR

Here are the games that I found will run on SSF

1. Daytona USA

I guess I haven't thought about Saturn games running on the Dreamcast. Dreamcast clearly does not play Sega Saturn games, however it did play Saturn CD audio in it's audio player. I wonder if somebody will port a Saturn emulator for Chankast 0.2a? If you haven't known, it is a Dreamcast emulator that plays games, only ISOs though.

Front Headlines "DIVX codec package installs bug on computer"

Today went well until I tried to install a codec package with DIVX 5.1.1 on my custom PC, but the package suddenly stopped installing and an error came up so I restarted my computer. It kept rebooting in the middle of the Windows XP loading screen after the error showed. I had an older version of DIVx on this particular computer, but I wanted to install this newer codec package which forced me to repair the file system with the WINXP Pro installation CD. That sucks. Some computers shutdown when the processor gets at a certain temperature, but I wasn't doing any software intensive work. Today I'm ripping Return of the King for Bob. The problem of using Alcohol 120 % to copy the movie to an ISO image, and burn it back on a blank DVD is that the original is using the new duel layer DVD format. Of course, I also have DVD X Copy on my computer so - hehe - I can shrink the image down to under 4.5 GB, and play it on a normal DVD player. I don't think I want to do this. One day when I get cable Internet (if that ever happens), Bob and I will be able to trade movies over a pear network and smaller files are the only way to do this. Well no, I asked Bob if he would invest his hard earned money into a 70 dollar DVDRW burner, and he won't do it. He is not a computer geek, I sort of am so how we spend our money is different. He asks me why he needs a DVD burner and I keep telling him to get rid of hard drive space on his small computer. What to know what his answer was to that? He says he likes all his MP3 collection and other stuff on his relatively small 30 Gigabyte hard drive. Looking at his room, he has all his games and software in a drawer bunched up together. I already lost one CD because he couldn't find it in his mess. He also has a lot less software then I do. Five years ago it was the other way around, but whatever. He wants to get an external hard drive when he can pay for one. Some people like everything on their hard drive. I don't know why. I learned from experience that something will go wrong with the operating system like viruses or hardware failure, the files will get deleted. When that happens, that Bob will get really angry at it. So I find that regular backups of music collections, movie collections and valuable downloads (like console bios) should be backup on CD-ROM monthly. So when something does go wrong - it's no big deal. Getting back on topic, the big question is whether or not I should copy a movie onto DVD or to copy the movie on a super DVD (aka movie compressed in DIVX) Unlike me, I don't think bob will leave his computer running over night encoding movies in MPEG4....he'll just let me borrow them. I want his Monty Python Holly Grail and Mortal Kombat movies. I found out that I can put 4 or 5 movies on DVDR if they're compressed in DivX. When ever I listen to the coconut song or Knights of Ni or the killer rabbit scene, it makes me crack a smile!

Software Picks of the Day

1. 1Click DVD Ripper 2.03 - www.soft32.com/download_26183.html - rips and encodes movies in DIVX on the fly. No longer do you need to rip VOBs to 7 GB of hard drive space and than another 1.3 GB for the compressed file. Save lots space with this unity.
2. Divx player & latest codec (5.1.1) - <http://download.com....html?tag=kdxfallback>
3. Mozilla Firefox 0.9 - <http://www.mozilla.o...FirefoxSetup-0.9.exe> - a preview of Mozilla 2.0 (next generation browser ???)

Had dream similar to ICO | Bought 3rd Dreamcast (2004-06-20 13:24)

Howdy, from Western Wisconsin, USA. Today was very ordinary day. I didn't go anywhere today, since there was no where to go, except to a movie theater....but I wasn't interested in seeing a movie alone. It wasn't always like this....yesterday, I got a new Saturn analog controller (really hard to find) for my Saturn(s). Yesterday I was playing Rallisport Challenge and Ikaruga (nice shoot 'em up for Gamecube.) The game is much harder than my experience level so I had the infinite lives cheat on. Some gamers call it the official sequel to the Saturn exclusive game, Reliant Silvergun. Good game though! I tried using my MP3 player to encode the music on it. I talked to the people at the game store and we've talked a lot about Mega Man. Actually it was just some small talk. I was interrupted everything a new 'customer' came in. I didn't have a good feeling about staying around and left. You know this one 21 year old (a customer), skinny and very talkative. I didn't like him. It seemed he was wondering about my intelligence, and I didn't want to say anything to him. People get this feeling that gamers aren't very bright or if they are, they're "videogame smart." He was a little shy towards me, and he asked the first question about Mega Man. I only said I had Mega Man 2, but of course, I didn't want anyone to know that I have all the cartridge based Mega Mans on disc (NES, SNES, GB, GBA) including the Mega Man Zero (GBA) Hehehe. I use Virtual Boy Advance 1.7.2 for my Gameboy Advance games. So in a way I felt that there was no need to buy a NES and SNES for this reason. As I spoke earlier, I'd picked up 3 games for each of them. I was hesitant to pay for one when I played all those games on the computer any time I chose to. I'm waiting to own a Zodiac for this very reason. I have over 150 NES ROMs, and 50 SNES ROMs and 30 Genesis ROMs. I don't play SNK Neo Geo, Atari 2600 or Sega Masters System.

I had this very odd dream while sleeping last night I want everyone here to know about. I went to bed around 10:30pm. I was in a building much like the trade center underground. I was sentenced there for stealing money out of my Dad's billfold. I was given one key to open one door to bypass a keypad. I would only survive if I made it out of the bunker alive. I had 8 hours to get out of the bunker and the walls slowly caved in. There were people I use to know in high school also there, and it was my choice whether to join forces with them to get out the maze or not because they could always be wrong. I decided to go solo because my way of thinking was I had no time for disagreement. Those other people could be more right than the "route" I was taking. The whole building had a lot of halls with closed doors, some locked, and some not locked. Some door locked with even with keypads. The keypads would get me closer to the exit. To unlock those doors I had to remember the numbers on the doors that I opened, and arrange them in the correct order to open the lock. It was impossible to get the password before the building closed so I ignored them. I did make it out though, there was an exit in a long hallway and I had to make it out before I got completely swished, I had to leave two people behind who I knew. I woke up and the time was 7:30am. Wasn't that weird, I think my dream was a version of the Playstation 2 game, ICO. Sony is making a sequel to ICO called NICO, but no one knows when it's being released.

Since its Father's Day today, my dad is taking me out golfing. We're only going to be on the driving range. My dad owns his own financial business so he gets a lot of invites from clients to go golfing. He does some nice things like go golfing to raise money for the Courage Center in Hudson to help physically disabled kids. He says he does have some above average shots in although he can do about average in his game. Never mentioned golfing any time before I became a member at Modblog, believe this is the first time. I still feel it's a sportsman sport. Did you know golf was invented in Scotland? I hear the British are golf crazy! Soccer and golf both!

[3:30 PM the same day] I got back from the driving range with a blister (go figure). Dad does above par in most of his runs, but he does know what the stance is. He shows me what the stance is. After I got a blister, he and I putted the ball. I was putting on the 9th hole instead of the putting green. I hit the ball way too hard. I find it much easier to hit the ball when looking at the stake instead of the golf ball. I was really angry at the ball. It turned out as a bad golf day. A lot of crazed golfers were over there. Can't argue with them because they know the game more than I do and joke about amongst each other. I hate that.

Hot Shots Golf 3 is one of the premiere PS2 games over seas! You know there are about 10 golf courses within a 30 mile radius from our house? Two in Roberts, WI township, 3 in Hudson's surrounding area, 1 in Hammond, WI, 2 in New Richmond, WI township, 3 in Stillwater, MN township, 1 somewhere in Somerset, WI.

On Thursday I saw Bob's apartment. It was small with a Kitchen, Bedroom, bathroom and living room. The guy next door had this rock music really loud. Bob was fixing us tacos first and while he paused Final Fantasy X on Playstation 2. I couldn't play any of his games since he wanted to find a 'save sphere' to save his game. I really wanted to help him since I wanted to show him my knowledge about it. He's at the crystal forest place right after the water kissing scene with Tidus and Yuna on the butterfly quest. I remember quitting the butterfly quest because it was too difficult. I like Final Fantasy, there was always something to do. Then we played Road Kill. I got beat by Bob, but I DID beat his younger sister. It wasn't a particularly good at this game control wise. I didn't say anything because he kept falling in the water. Road Kill was actually a rip off of Twisted Metal. I said this to him too. After Bob slowed me Hot Shots Golf 3, I wanted keep playing this game well into 9PM, but I couldn't, I had to go home. I heard of Hot Shots Golf on the Playstation. It plays a lot like Mario Golf. The game automatically lines you up with the hole on the green, all I had to do is click X twice on the Dual Shock II, and press X again at the little square which determines how far the golf ball will go. I got a lot better as time went on, and actually won a game against a girl golfer in the game. In the game the women tend to make more mistakes than guys do. At first it didn't look so good.

I gave Bob the Lord of the Rings - Return of the King in DivX. He was surprised I gave him it. Usually we don't just give up CDRs unless it has a lot of important data like MP3s on it. His girl friend, Angie, wasn't home, so I actually got Bob's attention most of the time. Bob feels he has to pay attention to Angie when she's home because she'll come in the same room for Bob, and speak to him. I was friends with Bob for 7 years and now he has a girl friend that wants his attention most of the time. Bob and Angie are keeping secrets from me, although I know it's none of my business to find out what. Bob might be reading this so I dare not speculate. I know you're reading this Bob - buddy! But than again, Bob and Angie do live together. I don't live with Bob except for those times we bunked together at scout camps in the day. They both like heavy metal like Godsmack together. I find that Bob likes me for who I am and plays games that I want him to play with me. He also listens to what I have to say. We where talking about old movies like Alfred Hitchcock movies. Old westerns that include Clint Eastwood (Man with No name, The Good, The Bad, The Ugly, The Unforgiven) John Wayne (True Grit, Up to Alaska, Rooster Cogburn, The Searchers, The Train Robbers, The Alamo, Sons of Katie Elder, and The Shootist), Gregory Peck (The Bravados), and Jimmy Stewart (The Man who shot Liberty Valiant, How the West was Won) He didn't know what I was talking about half the time, so I felt he was trying to picture it the way I was picturing it. He really doesn't like Westerns, but that's because he never watched any. I left later that night. Bob and I may do something today after I go out to the driving range with Dad. Bob said he's going to pay his neighbor money for a part of a T1 line through a WI-FI adapter hooked up to his computer. They can share internet this way. I told him about the free TV service Shoutcast.com is hosting which enables Mpeg 4 streams to be watched on Winamp. He found that interesting. Bob doesn't even own a phone so the only way I can contact him is on his cell phone.

er. I hate that.

Super computers & 1 terabyte hard drives (2004-06-21 13:26)

I find it very interesting that 250 GIGABYTE hard drives have come out. We are just 5 years away from 1 Terabyte 1,024,000 Mega Bytes. Microsoft is developing a Windows environment, codenamed Longhorn, that'll be compatible with 1 terabyte hard drives. One terabyte is only done in IBM labs. IBM has the world's finest microprocessor / storage research and development (R &D) facility located here in the United States. In 1999, IBM helped make CPU for the Nintendo Gamecube called the "Gecko", and now the company making a super-processor for both Playstation 3 called the "CELL", and Microsoft Xenon. IBM also makes high density hard drives for the US Government's super computers, and NASA's space shuttle(s). The term most computer users use called multi-tasking (aka - running more than one program at the same time) has a more technical term called "parallelism". For more information on super computers read this article, http://wawa.essortment.com/supercomputer sw _ppk.htm. A super computer can theatrically process all the calculations from data feedback of a space shuttle mission for an example. The term "pipelining" is primary used in the gaming industry to describe graphic data, and polygon ratios in today's GPUs (graphic processing units). Remember GPU wasn't a computer term before 1999 (before it was only called video card), and the first video card to use 'GPU' to categorize it was the 16-MB Nvidia Geforce

256. Remember way back in late 1999 and 2000. I personally like to use gigaflops, and polygons more than pipelining. A gigaflop is a billion floating point operations per second. These terms make more sense to me. To get back on topic, this new hard drive technology is a combined effort between IBM and Seagate from what I hear on Google News. These companies developed this new platter (the rotating disc in the hard drive) called HAMR. HAMR (Heat Assisted Magnetic Recording) can start storing data beginning from one terabyte way up to 400 terabytes. <http://www.seagate.com/cda/newsinfo/newsroom/releases/article/0,1121,1503,00.html> So we'll see this technology for another 20 years until year 2024, maybe longer. I don't know but I'm perfectly happy with 120 Gigabytes of hard drive space, thinking of buying another 120 GB or 160 GB external hard drive before too long. Right now, my computer is using 45.6 Gigabytes and that's with DIVX movies saved on it. Without the DIVX movies I would have 40 Gigabytes of hard drive space used. That's with everything I use which includes 14 PC Games installed:

My DELL XPS gigabytes usage with 111 GB total hard drive space

- Unreal Tournament 2004 = 5.52 GB
- Unreal Tournament = 1.4 GB
- Anarchy Online with expansions = 1.5 GB
- Need for Speed Underground = 1.26 GB
- Diablo 2 Lord of Destruction = 1.3 GB
- Call of Duty = 1.17 GB
- Dungeon Siege - 1.1 GB
- Metal of Honor Allied Assault /w Spearhead = 1.2 GB
- Far Cry = 3 GB
- Knights of the Old Republic = 3.5 GB
- Star Trek Elite Force II = 1.8 GB
- Diablo Hellfire = 650 MB
- America's Army v2.1 = 1.8 GB
- Counter-Strike 1.6 = 800 MB

Game Data = 25.9 GB = 57 %

MP3 collection = 8.85 GB = 19 %

DivX movies = 5.33 GB = 12 %

MISC = 3.9 GB = 9 %

Windows XP Pro = 1.8 GB = 3 %

Total = 45.6 GB

As you see above I haven't filled up $\frac{1}{2}$ of my hard drive yet. I am perfectly happy with what I have now. Tigerdirect.com sells a Phantom 250 GB external hard drive. One site said that if I read a book for every day of my life for 30 years – I would accumulate 30 GB worth of text or 1 GB per year. Is he sure, because I've been writing a Modblog, and I haven't even come to a MB yet? This also depends on how many pages are in the book. I've been writing in this blog for just over 6 months, and this site has accumulated 420 KB of text. I know this because I read the Properties of my saved backup entry file I downloaded from Modblog.com. This is great - I think I'm going to publish a book in 3 years called, "My Life" by Ian C. This book would be 360 pages long, three times it is now. I'll explain how big this actually is in the easiest terms. If someone saves one page of a Microsoft Word document in ANSI or text, it would approximately be 3.5 KB. In this blog, I wrote about 120 Microsoft Word document pages of text so far if all the text was saved in TXT file, which it is.

To get back to the subject super computers, I first heard about them in the movie, Jurassic Park, where the Bio-engineering scientists use super computers to extract Dinosaur DNA strains onto blueprints. DNA strains takes days to sort out ya know? I watched "Forensic Files" on Court TV saying that scientists are using super computers to search for the stars for ET, and others want to use them to "decode" a human brain DNA strain. In 12th grade as part as Science class, my school used a heating device, and color dye to show the DNA of a carrot nuclei on paper. If the bars lined up with each other vertically than that carrot was apart of the same family of carrots. Unfortunately my carrot rotted, and fungus grew on it after being sealed away in an air tight vacuumed bag.

- 2004 – Apple releases their 80 gigabyte iPod

“WINFS” News alert!!!

Microsoft plans to develop Windows for super computers. I thought Microsoft already had an X86 platform (operating system) for super computers. Apparently Windows XP can't partition itself onto a super computer's massive hard drives. Just think about it for a minute... Super computers can probably carry 500 gigabytes or 1 terabyte of data. From my knowledge, NTFS can't handle any hard drive space more than 200 Gigabytes. This new operating system has been called Windows Server HPC Edition. There would have to be an awful lot of Windows XP partitions on a super computer like 5. Windows Server HPC Edition may have the new improved WINFS, which will partition more space at once still being as stable as NTFS. I haven't thought about it this way. Super computers primarily run a UNIX operating system. Sun Microsystems makes a Unix OS called Solaris 10.0, and that is their main backbone for server, and java applications which has support for super computers with absolutely huge hard drives, not only one, but probably 10 of them hooked up to one super computer. 200GBx10=2 terabytes. From the looks of it, NASA has 50 of them linked together on one single-mode fiber extended star topology with satellite transmission capability. Yes, I can tell all of that from a little screenshot. Think of how much space, and bandwidth that would be? I am really surprised I saw a screenshot off Google Images of these super computers. They look like servers because they are servers. 100 servers running the same program can act as one server capable of massive bandwidth. There might be 10 64-bit Intel processors in those, huge machines. NEC and IBM also make 64-bit processors. NEC's Earth Simulator has an 8 GHz processor with 4 terabytes of RAM! I know my computer is as powerful as the 1990's world's most powerful super computer. I know the consumer will have 8 GHz computers soon, but why the heck would someone need 4 terabytes of RAM? I only need 1/400th that to run my computer, and still be lightning fast in UT2004. I heard somewhere that if you knew where the super computers exact location and hacked into one, the FBI would find you and shoot you. I don't know if that's true or not.

Today I've trying to play Metal Gear Solid - The Twin Snakes again without success. I had the cheat codes on and I got pass the door by stealth. I rather use my hand gun and kill those guys. The Gamecube version has Metal Gear Solid, and Metal Gear Solid 2 Sons of Liberty in the same game, and includes extra content to help connect the two together. This was about 3 ½ hours. Then I logged into battlenet, and played Diablo 2 from 12:30 to 3:40PM. I leveled up my character, chatted with other players and talked about what the best weapons / armor is in the game. I asked some online Diablo 2 players when Diablo 3 is suppose to be released without success. I play without the map hack from Mouse Pad. Open battlenet is where everyone hacks their characters so that's not as fun. I tried it out and there are a lot of high level characters on their servers. And everyone wants to duel each other when their vitality is 99999999999999999999. That's not exactly legitable. At least no one makes a game trainer compatible with the 1.10 patch unless their hacked character was used in the v1.09 era of Diablo 2. I know they all use Shadow Master D2 character editor because I had a chance to ask a few of them. The easiest thing to say in times like these is saying, "Can you help me hack my character?" And some of them will tell you how they did theirs. I own the latest version of Shadow Master 0.87 which hacks .d2 files. I only use it when Bob comes over when we need a high level character fast. I don't like my stats maxed out because that takes all the fun out of the game, plus the game strangely fights back, and raises enemy stats 100 fold. Dad brought home a 20 pack of DVDRs for me. I thanked him for those. I plan to compress more movies into DIVX, and save them on DVD. When my parents get a new DVD player, I'll ask for one that can play DIVX movies. These DVD players are labeled with the DivX logo on the front, and they are around. The advantage of them is watching the DIVX movies I obtain from my cousin, David, and the ones I encode myself.

I like to leave little "helps" after reading a good blog, or going over the blog comments, just to start people thinking about, well, everything.

2006 is just around the corner.

Thought about what you would like to achieve next year?

Did you do all you wanted to do this year, personally, professionally and perhaps spiritually?

My guess is; probably not. Most people don't know how to set workable goals and if they do, they don't know how to manage them.

When is the last time you actually took time to write down all you would like to do and accomplish in life? Or even a few of the small things you would like to do but didn't think would be possible?

We all have the potential to get almost anything we want out of life. It just takes a little work, thinking and action.

The first step is knowing how to set effective goals and then of course, how to follow up on them. That's the hard part. Following up.

How would you like to actually make this year's New Year's Resolution come true? Of course it would have to be attainable, and possible, but you could do it if you knew how.

Curious?

Use the FREE information @ How To Set Goals and have a really GREAT NEW YEAR.

All the BEST!

I'm into the Internet software craze, are you? (2004-06-27 13:29)

Have you often wonder about tiny advances in software, the Internet is full of them. Take Winamp 5.0 for an example. Has there been any improvements between Winamp 5.01 and Winamp 5.03c? Or ItooDVD Ripper? How about Microsoft Word or Internet Explorer? What changed since Word 2000 anyways? Word is really generic I think. I use this ripper to take the problematic processes of converting VOB to AVI to DIVX and simply converting it all at once. The version I use works and the developers keep coming out with more stable versions. Same with Mozilla browsers.... I haven't seen any real change between Mozilla Firebird 0.6, and Mozilla Firefox 0.9. The browser was so well built and stable by the time Mozilla 1.0 came out that Mozilla 1.7 RC4 or Mozilla Firefox 0.9 are not that much an improvement speed wise over it. Maybe a couple hundred bugs fixes, as long as they aren't crash fixes. Remember when bugs are fixed, than new ones appear replacing old ones. Though 1.0 didn't crash that often. It sure beat using Netscape Navigator 4.8! Since 1.0, all the stable releases were already very stable. People expect Mozilla to load webpages faster with dialup than the Internet Explorer on dialup because if it's reputation it created back in 1999 and 2000. Our teacher did a speed test with Mozilla running on a Linux Box, and Internet Explorer running on Win2000. Guess who won? Mozilla. It loads web pages 1 to 3 seconds faster than Internet Explorer 6.0. Sure, new Mozilla versions load faster, and they don't crash ever, but the earlier versions were on Red Hat Linux 6.0, and were stable. Even 3 years ago Mozilla was really stable, and preformed as well as Internet Explorer. For years IE was the browser of choice for people who had dialup. In 1999 - 2000, Netscape Navigator was lacking in next generation browsing technology that IE had at the time. Then they were bought out by AOL, and formed the Mozilla foundation, the greatest thing in Internet browsing since Netscape. In fact, I'm starting to think that downloading newer versions of the same software is just overrated. One thing is for sure, I don't have to find software besides PC games off the store shelf anymore.

Software updates of course matter, when you download a new program. But downloading a new program is half the fun. Most first release programs have already set a platform for themselves. And they pop up all over in such unexpected places. I download software in web design and video rippers including several audio and video codec. I found some really cool programs that work much better than what I use to use. All thanks to the Internet. I'm being a little vague here. So I'll tell you what I'm saying. 1 Click DVD ripper is a prime example. I found this by searching on Google. It's does all the compression work for me. And I won't need to update this program. I won't have to pay 100 dollars for a program that you buy at Best Buy that does the same thing. Another example is Winamp. I can see that things have changed since the 2.91 version. Winamp also has become a free media player. I downloaded one of the first betas of Winamp 5.0 back in October 2003. Winamp 5.03c doesn't really do that much more except fix some crash bugs. Sure, the beta crashed sometimes, but all I do is listen to MP3s and download Winamp skins. Is downloading newer versions overrated? Perhaps. I re-download Winamp since the download is there to be downloaded. Same goes with Macromedia Dreamweaver MX 2004 and Paint Shop Pro 8. In Dreamweaver MX 2004, nothings changed since Dreamweaver MX that I can see. For Paint Shop Pro 8, there was little change since PSP 7.4. Maybe a few more paint brushes. I find PSP 7.4 easier to use than PSP 8.0 for some reason. Still JASC put everything I needed in the earlier version I used. Compression wise, JPEG hasn't changed at all in my mine since 2001. Someone came out with JPEG 2000, but this format isn't browser compatible. JPEG is still unbelievably compressed. It is a lot better than PNG or GIF for images that have more than 8 colors.

Here are some examples of what program that have new versions that aren't worth downloading from older versions

- From Irfanview 3.80 to Irfanview 3.91 – no difference
- From Emule 0.42d to Emule 0.43b – no difference
- From Limewire 4.0 to Limewire 4.1.1 – no difference
- From Winamp 5.01 to Winamp 5.03c – little difference in speed
- From Paint Shop Pro 7 to Paint Shop Pro 8 – very insignificant difference in speed and options
- From CDEX 4.6 – CDEX 5.1 – no difference
- From iMESH 4.0 to iMESH 4.5 – little difference in speed
- From DIVX 5.0 to DIVX 5.1.1 – no difference in video quality, speed and sound quality
- Quintessential Player 4.0a to Quintessential Player 4.5 – small difference in speed and resources
- Windows XP – Windows XP Service Pack 1 – really no difference

Nothings really that new about Half-life 2 or Doom 3 except for the new release dates. Isn't that exciting you know! If anyone was wondering why I don't keep up the updates on those games, it's because I said everything technical. Both will be drop dead gorgeous games, everyone knows that now with several screenshots seen on every gaming site including mine. Am I going to get it...yep, you bet your bootie I will. I might even drive 30 miles to Game Stop, and get both on their release date! It seems that Half-life 2 is going the way of Metal Gear Solid - The Twin Snakes. Yes, I know they are completely different games although the two titles have one similarity. Valve is going to start you off with Half-life as you'll spend several hours completing it, evacuate Black Mesa beginning your Half-life 2 maps. Half-Life built on the new Half-life 2 engine sounds very exciting. This part has been confirmed by Valve, developer of Half-life 2.

I spent last night watching a vampire movie on TNT, Salem's Lot. It was pretty good. It's a 2003 remake of the 1970's movie, and about vampires taking over a small Eastern US town. I noticed it wasn't high on budget but was directed well. It's between a B+ and A- movie. As that was going on, I reformatted my hard drive because my computer was more sluggish than it should be, even with 2 Gigabytes of RAM at my disposal. I had the Longhorn Professional shell over it, and it made my computer lag more than usual, my computer crashed more than usual. I thought it was going add programs, and make my Desktop visually updated, but in reality, all it did was goof up my computer's unities. I thought hey whatever, I'll make this PC look brand new, and run faster with a couple hours spent on reformatting NTFS, then re-installing Windows XP. Everyone's done this at one time or another. Then Mom and I watch "The Armenia Strain" on AMC. It's about an alien virus that clotted the blood cells in humans or mammals in matter of minutes. The US Department of Agriculture built a scientific underground facility which was meant to find cures for viruses. This scientific facility in particular had a bomb that would go off if any virus got out (theoretically concealing the virus)...but this virus grew as a result of hydrogen cells. The climax of this movie was when the facility was sealed off, and the main character had to disarm the bomb before it exploded, spreading the virus to other areas of the country.

Today I woke up at 11:30AM, and went downstairs to find reviews on some possible future games. My secret to find a game is a.) Always find a game that has a high review score that sounds interesting. B.) Trust reader reviews. C.) Go to Gamestats.com, read the top games list for possible candidates. More often than not they have a good game you'll be playing for 1 week or longer AKA Final Fantasy 7 / Metal Gear Solid. D.) The single important paragraph to look for in a game review is where the reviewer mention's gameplay mechanics. Without that you might end up buying a game like Dino Crisis 3 Chuckle. Chuckle. All Graphics, and nothing to show for it! E.) Look game only magazines such as Playstation Magazine or Game Informer. They have some good stuff in them - enough to raise my game IQ a few notches. Magazines you actually want to keep. I've been a game magazine collector since 1998. Some people collect car magazines, others collect Marvel Comics, while I collect Game Informer issues. Game Informer magazine is my only source (besides IGN.com) that I'm into before I buy a game. The reviews are often as well written as IGN.com's, and I like having offline reading material. I already have 50 magazines stacked up in a drawer that I'll never read again. For being a Game Stop member, I get this magazine subscription free. I go back to the Hudson game store to finally get more Playstation games. I look around, and a couple Playstation 2 games were taken I wanted. One was Onimusha 3 Demon Siege, another was Project Gotham 2, and the last one was La Pucelle Tactics (prequel to a Japanese anime RPG called Disgaea: Hour of Darkness. I played a bit of Onimusha 2, and it was very good. It played a little like Devil May Cry. Devil May Cry 2 was there for 20 bucks, but I hear it was lacking in game design from my favorite review site, IGN.com, so I didn't buy it. Wal-Mart got rid of Onimusha 3 too! I didn't check Target...oops. I'm waiting until I play Colony Wars, and Crash Bandicoot than maybe I'll get Onimusha 3. Don't get me wrong, I didn't spend more than a day on Onimusha 2 so I don't really know what the story is about except an evil force is taking over a 16th century town in the land of the rising sun. Genma is the samurai warrior that'll set things straight against the demon hordes, and kicks some serious butt constantly! The "go-all-out-with-you r-sword" idea is very innovative I thought. It's hard to explain, I like this game a lot, but I find that I prefer platform titles, MMORPGS, and first person shooters rather than this. So I decided to get Crash Bandicoot 2 and 3. I don't like Spyro the Dragon for its cutesy characters, even though the graphics are good. I question the gameplay mechanics in Spyro game. I am so use to the "T" Teen rated platformers like Jak 2 that it's hard to go back to the lesser violent games when the worlds are filled with bright colors. It was meant for a child really - yet it is so hard to control at times. None of the Spyro the Dragon games are easy, sometimes these games were frustrating. Crash is more popular and better. Crash Bandicoot sold 10 million copies of his games over here in the US, one of the big success stories of the Playstation. I didn't get the first crash because Crash Bandicoot was 2D. I don't know, but I might write a review on him. Might, might not. See I never written a review I promised with Metal Gear Solid Twin Snakes. I thought no one will want to read it so why spend time on it? I may be right. This December I'm celebrating Playstation's 10th anniversary! Two more years and I'll be celebrating N64's 10th anniversary!

Yesterday I tried out the New Coke, C2, and I thought it tasted good! C2 tastes a lot better than Diet Coke, and is as good as regular high carbonated Coke. To be more specific, C2 tastes like Coke that's warm or left out for 3 hours. I still like it non-the-less. I'm going to buy more of it. It's kind of scary what Coca-Cola put in their C2 to make up for ½ the carbohydrates, and sugars. Hey, I almost forgot about Cherry Coke. I haven't drank that stuff for over a year. Almost forgot what Cherry Coke tastes like! O-well. Maybe I'll pick up some tomorrow. ABC news reviews C2, and gave it a 2.1 out of 3. I mean what do they expect of something that has half of everything? C2 Coke got a 2.5 out of 3. I give C2 a 2.5 out of 3, and Coke a 2.7 out of 3. Mountain Dew, as always, deserves a perfect score. http://abcnews.go.com/sections/GMA/Business/Coke_taste_test_040526.html After tasting the new coke, maybe I should taste the new Pepsi Edge. Some taste reviews on the Internet say Pepsi Edge makes regular Pepsi obsolete because it's better for you than Pepsi is, and there is no real disadvantage. But in a taste test, C2 will win against Pepsi Edge hands down.

On my new webpage I'm working part time on "Ian's 512-bit generation News Page". There hasn't been any new Microsoft Xenon, Nintendo Revolution or Playstation 3 news yet so I haven't polished my site up much. I remember in 1999 and 2000, I was extremely excited to see screenshots of Nintendo's next generation console. So much that I wrote editorial after editorial on the events from 1999 - 2001. What's left (after I deleted the original webpage) is found at my personal webpage. It's just a videogame console, but still I found it fun just writing about it. I found out the specs of the processor (powerful in 2001) and it's abilities over Playstation 2. I admit the PS2 was state-of-the-art in 2000 in terms of consumer technology. Kid's asking for a DVD player specifically named Playstation 2, trying to fool their parents in thinking their not paying for a videogame console, but a DVD player from Sony. Nobody's parents are that dumb.

I often wonder why I'm alone in this world? Yes, I have my parents to talk to, and I have this blog, but something is missing in my life. My friends don't ever come over really. Randy had to go to a birthday party today. Bob doesn't answer his phone either. I am not lost. I know I have school in a couple months, but I still feel alone. I feel when I go places that I am alone, and people are just waiting for me to go crazy or something. This is untrue because most people don't want that to happen to someone. Most people in these public places don't feel they need more people in their lives. For the most part, it's better that I don't get to know people at Wal-mart, Target, the game store, or any public person because I know they don't know what to think so they'll ignore me and save their breath. While acting this way is just paranoia - I often imagine how it would be if I had someone who talked to me. And when someone does say Hi or something....I am usually speechless. In reality, I am just another customer there and nothing is out of place...everything is just peachy...and I've been just imagining things again! I wonder how many people like me feel the way I do? There has to be a lot. I prefer level minded country folk like me who just want to belong.

Well today and tomorrow I'm thinking I'm going to play Crash Bandicoot, and Colony Wars. I watched Bob play Crash Bandicoot 2 and it looked fun. Crash is one of those heroes that everyone can relate too. He's nobodies fool, which means he's not crazy, but kind of weird. Dr. Neo Cortex kind of is! That's obvious observation though. I know he's the bad guy, the villain although in the newest Crash Bandicoot game, these two characters work together against an even bigger threat - don't know what that is, sorry. I might play this game with EPSXE, might not. The good part is I can run the game at a higher resolution, but sadly it looks just as good on the computer screen as the TV.

I often wonder if I'm talented in my field, although I can see there are so many computer technicians in my state, it's impossible to keep track of whom I'm competing against this year. I know the students from talking to them (none of them want to talk about technical computer stuff with me) in class in between Joyce or Steve's conversations (they're my teachers). Not one of them knows how to emulate consoles or compress movies in DivX or similar computer stuff nor do they care about it. They (WITC industrial network technician students) don't want me to know what they do at home or what they've learned about on the computers. An example of this is when I was taking Linux terminal commands. I had to figure out the commands myself. They're about 3 dozen Linux terminal commands to memorize, and another half dozen 'switches' to remember. So to make it easier they all say they 'hate' computers, as in not use them unless it's for school. I find that false. I think that tomorrow will be a better day, and these comments will be buried deep in my brain until another day triggers them again. Probably very soon.

Well, also today I bought Battlefield 1942, an epic WWII game that unifies air, sea and ground troopers in a kill or be killed kind of way. Don't you love WAR games? I do. It's been 2 years since this game has been out, and unfortunately the game is declining in popularity. It's almost a generation old as far as PC games go. The whole game is 4 CDs which files are compressed I believe. This game is made by DICE. I'm pretty sure I can run the game at 1600x1200 at 8x anti-aliasing. I don't know how it'll play....other than it's a first person shooter. First person shooters are always welcomed in my mind. Rock on FPS!!!!

Today was great - I'm learning a lot of new thing (2004-06-30 13:30)

Playing: various country

Today I looked at Stuff5's blog, who makes a software type blog. I was thinking about doing my own with all original software of course. So my 2nd blog went online today at <http://www.ian1984software.modblog.com>. I found a nice background that looks like thunder bolts with a bluish theme. It looks nice. I wasn't too sure about what logo I should put up so I did the matrix theme since the 1s and 0s represent source code, and it's theme is very software driven I think. I started by adding my favorite software picks that I use at home in everyday life. Then I looked at updates of those software on Google, which saved me time. My first day, I made a lot of grammar mistakes because I was writing way too fast up to 8AM when I was very tired. I still had to revise some entries on this blog to make them more readable. I mean why have a blog if people can't read it properly? I plan to revise this site and get rid of the sentence fragments and the extra words. When I write when I'm tired, I misspell and add unneeded words to my first draft. I make first drafts so I can easily move paragraphs around. Sometimes I get off topic or the paragraph on a particular topic does not follow one another in sequence. So check this new blog out.

I've been a Winamp user since 1999, and I've never really got into movie streaming video, until Tuesday. Nullsoft's Winamp 5 is the second to exploit a free video service. Real Player has been doing this a long time too. Winamp is the 2nd application to put cable television out of business. This doesn't mean that I've never used streaming video before. I used Windows Media Player on Gamespot before to stream in E3 (Electronic Entertainment Expo) videos. I also downloaded some QuickTime videos at IGN.com, last one about 2 years ago. That pretty much stopped me from downloading video. It took me up to this year to realize that Nullsoft had Internet TV! Actually, I was looking at alternatives video codec to DivX or Xvid, when I accidentally came across OGG Theora [<http://theora.org>]. It was one of those rare occasions where I actually come across something very good by accident! I learned the format Nullsoft is using, OGG Theroa, which is almost as compressed as MPEG 4 from what I read. VP3 codec, which is apart of OGG Theroa, is completely open source so Nullsoft won't have to pay licensing fees for video compression. Actually OGG Theroa codec hasn't been released yet. I don't know what extension OGG Theroa will have. This means free video streams for everyone! Yay! Unfortunately, it takes 2 minutes to actually show something over my modem. This format hasn't even put into an application yet, it's early in the beta. I downloaded the source code too. I don't have the required compilers to compile it. Nullsoft could support some Xvid streams (Xvid supporters don't need a license to use it). That would be extremely cool! I don't see why they couldn't do both? Actually, when you type in the URL into Winamp's "open file" window box, it'll stream in that file in real time for ya! For this sort of thing, I use Quintessential Player instead of Winamp for the ripping feature. This puts Windows Media Player at a disadvantage, streaming the smallest resolution. MPEG has got to be 10 years old, obsolete, and Microsoft is still using it as their primary video codec. WMA is okay I guess. I don't hate it. I haven't decided if I like it or not. MPEG streams are better than nothin' so I don't complain. I am so use too MPEG 4 codec now that MPEG just seems obsolete. Using the codec is just as easy as going to DivX.com or Xvid.com, and downloading the newest codec.

DivX - (v5.1.1) http:// www.divx.com/divx/
Xvid (v1.01) - <http://www.xvid.org/downloads.html>

All the codec are designed to be compatible with Windows Media Player anyways. So far, I know Microsoft is developing the next generation of video called XMA, this new video format is going to be used with the Xenon console. So no one will see this codec used for streaming video for a while, sorry video compressing dudes! Remember the more advanced the codec, the more CPU power it takes to compress it.

Okay, okay, I'm being dead obvious here, but it took me 6 hours to compress Lord of the Rings - Return of the King in DivX in slow setting (the slower the compression process, the better compressed, and image quality the video is) I should try Xvid MPEG 4 codec sometime in the near future. I went to Afterdawn.com, and looked up Xvid vs. Divx, and I get results saying Xvid is better against DivX 3.11 (sometimes called DivX (with smiley), an illegal codec), but compresses bigger files than DIVX 5.1.1 Pro (free legal codec). In case you were wondering, with DivX 5.1.1 codec, I compressed the first 1 hr 35 minutes of Lord of the Rings - The Two Towers at 800x600 (470 KBPS) at 477 MB - enough to be put on CD. The video was a little pixilated (blocky), but the sound was good (I used LAME mp3 codec at 192 KBPS). The blockiest will go away if I set the KBPS up to 700, but that will increase file size quite a bit. So the DIVX file size of Return of the King was 910 MB compared to David's videos he got off Kazaa, which were approximately 650 - 700 MBs each. I'm starting to figure out how to get video at a good resolution below 700 MB. (make the resolution 420x360 at 420 KBPS.)

I tried out Crash Bandicoot 2, and it was a fun game. I love Crash... now I just have to figure out why I love him! Yeah, I know, Crash is a 2 legged dog with big eyes and his tongue is stinking out. I played and beaten Naughty Dog's famous PS2 platformer, Jak and Dexter. Very colorful graphics I must admit. The game engine was above average at the time too for PS2 standards. Pretty soon all you'll really care about is if a game is high resolution or not? If not true now, it will be come 2005 when your wondering which console to buy. Most games are not suppose to look like Final Fantasy X or Metal Gear Solid 3 because those games are exceptionally good. I got this CD that allows me to watch DivX movies on Playstation 2 called Action Replay MAX Evo Edition! It cost me 40 dollars to get, but it might be worth it after all. The first movie I tested was Monty Python and The Holy Grail which worked. The movie was a little blocky though.

On Sunday, I've been reading a little about Modchips for my PS2. I found this software, called the HDD loader [it's on Modchip.com] which will rip the PS2 DVD onto any external serial-ATA hard drive, and play the game as a virtual drive (DVD-ROM emulation). Only 40 dollars! For the software and some Ethernet to USB adapters I assume. Wow! I want it. The possibility of PS games also works with this feature, from what I read off Modchip.com. I uploaded 950 MB worth of movies on my USB 2.0 drive, and it took 8 minutes to upload. If I had HDD Loader, I would go to Bob's house, upload his games, and play them on this virtual drive for PS2. I have a confession to make. See for PS1 games, I just pop it into my DVD-ROM on my PC, and play them on EPSXE. After all it's free! EPSXE works a whole lot better than PCSX v1.5 ever did. It not only works...I wonder if someone who programmed for Playstation games helped design the emulator. The Japs are good for that ya know? They talk funny with their heavy accent but no one can deny they make the best videogames in the world.

I wouldn't make any sense for me to buy a mod-chip for PSone now. I bought my first Playstation in February 2002 when Playstation emulation was already possible on PC, Linux and MAC. I remember I was playing with Bleem once. I hate Bleem, it never worked well.

Yesterday, Bob invited me to his apartment. It's been too long since last time we met. I've been getting a little bored with nothing to do at my house. When I walked in the door, he had his Slipknot really loud. Laurence and him talking about swimming nude (for jokes). Not exactly a fruitful discussion. A nudist pool party for men, and I thought, "Whoa, not for me, man." I know there were just joking, else I would have left. Bob's dad is going to put off a show on the 4th of July. The fireworks he's going to use up is worth 2000 dollars. That is if I go. Problem is all I would be doing is being in a shallow pool and getting wet. Problem is I don't like extremely loud fireworks, and that's what fireworks are, extremely loud. What's the point? His Dad, Dan, is going have a $2500 firework night with some heavy metal going in the background. His dad has a lot of fireworks he bought by groups which he sells to other people, but this year he has a bunch left over. In Wisconsin, fireworks are perfectly legal, and in Minnesota you can't have them....at least not in town. To most cities' fireworks are considered explosive material which can start fires - thus considered illegal to own privately. Out in the country, away from the police, people might get away with it. In fact, they do...the sound gives it away....unless the county sheriffs don't care. Wisconsin is filled with firework businesses. The best one I know of is the one by Fleet Farm in Hudson. There must be 3 million dollars worth of fireworks in that tent. Some people order fireworks by volume, while the majority just buy a little of everything. There are as many people trying to get rid of fireworks as there are businesses that try selling them in bulk. The only limit on fireworks is how far they go up in the air. However in Wisconsin, there are licensed firework gun pouter organizations that get paid to by smaller towns to put on a good show. There are plenty of towns up by Siren, Wisconsin who would pay a lot of money to have a firework show.

Bob says we'll have a 80s party next time I'm over. We'll play Atari 2600 and NES. This might mean I have to wear jeans for once. I never wear jeans. I mainly wear baggy cargo pants. It's what's in! Bob has Tetris, Frogger, Pacman, Pong for Atari and Super Mario Bros, Tetris, Legend of Zelda and Metal Gear for his NES. Bob gets defensive about Atari when I say anything negative about it. We're also going to listen to 80s heavy metal bands like Poison, Guns 'n Roses, Aerosmith, Kiss, and ACDC. I told him that I could bring my PC over, and bring JNES or Z26, and play some of those games. Bob has 2 NES, 2 Atari 2600s, a Genesis, and a Sega CD add-on for Genesis. Hehehe. Bob once thought SEGA CD was going to be popular when it failed miserably in sales. There wasn't time for games to come out for it. Sega CD was there (next best thing), and 6 months later it vanished. I saw one at Toy's 4 Trade and I saw the poor game selection and thought, "This is exactly why nobody buys the thing." Bob nearly forgot that Genesis came out in 1989, so playing it would be legit. Personally, I hate staring at Atari 2600 graphics. I have Z26 (Atari 2600 Emulator for Windows), and 20 ROMs. Atari 2600 roms are really small, only 10K each compressed. They're so simple that I hate playing them. Period. You won't get me near an Atari 2600, ever. You can find them at fan sites which are dedicated to remember ancient computer hardware. I mean these people probably hug their Ataris, and keep it in plastic bags. Bob's not this type of fanatic, both of his Ataris are in a box somewhere at his dad's house collecting dust.

I talked about the upcoming consoles to Bob. I wanted to amuse him, anything to make things over there more interesting! I told him that in 2005, Microsoft may release it's new console.

I showed him Colony Wars (PS game) by showing him the tough level I was on. That's not what's important. What's important is he thinks the game is uninteresting. He and I played a little Tekken 4, which I whopped his ass in. Then we played Tokyo Extreme Racer Zero. After that, Bob and I played SSX 3, which we scored even on the racing and tricks modes. He thought the techno / rap tracks in SSX 3 were really cool. Bob hates rap. He has surround sound at his house, upper range Dolby Digital 5.1 Surround Sound. We just had to play a little Gran Turismo 3 - A Spec before I went. Gran Turismo 3 was one of the first high profile racing titles for PS2. That is if you considered Ridge Racer V a high profile game in 2000? I thought RRV was only medium profile. I wasn't playing that game, only Bob and Laurence. Bob was getting tired so I went back to my house, brought back Bob's DVD collection. I wasn't because I had 4 cans of cream soda. Bob, in return, gave me new DVDs like the Matrix and Goldmember to rip to my hard drive with my favorite ripper, 1Click DVD Ripper v2.03. Frankly, I don't need Gordon Codec package anymore. Gordon Codec Package had Virtual Dub, DIVx codec, AVI splitters, Vob rippers, etc. All that stuff I used when I first used DivX seven months ago - times have gotten better since then. I was weary about using 8 GB of hard drive space for each video, now I didn't need take time to copy the movie than compress 'desktop video'. No offense to Linux, and open source software, but I will use any software that works well for me, open source or not. I understand there is this thing about sharing source code, and being close to the GPL license. The whole idea that software should not cost anything, only the media it's on should cost. I am little confused by venders, such as Red Hat, which make you pay 100 dollars for open source software. Red Hat is supposed to be the best at what they do, and you pay for it. But in my opinion it's worth it, and cost me no money so I'm not complaining. Yet, the profit organizations like Red Hat are not as greedy as Microsoft. Microsoft has 100 % closed source in their OS, and that makes them own 100 % of all the source code, so 100 % of the profit goes straight to Microsoft. I don't know why how you can call Microsoft's OS state-of-the-art? Linux venders release new versions every 6 months with updated software. Problem with Linux is it has required files too, and sometimes these files do not come with the OS, so a lot of times executable packets won't install. That's the sad part. That's where tar.gz files come in. Sometimes these uncompressed great, and the programs run without the OS thinking it needs runtime files to extract the files automatically. Mozilla is a great example of this. All versions run great on any Linux whether they come in a RPM file or tar.gz file. I really, really want to install Red Hat on my Dell, but Dells are anti-Linux machines. My PC literally blocks Linux out, and I have no clue why it does that. It's a mystery. I called Dell tech support and they said they don't support Linux at all.

I think today I'm going to attempt to install Linux on my Dell, Red Hat 9.1. But first I tried Knoppix since that doesn't save partitions to the hard drive. I fiddle with the BIOS setting until it boots. This way there is little chance I'll loose Windows XP. RAID has to be on OFF for this to work I think. Why the hell does the computer think there is a virus when RAID is ON? My Dell PC hates Linux! I think I said this before. I want Red Hat Linux installed on my fastest computer at home, and it blocks it out...for no good reason. I'm pissed off at Dell now.

Today, I've been watching Rocky and Rocky II on AMC. Both are good movies. Sylvester Stallone gave one of his best performances in Rocky. This movie made boxing cool. He really acts like a bum from the ghetto trying to make something of himself. He's showing off his street smart attitude in boxing. Rocky was a little better than Rocky II.

Summer vacation is great, I can watch TV all day or look on the Internet all day for stuff, download music over my modem - never have to go anywhere I don't want too. It'll be this way for another month and 1/2! I found this really cool webpage with abandon-ware games on it (really old and abandoned software), and I want to go to school to download them. Downloading games off the Internet, someday I'll look back 20 years from now and say, "Wow, where did I find this game." knowing I'll always have it. I may find a 'diamond in the ruff' on one of these abandon-ware websites (not ROM sites). A good example are these freeware Sonic the Hedgehog games that resemble the Genesis era. I am looking for a RPG game that has good graphics comparable with the NES, SNES era graphics that some talented programmers made. Like most of my games, they're probably sitting on my shelf stored on CD somewhere. I have a couple 'diamond in the ruff' videogames including Final Fantasy 7, Final Fantasy Chronicles, Final Fantasy 9, Mega Man 2, Donkey Kong Country, NiGHTS, Mega Man X4 and X6, Castlevania - Symphony of the Night, Super Mario 64, Legend of Zelda - Ocarina of Time, Conker's Bad Fur Day, Goldeneye. Pretty soon all the N64 games will be considered old school games, and I'll be talking about when I'm 30 years old saying, "Yeah, I've played that game, and I still own it." Most people are just the opposite whom sells their old games to get more trade in credits for new games. All the newer games are is games that have graphical improvements. But that's alright, I have bought the newer ones too. I have this bad habit of partially playing through one game only put it down for another game. I have memories of buying Super Mario 64 for 70 dollars in 1997 - expensive game, wasn't it? I also remember the flashbacks when SNES, and Sega Genesis were still available at Wal-Mart. I don't remember seeing Sega Saturn games though, even in 1998, when it was taken off shelves. No one likes the Saturn anyways so it is not worth thinking about anymore.

I thought about going to Florida to live. I don't know what town to live at? I only know that I rather live where it's Summer year around. I hear taxes are more in Florida, but maybe I'll find a rural area to live. That will mean I won't inherit my parent's house. I want to eventually get all the land from my parents cheaply than I can concentrate on electricity, gas, water, sewage costs. It would be nice if I could pay low monthly payments while living in a bigger house. I would have to mow the lawn, and cut down trees with a chainsaw and stack them myself. If I get a wife than she might want to go somewhere else, and I want to live inexpensively so I can save money, and perhaps put money away some towards retirement. I've just started research on Floridian towns today.

Okay, I know my entry is getting a little long - and well - I like long entries because I have a lot to say. It looks like I was completely wrong about Monkey Audio (lossness audio) replacing MP3. My apologies. It looks like WMA (Windows Media Audio) is quickly replacing MP3 on the Internet. I've have some of it on my computer, like most of my Planetary Radio broadcasts. A 30 minute broadcast can be compressed to 6.5 MBs. That's extremely small and the quality is like AM radio. It can easily be streamed with modem users and still give better quality than Real One (formally known as Real Player) using the same broadcast. It makes RAM (Real One's Streaming audio format) broadcast obsolete. I know this because I have Real One, and RAM doesn't sound as great as WMA or MP3 streams. MP3 Pro is a commercial MP3 codec that is suppose to sound better at 24 KBPS or 64 KBPS than LAME mp3 codec. However, it's just a slight difference. LAME's sound has improved a lot since 1999, and there isn't any static or pauses in the sound anymore. I remember using LAME when it first was released, and there was a lot more static and sound glitches in the music than there should have been. From 1994 - 1998 MP3 was used just in Internet audio streams by commercial radio stations. I heard somewhere that FHG for a long time was the only MP3 codec that existed. FHG was the first MPEG codec. MPEG codec was in beta for much longer than the MP3 codec. That's because compressing video in real time uses much more CPU power. Today is much different, everyone with a decent computer can make video in real time if it's not compressed too much. I mean while still retaining the high quality image. That's why AVI is so popular now-a-days. Which format can be the most compressed in real time? The answer to that is AVI. I found that MPEG 4 TV compressors have come out, and compress TV shows in real time. If you get the ones that can connect to your computer to use as hard drive space, it'll cost only 100 dollars to get those. I don't know what TIVO uses to compress it's video? Does it use MPEG 2? TIVOs are getting popular, my mom wants one for Christmas.

This is Ian signing off.

I'm impressed, I must say. Rarely do I encounter a blog that's equally educative and entertaining, and without a doubt, you have hit the nail on the head. The problem is an issue that not enough folks are speaking intelligently about. Now i'm very happy that I came across this during my search for something regarding this. Going to see Fireworks up North in timberland coun (2004-07-02 13:31)

Welcome back ya'll. I'm listening to Moutgomery Gentry. His country is catchy, just like Brooks and Dunn and Garth Brooks. His "Hillbilly Shoes" song sounds great, and so does "Daddy won't sell the Farm". Somethin' new must have come over me, I'm listening to country again. My friend listens to country. My favorite country song of the moment, "Joe Diffie - The 3rd Rock from the Sun." It went like this. I had always had country mp3s and was a fan of country when I was a kid. As I 'matured,' I listened to alternative than went on to 93X (a local rock station) Country is as big as heavy metal over here, possibly a little more... we have 5 country music stations on FM. Ye-ha! 93X and country is all what my friend, Randy, listens too.

Wednesday was a good day, having 99 hits total. Wow, I remember once when I had 115 hits one day, but that was the most I ever had here. Usually I get about 75 hits in a day. It doesn't look like "Ian's Smashing Good Software Blog" will be as successful here as I thought. I won't put energy into it if no one comes to it. I rather spend more resources on this blog since it expresses me, not software. I'll leave it up to Stuff5 to do that sort of thing. I wish I could somehow delete it. I had asked iMike to delete it because he owns this site. I'll continue to just add freeware of the day picks to the bottom of each entry on this blog. It makes more sense to have everything under one roof so to speak.

On Thursday I was playing Rayman 3 - Hoodlum Havoc. I bought it for 20 dollars. I had a couple choices in mind. Return to Castle of Wolfenstine for Xbox is suppose to be really good for what you pay for it. I own the PC version which was above average for a first person shooter (mainly because it was developed by the same team that made Quake 3 Arena, iD Software.) in 2001. From what I seen in X-fire gaming chat client, this game has held it's own strength against newer competition. I gave it up because there were plenty of other games to get into. Another choice on my list was Crash Bandicoot for PS2, but I heard that game had sloppy design, and was the worst Crash Bandicoot ever. Universal Interactive bought the franchise, made it multi-platform, and put Traveler's Tales in charge instead of Naughty Dog. This sort of saddens me because Crash was a funny character, and Traveler's Tails ruined it by giving it poorly budgeted and sloppy design. I hear it runs on middleware engine, Renderware. Renderware is primary made to give decent graphics for a game that can be ported to several consoles all at once while not breaking the bank. Anyways, to get back to my subject on Rayman 2, which is the only platform game I had for Dreamcast. I beat that game. Rayman is one of those characters who is funny, strange, but didn't disappoint me. I didn't max out my score on that game. I hear the Dreamcast version looks better than the PC version and PS2 versions. The PS2 version was called Rayman 2 - Revolution. Anyways, unlike Rayman 2, Rayman 3 has a lot of mini-games inside it including skateboarding, and frying around with Mury, whos Rayman's fairy companion. All the main characters talk in this game unlike the silent Rayman in Rayman 2. There are more lighting effects in Rayman 3, and Rayman has much more polygons added to him than before. Rayman is French, but Rayman is the only French character I won't boycott. I might own the PC game once I can find Rayman 2 for PC. I thought I saw it at Wal-mart for 20 dollars. I have a powerful enough PC that this game would look splendid. PC is my preferred platform, and I don't have a platform game for it yet. Gamestop.com says that Rayman 2 was a revolutionary game. The Dreamcast game was really colorful, and was in high resolution. Remember I said it doesn't matter how much a game is along as it's in high resolution, it still holds true to Rayman 2's polished gameplay.

I also downloaded a text-to-voice speech program called CoolSpeech 5. The digital voice speaks to me with what's ever on the clipboard or text file. In my opinion, the computer voice is bad, it's using Microsoft's Text to Speech 4.0.3 engine, which is using out-dated technology. What blew me away is the computer voice knows how to sound out all English words, and attempts to put incest on comas, periods, explanation points. However, with numbers and URLs, 'she' speaks every letter. This is bad. CoolSpeech 5 can also save the text file to WAV spoken with her voice than I use CDEX to compress the wave file to 96 KBPS MP3. No noticeable sound is lost in the compression process. I've spent half the day finding better 'commercial text-to-speech' engines that sounded better than Microsoft's text-to-speech engine. I had no success on this. IBM allows me to download the software. However, there is this amazing text-to-speech demo at <http://www.rhetorical.com/cgi-bin/demo.cgi>. Its sounds so real like a woman's voice, it scares me. Then I downloaded IBM's Home Page Reader. I thought, "Hmm, maybe IBM will have a better text-to-speech engine than Microsofts because the company is so well known for their development projects." Except this program wasn't very good, it sounded worst then Cool Speech 5. I really want software with the rhetorical speech engine.

This comes to Friday where I've been ripping videogame music off Shoutcast.com. Videogame music is a required taste, it's not something anyone can pick up. The game internet station I was on usually plays Final Fantasy or similar RPG tunes. I can also rip Playstation audio to MP3 using my favorite PS ripper - actually it's the only one that can. PSX Multi-converter to rip the audio files to wav then I convert the songs to WAV and use CDEX to make MP3s. I can't hear any sound improvements at 160 KBPS. This is a better idea than using Digital Sound Recorder to rip the files to WAV than compressing it to MP3. The songs in Ridge Racer 4 are cool, not all, but the first few tracks.

I'm downloading Sonic CD off Emule so I can see if I can burn it to CD, and make it work with Gens, my preferred Genesis emulator. I will need a SEGA CD BIOS for the CD to work. If this turns out than I can say I emulated the Sega CD. It's funny to remember back when I first got my Genesis roms to work, about 5 years ago. Then I take the next step, which is emulating the Dreamcast demos only. The Virua Fighter Sega 32X ROM DOES WORK. SO I DID EMULATE THE SEGA 32X! Congratulations to me for finding a Sega 32X ROM! They are even more RARE than N64 ROMS, and Sega CD ISO images are more RARE than Sega 32X roms.

On Saturday, I brought only my PS2 and Gamecube up to Cozy Corner, WI. Dad didn't bring anything and Mom brought a lot of food. We brought our brown lab, Ruby, with us. My aunt's cabin was up by Cozy Corner, WI, 15 miles pass Siren, Wisconsin. Siren had a F5 class tornado go through it two years ago, and flatten down town. People who lost everything got free housing, although smaller, and less expensive then the original housing. I don't know much about it except the on detour during the July 4th parade, trees were pulled from out of the grown from the tornado on Independence Day. The trip took us about 2 ½ hours, which is only 1/4 of the Wisconsin map. We went through 2 counties. The fireworks were cool. The people that went were my Aunt Judy and Uncle Jim, their daughter, Penny and her son, Lars, her husband, Mark and Lars friend, Kyle. We where up by the train tracks with our lawn chairs. Then the train comes and everyone gets off the tracks. The train comes through with 65 freight cars which was only 10 feet away from where I was. The wind picked up very quickly. That was the closest I've ever been to a train. The train almost looked as if it was going to tip over us, and didn't. I've been here before 2 years ago. There was much more people here and a lot more fireworks. This time it was the longest of any year the town put out. The whole fireworks get paid off from charity from the year before. I learned that fireworks are little round balls wrapped with gun powder. The gun powder ignites which gives the fireworks itself. The color dye of course makes the color. The ball is then wrapped with several layers of paper like material so that different fireworks explode at different times. Fireworks are rated from M1 to M20. M1 – M6 are the ones anyone can buy while the M7 – M20 are the commercial fireworks only licensed firework handlers can buy. The M17 – M20 are the huge fireworks that the town uses. Fireworks shoot out of pipe cannon when the rope is fused, and the lever is pushed. Jim bought me Miller Genuine Draft! I drank half of it, and poured the rest out. I couldn't finish it. This was the most beer I had in my entire life. I wondered if this is what cheap beer tastes like, then what does good beer taste like? During the firework show there were some people that kept shouting "Yeah! More! More!" And a lot of whistles. Crazy spectators they were! It figures that spectators were still on the tracks watching the fireworks show. I know my aunt wanted to stay up on the tracks. No one was suppose too although they did anyways.

Back at Jim's cabin, Jim let the dogs out, and he shot off 20 or so fireworks. Five of them were the roman bombs that made a big bang. 10 were Roman candles. And the last five were the ones that automatically shot off a couple of fireworks one after another for effect. I hooked up the Gamecube that night. Lars and I played "Super Smash Bros. Melee" then I showed him "Viewtiful Joe". He didn't know what Viewtiful Joe was. He's better at this game than I am. I haven't had a chance to play it much. He can talk a lot. Way too much for a 10 year old. Then I was up all night in my bunk (I was sleeping above Kyle) trying to figure out how to get down from the top bunk. I was afraid I was going to hurt myself. All night I pondered why I didn't try to get to know some cute girls. And then I thought maybe it's extremely foolish to do this. I slept with my pants on. However, I took my socks off since they were a little damp. I drank a lot of soda pop that night. The bathroom smelt like iron water which smelled like sewage. This was the only bad thing about Jim's cabin.

Jim's a nice person, obviously because he invited us. They live on the same street as us. Last time David and I pitched a tent and we slept out there with the bears, mosquitoes, and deer. I hated fireworks more than I do now. I actually made a full recovery from my fear of fireworks! Cool, eh?

On Sunday, I woke up at 3:30 AM, when the sky wasn't lit yet. I played a little F-Zero GX which I did pretty well in. The game looked better then I remember. I played awful hitting every corner. Soon, I got better at it and stayed in the center of the track 90 % of the time. I packed the Gamecube in my black leather carrying bag. Then I went out and into my Mom's Jeep to listen to my MP3 player alone so I'm sure no one can hear my music (sometimes there is noise that leaks through my headset). First, I listened to Ridge Racer music I copied on Friday. Then I listened to country (Garth Brooks, Big and Rich, etc) than I listened to some techno. I don't think my parents know I listen to techno. Ruby was wondering where I was so she got excited, whining anxiously at the door. I slept in the chair for 4 hours which wasn't that comfortable. Lars wanted me to bring out PS2 so we played Virua Fighter 4, Tekken 4 and Gran Turismo 3 - A Spec. Lars said he wanted to tag team mode in Tekken 4 - I wasn't brushed up on my skill too much so Lars pushed a lot of buttons, and got me pinned down finally. I still can't believe Lars made it my choice. I also believed it was my system and my games so I had exclusive rights to pick which games to play. I just don't know. I've been making a lot of choices in games lately. Sure, it's really easy for me to pick which game to play. I made a come back and kicked butt for 3 wins in a roll, but with my health depleted, I couldn't win the last round against him. Jim made me bangles before I left. Everyone at Jim's house that was left played Scrabble. I won once, because I play defense mostly. I must think like an adult then. All and all, I didn't like that game. It got too boring. Mom had to kick my leg for me to remember to pick up a card after each deal. I wasn't rude the first day, but I was rude in the morning because I was grumpy from not getting enough sleep I think. Jim didn't like that. When we got home I went straight to bed.

This is Ian signing off.

Next Gen consoles to look like Unreal Engine 3.0? (2004-07-07 13:38)

Hello again, today's topic is about the Athlon 64 3200. It's a simple question. Do I invest into Pentium 4 or the more powerful Athlon 64? Athlon 64s run hotter than Pentium 4s which means they might burn up if you over clock them too much. I know I'm getting 1 GB of SDRAM for my Athlon 64. I owned my first Pentium 4 PC (clocked at 3.2 GHz.) This runs games like Unreal Tournament 2004 really well. I have to use my older video cards. I am really excited to get a 512 MB Geforce 4 6800 sometime. ATI and Nvidia are the big players in videocards. Nvidia is leading in technology. I know why too...the new games are more compatible with Geforce than Radeon thus the numerous glitches. A few examples are Spellforce: Order of the Dawn and Halo: Combat Evolved. A Radeon on Pentium 4s are better than a Geforce on AMD Athlon XP CPUs. I have personal experience on this, so I almost know what I'm talking about here. I had difficulty running Halo on my Athlon XP computer for whatever reason. The patches failed to fix the glitch. Unreal Tournament 2004 had a little trouble running at the higher resolutions on my Geforce FX 5600 but with average CPU power (2.1 GHz). The frame rate was down to 25 FPS at 1600x1200.

To get back to Athlon 64, they say that the performance is 8 % higher than a Pentium 4 that is about 1 GHz more powerful. This is done to drive the costs down to a mainstream price. Athlon 64 3200s are expensive right now...like $450 for the processor. These Athlon 64s run really hot at 2.2 GHz, but they're more powerful than any Pentium 4 out. Intel has a 64-bit processor though it's so out of anybody's price range that's it not a question of what the benchmarks are...it's a question of who is willing to pull out the doe for it. Athlon 64s are really only for gamers, but I'm a gamer so that makes me worthy of an Athlon 64! My parents know my reason and they agree with me on this. The specs behind the bus speed of Athlon 64s is 1600 MHz compared to Pentium 4's 800 MHz. That's twice the CPU power! That would hold true if the GHz were the same which they aren't. But if they were than what I said would be true. Athlon 64s need an extremely large fan to cool it off. The power requirements are more. When I get an Athlon 64....it's going to be off tigerdirect.com so I can save some money.

Today I've reinstalled Diablo 2 Lord of Destruction, and was going to be playing it today. My account is still on-line and I was playing online a couple hours this morning. I leveled up my character from level 75 - level 77. Nothing really special today as far as my character goes. I don't have any armor sets on her. Not even the low level character armor sets. An armor set includes boots, armor, gloves, helms, swords, shields, staffs, bows, etc of a particular name in the game for an example, Tal Rasha's Armor Set. The armor set has bonus points that go to the Vitality, Strength, Dexterity, or Mana automatically. In my frame of thinking, having an entire armor set is just to say you have it. But if you DO have a good armor set than more power too ya! I always concentrate on getting the best possible damage with what I get free from drops or free trades. I can make it to act 5 (hell difficulty) by myself which says a lot about me. I don't have 4 accounts with 4 or 5 characters on each nor do I have accounts on several servers. I spend all my time with one character until it reaches a high level like 70 or so before I move on to another character. You'll understand this if you've played Diablo 2. If you haven't, you should, it's an extremely well done game. I don't play as much as anymore. I use to play Diablo 2 every day after school.

Earlier - I was playing Mega Man 2, 3 and 6 today on Playstation 2! It is possible finally to own all these games on DVD! I have a Mega Man anthology now, and what a wonderful anthology it is! My friend Bob will want to borrow it now, more than likely! But it's all mine! The midis in these are cool and very 'oldschool' so to speak. I've been playing it for a bit today before I finished version one of this entry. The games are quite difficult. I know I most people don't get the games right off the bat, but these games are special. They saved me a lot of money. I could have bought 6 Mega Man games for NES which would have cost me 4 times as much. Now I have Mega Man 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, Power Battles 1, 2, X4, X6, and the rest are computer ROMS. My favorite Mega Man game is Mega Man 2. It has the best sound of any Mega Man game for the NES. I haven't had the chance to play them all so I don't know which one is the best. I have a feeling I'll soon find out. I heard that the PS2 game, Mega Man X7, is hard as hell to finish. My skill level is beginner in these 'oldschool' games. I can't get my hand on the d-pad on the dual shock II controller very well, thus being open to air attacks are what is known today as 'cheap shots'.

I went to school yesterday to download the huge Battlefield 1942 patch which is a huge 250 MB download off 3Dgamers.com. I'm afraid to play Battlefield 1942 before I've installed the patch. Actually, I'm thinking of playing this game after I go to the gaming store at noon today. The one in Hudson, WI opens up at 11:00 AM. I hope they have something good. I don't expect them to give me hints on which game to buy. The choice is always mine in which game to buy. I do research. I will have to decide if I rather get Baldur's Gate Deadly Alliance II for Xbox in River Falls today or buy another N64 for 20 dollars. I am always looking at the greatest hits collection but I have all the highly rated videogames for the PS2's greatest hits. Maybe I'll get Silent Hill 3 or Dark Cloud 2 for PS2 today if I can find a copy. I can not be sure what is there. What games are there today is unlikely to be there the next time around. It'll really depend if I'm in RPG mood or Mature (mood shooting the undead and weird gory creatures) mood. Kicking ass with a gun.

[2 hours later] I came home from the Game store. Games 4 trade had Mega Man Anniversary Collection on the shelf, although I already bought it 10 minutes before at Target. So I didn't see any game I wanted to spend my money on so I left. There was a 16 year old at the cash register, and I didn't want to really speak to him. I don't feel I want to over-complicate game talk by talking about which game is cool and not, he's here to sell games, not to talk about them. I hate those people. I didn't leave empty handed, I went over to Target, and bought Project Gotham Racing 2 for the Xbox. Project Gotham Racing 2 is probably the best racing title for Xbox, not to mention the most detailed. I think I'll play this game next week. Now if only I had someone to play with me besides the CPU. I decided not to get a another N64 and/or Baldur's Gate Deadly Alliance II (Bob wants this game badly for PS2)

Anyways, my friend Bob won't be able to hang out with me this week because he won't have any free time he says until this weekend. Randy is working a lot this week so I won't see him either. We usually visit each other at his house after work. He's the one that's working...I'm the one home...really, really bored Randy is like me with side burns, and a short hair cut - this is normal in Wisconsin. Not to worry, the hickish past of Wisconsinites has gotten much smaller. (No offence to my friends and family) Wisconsinites like I have joined the rest of the nation (we have the oldest phone systems in the country from the late 80s early 90s), but we do have people coming from the Twin Cities to live out where I am. I hate Minnesotan's driving skills when they're in Western Wisconsin. First they go 55 MPH than 45 MPH than up to 50 MPH than 55 MPH again on the highway by our house all the way to Hudson or River Falls. We have a lot of hills in our country so most people go a little slower up hills...I understand this. Our area has been built up a lot in the pass few years. Farm fields of the mid-90s now look like small villages in themselves.

I have some horrible news, Ultima X, the game that I thought I was going to get into this fall is canceled. IGN.com confirmed it this week. I was going to buy this game because it seems that Ultima Online is doing well and has many followers. Ultima X is the sequel to Ultima IX which was released in 1999. The Ultima X was running on the first Unreal Engine used in Unreal Tournament (1999), the developer enhanced it quite a bit which included higher resolution textures and a 3D roaming RPG game play which is new to Ultima franchise. I don't know much about it since I haven't seen Ultima Online in stores.

Now these are the believed console specs of both Microsoft's code-name Xenon console (which has been leaked on the Internet), and the two versions of Nintendo code-named "Revolution" console. Nintendo has confirmed company partnership with ATI and NEC while Microsoft has switched from Intel to IBM to create their new processor.

- SPOILERS BELOW-

Microsoft Xenon Confirmed Specs - [<http://news.spong.com/detail/news.asp?pr id=6994>]

Power PC based IBM 3.5 GHz Processor, 256 MB of RAM, 256-bit ATI graphics chip 500 MHz, 46-billion texture operations per second ????, Dual-layer DVD format running on 24x DVD-ROM, 10/100 BASE T Ethernet, external hard drive, 64 MB flash memory

Current XBOX SPECS

Intel Pentium 3 at 733 MHz, 128-bit Nvidia Geforce 3 processor clocked at 250 MHz also called XGPU, 64 MB of SDRAM running at 200 MHz, DVD-format (4.7 GB), texture bandwidth 3.2 MB, 10 GB hard drive, 10/100 BASE T Ethernet

Nintendo Revolution Rumored Specs

Prototype A : Power PC based on NEC's 2.7 GHz processor ("Gecko 2A"). 512 MB of RAM and 600 MHz ATI graphics chip (Flipper 2A?) Nintendo Gameboy Advance and Nintendo DS connectivity. 15 GB hard drive

Prototype B : Allegedly featured dual 1.8GHz PowerPC G5 processors called Gecko 2B. 256MBS of DDR Main Memory RAM, 128MBS of GDDR3 Video RAM, and a 500MHz graphics chip called Flipper2B. 15 GB hard drive

Current Gamecube Specs

485 MHz IBM "Gecko" Processor based on 0.18 micron technology, 24 MB RAM, 64 MB ATI Graphics Chip at 162 MHz developed by ArtX called Flipper, Texture Cache 1 MB, 10.5 Gigaflaps floating point. Sound system called Muzy X created by Factor 5, 8 inch mini-DVD media (1.5 GB capacity), 24-bit color.

I know that Nintendo will come out as second place when they release their console. Rumors are the "Super Mario 128" platform game will be one of Revolution's launch titles, not Gamecube. Nintendo has a great software list including Legend of Zelda - The Wind Waker, Metroid Prime 1 and 2, Resident Evil [0, remake, 4,] Orcania of Time Bonus Disc, Mario Kart Double Dash, Viewtiful Joe, Metal Gear Solid Twin Snakes, Eternal Darkness. Their next console will look really good with a new Mario platform game on it. I buy all the Mario platform games right away because they all have good simple fun and Mario is in it. And the new Legend of Zelda game a year later. Whoa! I'm already amazed. That is if these specs turn out as true! I want Nintendo to go with Revolution "Version 1" because it seems more powerful than "Version 2." I hear dual processors aren't all what they are cracked up to be. A good example of this is Saturn's dual processors. The Playstation beat Saturn in graphics although the Sega Saturn was a more powerful console by 10 MHz. Dual processors don't work well, and aren't worth the price it costs for the enhanced performance. Two Pentium 3s can't do the same calculations as one Pentium 4, it's kind of like that. I'll have a PC that'll have the power of Nintendo Revolution by late 2008 maybe. My current PC can out perform Xbox in benchmark tests. I don't think the Xbox has the power to run Unreal Tournament 2004 because the UT 2004 takes a lot of CPU unless it's on a low resolution like 800x600. I think either Far Cry or UT2004 need the most requirements of any game out today. And for good reason...they're beautiful games. I can't run Far Cry at the highest resolution without the frame rate going down. Well not even my computer can run everything at the highest resolution. Games shouldn't even use that low resolution anymore. The lowest resolution should be 1200x980 in any game. In fact most games have it at the resolution at default. The difference between 800x600 and 1200x980 is huge. Sometimes games like UT2004 run better at 1200x980 than 800x600 on faster computers like mine.

I hope I'm on a verge of something new! I mean I know I was right about Super Mario 128 being a platform game, and not a technical demo for Gamecube. Gamecube was not the worst console in this videogame generation, Xbox was. After all, the typical gamer can have all that power for 100 dollars, 50 dollars less than Xbox. Nintendo Revolution may be the same way and cost 150 dollars when it's released - at least yet's hope it will. Cost will be a big factor in console sales next time around. I don't think I will get a Playstation 3 first. I'm betting that the new PS3 will be 150 dollars more expensive than Microsoft or Nintendo's next gen. videogame console.

Thank me for the spoilers and have fun with it. Comment if there is any changes in actual specs on this entry because that would be cool. I find that no one will actually go to my webpage so I just posted all the stuff on this entry. But this is okay, isn't it?

Okay, I'm going to close up here. Here are some images to further display what PS3, Xenon and Nintendo Revolution 1st generation titles may look like. As you can see these picks demonstrate PC power not yet on the market but will be very soon if a people are willing to cash out to run the game at the highest resolution and get the best processor and videocard available. As you can see there are about 6000 polygons on each object. This game will probably add 500 MHz to Unreal Tournament 2004 requirements (1.2 GHz) Xbox's stats could run this game at a very high resolution. My PC could probably run it at 1200/960 at a far frame rate, but that's it. Just look at the screenshots of Epic Game's Unreal 3.0 engine to appear in Unreal Tournament 2006! It might be a great game to play with 64-bit Athlon 64 though...if I can afford one right now. UT2006 is unofficial, but the demo appeared at this year's E3. Breath taking graphics aren't they? And this engine will look better as time progresses. It's still in the beta. One thing is certain the next Unreal Tournament game will be compatible with UT2004 and UT2003 maps. If PS3 can run this game then more power too it.

Images of the Unreal 3.0 Engine (kick ass graphics!)

Streaming my Mp3s to my friends. Works well! (2004-07-08 13:39)

The topic of today is how I learned how to stream audio files to another friend using Winamp through my personal web server. But first I have some interesting news to tell bloggers that I found off Google Groups today. Ever heard the rumor that Bill Gates was going to try to buy Nintendo? It's true. Bill Gates went up to Nintendo's President and wrote him a check for 25 Billion dollars (no lie, it's all over the Internet) to acquire them in the future. Nintendo apparently was so surprised, they didn't know what to think, so Nintendo's President says that the company doesn't need the money. Just think of it...Bill Gates giving out a contract and a blank check. I thought this was a little scary. Maybe I'm wrong and a group of teenagers just posted this news somewhere to make a joke. I like Nintendo Gamecube more than Xbox and Nintendo working for Microsoft? God, maybe they could own 50 % of the console market. This probably was in question when Rareware (famous for games like Donkey Kong Country, Goldeneye, Banjo Kazooie, Conker's Bad Fur Day and Perfect Dark) signed onto Xbox's 2nd party. Other Rumors was Microsoft was in debate on whether or not to buy out Sega of Japan or Square-Enix. The truth is Microsoft will buy a well known developer in the near future. This rumor has come about ever since Square-Enix (a popular RPG publisher) announced 1 game for the Xenon console late last month. Sega has always developed for Xbox creating their most popular Xbox game, Jet Grind Radio. And more than likely Sega will announce 1 or 2 launch titles for Xenon in 2005. Microsoft attempting to buy out Nintendo was a little wake up call for me this morning.

Today I was playing around with personal streaming software. It was so easy to figure out too. What to know how? First, you'll need a MP3, any version of Winamp, and Abyss Web Server v1.0 via <http://Downloads.com>. Sound simple? It is. I'll tell you how. Once you've met all of my requirements, make a PLS file in Winamp, and save it in the HTDOCS directory in the parent directory of Abyss Web Server folder. Create an html file by hyper linking the pls file with any html editor (Microsoft Word or Notepad will work).

Now save the file as 'index.html'. Exit MS Word, and click on the Abyss executable icon to start up Abyss Web Server. Run Abyss. Now your PLS file is on the Internet available for others to open the playlist. All the receiver has to do is type in http://\(yourIPAddress\)/playlist.pls/playlist.pls) into WinAMP's URL open box. Now anyone can stream MP3s from your personal URL. The bandwidth of the stream will use the same bandwidth for 1 person as it would 100 people. Cool Eh? I tried this...it works! What is also cool is if you use Quintessential Player to rip the MP3s to the hard drive.

Another way to stream in the audio playlist happened to me days after I played around with Abyss. VLC Media Player 0.7.2 (<http://videolan.org>) can stream any movie, audio stream using it's easy to understand wizard. In VLC Media Player, click FILE, STREAM WIZARD, and follow the Steps. Step One: First open a PLS or M3U file. Step two: in the Stream Window, check the MP3 box under 'Transforming Options.' Don't forget to put your IP Address in the HTML textbox so it looks like this: (<http://168.00.00.0>). Step Three: Click Run Stream. Now, I'm sure that this stream will reach another node who's using Winamp.

On my DVD's I tried out #1 DVD Ripper SE (<http://www.xilisoft.com/dvd-ripper.html>). I like 1Click DVD Ripper better than this. Although both applications do the same thing. One thing it does do is show all the files on DVD which in 1Click DVD Ripper you need to go through a Wizard to access it. #1 DVD Ripper SE doesn't allow you to rip the DVDs in a certain amount of chapters which sucks. One plus this program has over 1 Click DVD Ripper is it doesn't totally lock you out if you don't have a registration code. It'll let you rip and compress on the fly 50 % of the movie. This is cool if your desire is to legally compress data on your computer free. I'm surprise there aren't open source software that do this? Maybe there are, I just haven't came across them yet.

If there were it would be found here - <http://www.doom9.org/>

This is a very good NES ROM site with working links!!!

http://www.theoldcomputer.com/Library's/Emulation/NES/ROMs/NES_roms_summary.htm

Full ROM and BIOS list - YOU NEED TO VISIT THIS SITE IF YOUR INTO EMUALTION! ABSOLUTELY MUST VISIT! - http://www.theoldcomputer.com/Library's/Emulation/ROMs_summary.htm - This site has roms for all the old computers plus BIOS for SEGA Saturn, SEGA CD, ATARI Jaguar and PALM OS to name a few!!!!

I downloaded a PALM Emulator off <http://PalmOS.com> and I got the Palm IIIe BIOS from <http://theoldcomputer.com>. The shell was in shape of a Palm IIIe, and the BIOS ran Palm OS 3.5. Once the BIOS is running properly, I was ready to try some programs, but I can't get the Program to recognize a second program. I believe I need to emulate a thumb stick. The removable memory should be a part of the BIOS ROM file I've downloaded. I gave up trying to get this to work.

Today I've tried out a new Gameboy Advance emulator, Rascal Boy Advance. This emulator does play games, which it should. The Virtual Boy Advance gives better Anti-analyzing to the Gameboy Advance Roms. I don't know why you need a Game Boy Advance BIOS since all games will work without it. Hmm, it's a mystery to me. It allows you to record sound to WAV. And than you can of course convert WAV to MP3 if you want. Maybe the future version will let the user compress audio to MP3 or OGG. Rascal Boy Advance is a very small download – only 250 KB. If you want all the new Gameboy Advance emulators, of course. Here is a link to the Virtual Boy Advance Homepage, <http://vba.ngemu.com/>

- Ran a new Gameboy Advance emulator -

It got really bored today so I went super model searching on Google.com. Nothing like looking at beautiful woman half naked! In fact I could look at them completely nude, but I'm not. The way I see it I have a better chance at seeing better looking woman in swimsuits than the ones completely nude. Like I said I'm really bored today. I save this hobby for last resort (if all else fails). I would post links on this blog, but I don't think Modblog would like that very much. Do you?

Tomorrow I may try to get the Dreamcast emulator, Chankast, and search for online demos off Google that's compatible with it. Chankast emulator can run Dreamcast game ISOs. I know I can find some off Emule, but unfortunately, I have a modem, and Bob doesn't have high speed Internet yet at his house. I have one place to go to upload huge files and that is the school's server. Anyways, I am also planning to find Gamecube Demos (DOL and ELF files) that'll work with Dolwin. Dolwin is the first Gamecube emulator, and I saw screenshots of it running interactive demos like Tetris or Bubble Trouble. It seems that some of the real Gamecube games that don't require full power of the Gamecube can be emulated with Dolwin. I'll need special software like Phantasy Star Online, an Ethernet Adapter add-on for Gamecube, and a PSO hacking tool running on Windows. Supposedly it downloads the game through the PSO Internet Browser or something like that. Be patient and read my next entry to see what happens.

I get my information off NGemu.com The site is back online! NGemu was down for a period of 3 weeks. This is the best site if you want to emulate any console. The older console emulators that run Genesis, NES, SNES are easy to find off Google. All I need to do is type in "NES emulator" and it'll give me a couple hits of working NES emulators. Google is my friend. On most searches - it hasn't yet me down.

I've been listening to Metallica, Black Sabbath, Red Hot Chilli Peppers as well as U2, and Third Eye Blind. I'm taking a break from trance for the minute. Unforgiven is my current favorite song. Then I switched to country music. O-well. I haven't downloaded MP3s for almost two months. I listen to what I have now.

1st dvd ripper (2006-08-10 17:30:00)

This is an excellent blog. Keep it going.You are providing a great resource on the Internet here!

If you have a moment, please take a look at my 1st dvd ripper site.

Have a great week!

Updated Half-life 2 info | Chankast demo links (2004-07-10 13:40)

Hi, Welcome back again to my fantastic site. Today's topic is updates on Half-life 2, the best first person shooter for the next 2 years! At least that's what I think. More on the story, you play Gordon Freeman in the year 2025. Unlike Half-life, where the aliens were contained in Black Mesa, they are now unleashed lurking throughout the Earth, depleting all it's resources. The resistance picks up, of course, is when human kind must figure out how to get rid of the aliens. Even with the aliens gone, the Earth resources are very scarce. It was Gordon's fault in the first place! Players will get to relive the first Half-life in Half-life 2. Two games in one! That's good for me, I haven't played Half-Life in years.

Confirmed Minimum Required Specs for Half-life 2

700 MHz Pentium 3
128 MB of RAM
32 MB Nvidia Geforce 3 or ATI Radeon 4000
3.5 GB of hard drive space
Media format - DVD or CD-ROM

The paragraph I promised everyone here in my last blog entry is finally up. Theoretically all these demos / emulators can run on Chankast 0.25. Chankast is the only Dreamcast emulator capable of running commercial games (through ISO files). You don't need any programs to put on CD; you just need the ISO image. Then make the ISO image runnable by using DAMEON TOOLS (freeware) or Alcohol 120 % (shareware). Be warned, the Chankast .25 requires to user to have Direct X 9.0 graphics accelerator installed. This can be installed by installing newer computer games that came out between mid 2003 to present. Or you can go to Microsoft's own webpage, and download Direct X 9.0b graphics accelerator <http://www.microsoft...directx/default.aspx>. I hear that Direct X 9.0c will be out very soon like a month or so. What ever you do - stay away from the DX 9.0c beta, I hear it's got some of those crash bugs lurking about. I have personal experience on this. Games today will not let you downgrade if there is a higher version. Microsoft had one thing right, for games like Diablo, they let you install Direct X 5.0 too because Diablo is so old, it won't recognize Direct X 7, 8, 9 as graphics accelerators. Direct X 5.0 is only 5 MB uncompressed anyways.

As for Gamecube, I haven't found any Dolwin demos. Sorry. I'll keep searching on my free time. Remember, I want to say I emulated a Gamecube demo too.

Anyways, I had nothing to do so I emulated one of my all time favorite N64 games, Extreme G on Project 64K. I like Extreme G because the bikes go fast speeds on a futuristic track. The game looked above average on N64 in 1997. There is techno in the game, sort of like an enhanced MIDI. I hear the XGRA dance tracks are crazy. I don't know, but since I'm a fan of techno, I want to hear what a brilliant dance remix sounds like? Sort of like a Beethoven trance remix. I want to play that game and own all the Extreme G games. I can't find this game at Wal-Mart or Target. I have to go into Woodbury, MN to get it. I'm sure Game Stop will have a used copy. I haven't been there for 5 months at least. I thinking I'm getting the Xbox version because that version is the most detailed of all the XGRAs. I remember being really good at the first Extreme G. The sequel was released on N64 as well as Playstation. XG2 wasn't as good as the original, but it did have CD quality tracks, the N64 had midi. The 3rd game was released on all the consoles, and was better than Extreme G in game play and sound. XGRA is the forth game, and I really want this game. Extreme G had potential, and it clearly stated that in Extreme G 3 - that is if you're a fan of motorcycle racing at 500 MPH.

Right now I have a new Play list and this one is Techno

- 1.) DJ Micro - BT - Godspeed
- 2.) DJ Liquid - Never Surrender
- 3.) DJ Liquid - The Next Millennium
- 4.) DJ Liquid - Carte Blanche
- 5.) ministry of sound - sandstorm (original mix)
- 6.) Paul van Dyk - For an Angel
- 7.) ATB vs Seb Fontaine - universal nation
- 8.) Seb Fontaine - Cygnus X - The Orange Theme (Solar Stone Remix)

- 9.) DJ Sasha & John Digweed - Enjoy The Silence
- 10.) Sonorous - Protonic (Ronki Speed Mix)

I found free Anti-virus software on the Internet. As most of you know the big players in Antivirus are McAfee and Norton. However, they make you pay for their software. So the program I'm using is AntiVir 6.26. It already found the Click Reaper virus on my computer! Wow and I haven't partitioned that long ago! Thanks AntiVir for your free Antivirus. There is a catch though. To update, you'll have to re-download the 5.5 MB program each time. There is also another catch. Antivirus program's like these are the ones you have to trust. Antivir is freeware and with no guarantees. And I can still, however unlikely, have viruses on my computer. I have the latest version of Antivir, so more than likely my computer is virus free!

I played my flute yesterday, and than again today - twice. Flute is a very interesting instrument. I use to play at an intermediate level, now my fingers get tangled on the keys. I can play a couple Bach songs. I started when I was in 3rd grade. I can play almost all notes on the flute. There are two notes I can't play on a graduated flute. The beginner flute has 2 less keys. I play jazz music sheets. Jazz is cooler than classical. Although I don't hate playing classical. In flute, you'll have to blow in it 3 different ways. It seems like when I play a high F note, I need to blow in the flute a 4th way which some people can't do until their 3rd year, because the 3rd highest blowing doesn't work well enough. I got taught by Jenny Starr who gave me private lessons. I played in band, and in homecoming band. When I drink water I can make a high F or high G, soda pop doesn't mix well with flute playing...because it dries my mouth up. I decided to stop playing for 3 years since I had 'more important things to do' in computers. If I remember correctly, playing the flute stole time away from my Diablo 2 time. That was my choice. Was it the right choice? I don't know.

Anyways, I have been playing Mario Kart Double Dash. I played Mario Kart 64 on my computer via Project 64K with a pc controller. 50cc is easy. 100cc is sort of difficult, but I can make do. That was cool. Mario Kart use to be my all time favorite N64 game. Now that I don't play it anymore except through Project 64K. My cousin and I played Mario Kart 64 all the time. Two thumbs up! David hated playing it after a while, but he would because I wanted him to play it. For a short time we played Extreme G. He was at my house. Then we played Gamecube in late 2001.

I went to bed for a couple hours since I had nothing to do after I played the flute the first time around. Blowing makes me tired! This was around 8:30 PM. I played some simple Star Wars sheets to refresh. Then I played some jazz (Fugace, Javanaise, etc) Javanaise is a good sheet song. I have the MP3 of a flute playing Fugace and this song so I know exactly what the melody is. The song is easy although there are Fs in there somewhere. I sometimes forgot that high F # (sharp) is also high E b (flat). The high F # in Star Wars didn't sound right so I tried high E # although it was a high F #. Flutes play melody, not the Flats which bass instruments play. I wanted to quit right there, but I kept playing anyways.

I watched the Olympic Games trials. I enjoyed it. These are the fastest runners in the USA so that's pretty fast. The runners that ran the 100 meter dash are all black. I want to know why there aren't any white runners good enough for it? I think the games are in Athens this year. First time the Olympic Games are going to be in high definition. We don't have a HDTV because we can't afford it. Best Buy sells some for fewer than 1000 dollars, although my parents would like to see one priced at $800.

Tomorrow I may be seeing Bob again. We are long time friends. Bob hasn't exactly been seeing me all the time. He might come over for a couple hours. I should install Unreal Tournament 2004 so we can play tomorrow. So I can kick his ass in it. I have some maps on CD so I can add them if I please. Usually in these games I'll set the skill level to Skilled. Not if any chance I can't do skilled then I will have to set the level down to experienced. I have set the level to Godlike, but the bots kill me every 10 seconds. It's doesn't go well this way. Godlike gets me too aggravated. Last time we played UT2004, Bob actually beat me in one game. So his skill level isn't at the lowest (he's quite capable of killing me). He can be a mean lean killing machine too. I think I'll install Call of Duty too since that's a good FPS to play on. Call of Duty seems to be very accurate to the actual war. I don't know. I just play the game. I don't know anything about what happened in WWII except for a few major battles. Call of Duty is where I crouch to the ground and aim straight with my sniper to shoot crout or mow down some enemies with my machine gun. Crouts are smart. They can hear your footsteps! O_o. Sniping is so cool. Only bad thing is if someone sees you, you can't turn around and change your weapon with the mouse wheel fast enough. But that's okay – it's only a game.

Hmm, I haven't updated my personal website in 2 weeks. Last time I think I only added an updated Playstation 3 and Microsoft Xenon news page to "Ian's 512-bit Generation News Page". I checked the side bar and some links are broken. I will need to fix those. My site is still functional.

This is Ian Signing Off

Find out why this is the longest summer break ever (2004-07-13 13:41)

Hello again. This Summer Break has been harsh. I really can't go anywhere. But Doom III is coming out on August 03, 2004! I am going to beat it the first week! This is one of the big games on my list. I have 100 dollars saved up for Zodiac. I am unsure whether or not I'll buy the less powerful 32-bit version or the 128-bit version. The 32-bit version costs 300 dollars plus tax and the 128-bit version costs 100 dollars more!

Today's topic is what I did on Sunday. While I was hoping that Bob would come over and play Unreal Tournament with me, I got the impression that he was busy, so I instead invited my cousin, Brian, and his little brother, Chris. I last met Brian at Easter which I believe I have an entry on him. Christopher is only 8. Brian and I have one thing in common, we both play Diablo 2. He plays all the time while I not so much. The shortest route to his house was closed due to construction. So I went through New Richmond, pass WITC, towards Somerset. Unfortunately, New Richmond had a parade that day. Police were directing us out of town. I pick up Brian and Chris which 2 hours later we make it to my house. We had a detour. I won't explain. Once at my house, I got Diablo 2: Lord of Destruction loaded on the Compaq Presario. The Compaq did connect to my LAN network. However, my Custom PC did not. I found this out water I reset my network connection to WORKGROUP. I found out my NIC on my custom PC is inoperative. We stopped playing Diablo 2 since that would take time, we wouldn't even get pass ACT 1. He was nice about it, his kid brother was imitating my questions, and all around pain in the butt. Those are kids for ya. Not thinking, but always talking. He does know how to play Diablo 2 a little bit though. Doesn't everyone? Chris didn't know how to upgrade his character stats neither, but he's only 8, and I had to remember that. He wanted to come along. Brian and I got tired of getting around the UT 2004 issue so we played Halo on XBOX. We played on Blood Glinch in Multiplayer. I liked stealing tanks so I can blast him to pieces with my cannon. However, he can snipe me out. I look at his screen. So when my guy pops out on the hill, I just move backwards out of sight. I took him home around 6 PM.

Next day I went to pick up a NIC at Target. Target didn't carry cable based network cards anymore. Too obsolete! I needed one though. I have a complete cable network with my computers. So I got out of Target, didn't want to argue with his point of view. His point of view probably is wireless or 802.11G is better than CAT V NICs, but I didn't need to spend 150 dollars to get 3 brand new wireless NICs. I have a fully operative network that runs two computers at home. And the fact also being that NIC on the motherboard blew out. I really want the ones that plug into the USB port – those can be unplugged and reused without the hassle of opening up ones PC and taking the NIC out manually with more risk of ESDing the motherboard. Anyhow, USB NICs weren't there – I see that Target and Wal-mart want to limit their selection forcing people like me to buy 1 product. Either that or there is only one NIC Wal-mart and Target can make their money on.

As for the gamestore, I bought two used games, Super Mario Kart, and the rare Legend of Zelda Promotional Disc for Gamecube. I wanted to own a legal copy of Legend of Zelda and Legend of Zelda II – Link's Adventure. The originals are very rare finds at the game store I go too all the time. It's sort of a bad deal – but in one way it's a good deal. The original copy of the promotional disc came packaged with the Gamecube unit last year for free. This means Gamecube owners of that time got a playable demo of Wind Waker, complete versions of Legend of Zelda 1 and 2, and both N64 Zeldas free. I had to pay 40 dollars for it because it had Legend of Zelda in it, and it was more or less an interactive game. But that's what it costs to have a genuine original copy of Legend of Zelda on the TV. The other way is to have Legend of Zelda Game Boy cartridge inserted into the Gameboy Player. The Gamecube controller joystick works any game on the disc. I have played the original, and sequel plus both N64 games through PC emulation. It would allow me to insert Gameshark codes, and see the ending. I did see the ending which I forgot seeing last time I played Ocarina of Time. I'm surprised. Link had to be sent back to this real childhood time, not his alternate time (which 99 % of the game took place in). This all makes sense now, maybe the new Legend of Zelda Gamecube game appearing in 2005 will be an epic tale in Link's adult hood when he grew up after Zelda sent him back in time at the end of Ocarina of Time Master Quest? Could this be a possibility? The sword and shield design in the screenshots looked very familiar to me.

Today, I was enjoying the Legend of Zelda on my TV. Remember, I have never played this game on my TV in my life. I didn't make it very far. I still needed a shield, and I died sooner than I could get 50 rupees to buy one. Then I got tired of this stupid outdated Zelda game (because I suck at it), and played a saved game in Legend of Zelda - The Wind Waker. I can't get back on the boat after I completed the Bird City quest. I had cheats on, but it didn't seem to prevent me from getting in the boat. Anyways, I tried activating the Mega Jump with Action Replay so Link can jump and land onto the boat – only Link jumps vertically unless he has a starting run at it. The game doesn't want me to run, jump and land on the talking boat – so I end up landing in the water near it! I might have to start the game over and hope this problem doesn't occur when I play that part of it. Actually, I'm almost there. This was what I did instead of playing Diablo 2 with Brian over the Internet.

Another very interesting thing I found out is with both the Legend of Zelda Ocarina of Time Promotional Disc and Ocarina of Time Bonus Disc. You can play these games without the disc! The whole game is loaded into the Gamecube's internal memory! Ocarina of Time will not freeze up either. If Bob gets a Gamecube, he really wants to own The Wind Waker, I can give him Ocarina of Time, and he'll have to leave his Gamecube on. At least until he shuts it off.

This is what I typed at Gaming Horizon's Revolution Message Board today:

“Actually,

I am a little old to be researching Nintendo and Microsoft, but the fact remains, I'm going to buy a next gen console, and I want to know who will make the best games. Although I am sure Nintendo wants it's Revolution priced at $150 bucks just like last time with Gamecube.

Nintendo is fine the way they are. They are partnering with NEC and ATI which will make a great chip that will require the new N5 to be as small as Gamecube. I hear the R & D is porting "Super Mario 128" to it.

As for SPECS, I hope they scrap the 512 MB aspect, and worry how much video RAM is in the thing. Remember, Gamecube does it's graphics with 24 MB SDRAM and 64 MB of video memory. I don't know how Nintendo got High Resolution out of 24 MB of RAM, but they did. Just like Xbox got high resolution out of 64 MB of RAM. I really believe the ATI card needs to be 256 MB of RAM for the console to compete.

PS - We already know Nintendo (being smart) already having a head start on the first Revolution Legend of Zelda title we know nothing about. Nintendo did say they were working on this new Legend of Zelda we all saw at E3 last month for 2 1/2 years fully staffed. I am sure they're making a new Super Smash Bros. game, and also a new Mario Kart for Revolution the day this was posted.

So that's 4 titles we know about

- Super Mario 128 TBA 2006(for sure)
- Mario Kart TBA 2006 (tentative)
- Super Smash Bros. TBA 2006 (tentative)
- Legend of Zelda Revolution TBA 2007 (tentative)

Next Gen consoles much harder to hack? Maybe. First lets talk about what hacking allows a console owner to do. Console hacking is almost always related to MOD-CHIPS. The earlier mod-chips had to be soldered (or hot glued) to the motherboard connected to a jumper on the motherboard. The new ones just need to be inserted onto a jumper on the motherboard, and booted with a CD-ROM to reset the console's BIOS. To simply put, a mod-chip gives access to anything developed for that console, commercial or not. Again, I have never modded my Xbox or Playstation 2 so I am really in the dark on this topic. The Xenon, which I heard off Spong.com, is going to take the next step to prevent this, it's going to have color dye on the parts of the motherboard that would be exposed to mod-chips which make it harder for mod-chips to be implanted onto the motherboard. Mod-chips give a console access to game copies, special programs including emulators, and freeware games plus MP3 and DivX media players. Gamecube discs have this special bar code on underneath the inner part of the mini-DVD so homebrew discs won't be readable, except for Gamesharks and Action Replays. This technology will be used on all next generation consoles. The biggest throw-back of this generation is Gamecube, PS2, Xbox, and Dreamcast are really hard to emulate because computers aren't powerful enough. Most emulators have trouble showing graphics in real-time unless the game is a anthology thus using 1/10 of the PS2 CPU power. Those games have proven easier to emulate

I truly thing the opposite is true in console business. More and more people are used games. Yes they may buy a new console like a Playstation 2, but they also think about owning an old console such as Genesis or NES or Dreamcast. Dreamcast's are still technically this generation, and the consoles only cost 30 bucks at game merchant stores. At least that's what I thought. There are plenty of people who still own old consoles. N64 is a great example. It is true that people still love to play the original Legend of Zelda and the only way to do so is to play it on a NES.

Here is a great Nintendo vs. competition forum. <http://forum.pcvcon.com/php?tid=11426&page=9>

You know how hard it is to express ones feeling's every 2 - 3 days? I about said everything there is to be said in everything I can think of unless something is life-altering, I'll probably talk about how much better computers and software are going to get for the rest of my life on this Earth. Computers are going to one day rule us all! It was just 100 years ago we created something so revolutionary, we still use it today, and it's commonly known as the vehicle! It made 2/3 of Americans obese. We'll still use this revolutionary invention until someone invents molecule replication chambers, like the ones you see in Star Trek - we'll see it in year 2360 or something like that. Heck, we'll have vehicles as long as we live amongst each other as a species.

For some non technical news in my life. Today, I walked the dog ½ of a mile because I wanted too. Yet drivers don't wave at me. There is something screwy going on in my town. These people know me too. I must know something they do not wish for me to know. They want me to know that my neighbors agree with some kids my age, just not me. And there is Anne, Matt, and James who are in the same age as I am who haven't spoken a word to me for years. What do you think about that! It's a good thing none of the neighbors know what's on this blog. Hahaha! No one knows I share information over the Internet.

I downloaded a solitaire program called SolSuite 2004 and installed it. I want to play King's Corner and Golf Solitaire. I am better at golf solitaire than Klondike solitaire. But I'm not a real fan of Solitaire. I also found a video poker program that was free - poker mania 2.2. I first set a small bet for 10 dollars than I hold the 8 of spades and 9 of spades. I got two Queens in the next deal and I won. Perhaps in the first game, the program always makes it easy for you. Then I also downloaded Joker's Wild Video Poker 3.1. It's a shareware program, but I think I may be a better program.

So I end this in saying I am very tired, and I need sleep because frankly, I was awake since 6:30AM.

Free Game of the Week:

OMFG, it's retro Link in Legend of Zelda Ocarina of Time 2D! You must see this!

Does gravity make us age faster? The Truth of PSX (2004-07-16 13:42)

Hello once again. Today I've been watching Star Trek 8 - First Contact on HBO. In the beginning, the USS Enterprise D goes through a time warp (warp speed in a worm hole going through time into the pass) Actually, 'The Federation' was not capable of this, the Borg were) which was also caught in the same worm hole the Borg ship was. So after the show, I wondered about the science behind warp holes and alternate universes. I checked on Google Groups, which seemed to be the most natural place to go, and looked up keywords, Time Travel. I this interesting text:

"In 1963, Roy Kerr, a New Zealand mathematician, found a solution of Einstein's equations for a rotating black hole, which had bizarre properties. The black hole would not collapse to a point (as previously thought) but into a spinning ring (of neutrons). The ring would be circulating so rapidly that centrifugal force would keep the ring from collapsing under gravity. The ring, in turn, acts like the Looking Glass of Alice. Anyone walking through the ring would not die, but could pass through the ring into an alternate universe (or "time bubble"). "

I heard somewhere that if you take a spaceship around the sun and return to earth, space time would have speed up, thus returning to Earth 50 or even 100 years in the future. This only suggests that a portion of space and it's clock is slower although astronauts in that space would not notice that time around it is faster. This potion of space is known as a time bubble. Somewhere on the Internet I've heard I would live longer on Mars because it has less gravity than the Earth. We know there have been remains of organisms on Mars that remained there because of the desert like atmosphere. Mars is much colder than on Earth, minus 200 degrees in some shadowy areas, and plus 200 degrees in the sun. Rain falls from the sky when gravity obviously does this. Plants die because their strength can no-longer support the gravity pulling on it every minute of every day. Maybe our solar system is in a time bubble in our galaxy. This would explain why our evolution was so slow. This part I understand better. The Sun, of course, is a very large magnet which makes Earth spin counter-clockwise. What would happen if the Earth would spin clockwise instead? Would the earth stay the same, and the winds would go in the opposite direction. If Yes, technically speaking a worm hole shields the spacecraft outer layer from aging, and also protecting it from damage. A worm hole is thought to be two different things. The most popular theory is a passage through space to deliver anything that passes through it to another portion of space instantly. The other, less popular theory, is the thought that once passed through a worm hole, a spacecraft would go through time into the future and reopen in the exact same position as when first it opened, but in the future. The complicated part is how one end closes when the other end opens. And the possibility that a worm hole will open at several time periods while a spacecraft is in the worm hole. The idea of this is while time stays still in the worm hole, time at the end of the worm hole will be at a different time and once out of it, a spacecraft or probe would re-arrive at a different time period thus arriving in the future.

I suppose I can't comprehend how time bubbles or worm holes can go back in time. It's against all known laws of science. We must first have a past that has been 'breached' in order to have an alternate future even if it's for a few seconds.

So how can we travel through time if there isn't a way to speed up or slow down time without aging, even in our solar system? We can only travel through space at low speeds (below light speed). NASA will not invent light speed in my life time. That's the way I see it. How we're going to do it? I don't know...it'll take a genius or two to figure that one out. In Star Trek, the movie, First Contact, makes it very simple, just jump in a worm-hole and travel through time with my 23rd century spaceship into your 21st century world. They didn't explain though how the Enterprise D, with it's 23rd century technology and crew, still existed in the pass if the future hasn't been created yet? And in the pass, how did the Enterprise D create a wormhole if the Borg created it, and the Borg spaceship was destroyed? See, the film doesn't show you these parts for whatever reason. I think who ever did the visuals watched "Back to the Future". The idea Data (he's the android in the Next Generation) had about the starship temporarily existing because the starship was in the worm-hole in time before the time continuum of the future disappeared was genius. Albert Einstein said something about this in his theory of black holes in his theory of relativity. Don't miss understand, I give Albert all the credit, I am simply using the theory of relativity to further reference my worm holes.

Okay, enough details about time bubbles and Star Trek. While doing research for my personal webpage, Ian's 512-bit Generation News Page, I learned from IGN.com that Nintendo plans to use thumb operative touch pads on the Revolution's controller. This will work like how Tom Cruise moved his hands across a large transparent pad in Minority Report. These could be implanted for the joystick for an example. I don't know which way Nintendo's going to do this. The company, Nintendo, decided to put money for motion sensing into Gyration, which did the motion sensing in Minority Report, according to IGN.com. Thank you IGN for giving "us" (gaming community) this information. It helps for me to guess why Nintendo thinks "different" from Sony and Microsoft. Nintendo is thinking different, they said so at E3. We know Nintendo's not going to invent a console with really good graphics, they are going to create a console that looks better than Xbox and instead spend the extra money for extra features like touch pad controllers. Nintendo are the same they always been....not directly in competition with Sony and Microsoft. The Sony and Microsoft way of thinking is graphics provide the graphical horse power while the developers take advantage of it, and try to amaze people for a couple of years. The idea is really, really straight forward. The current generation controller has enough buttons to do the job, if only it could be a revolutionary shape. All the next generation consoles need a controller with air conditioning in my opinion like my Nyko Airflow PC game pad.

Anyways, ever hear about Nintendo Playstation? I know - how could Nintendo own Playstation? Actually, Nintendo was going to create a CD-ROM for SNES called SNES CD developed by Sony. It sounded interesting to me two. I heard from Bob that Nintendo helped develop the Sony Playstation, but never really thought much of it. So I came across this Nintendoland article. Nintendo partnered with Phillips before and this deal stood so we had some Nintendo games on Phillips CDi console. Sony manufactured the SNES sound chip, so Nintendo couldn't tell Sony that the partnership didn't exist....it had to exist. So in 1988, Nintendo and Sony were developing the prototype of the N3 or Nintendo Playstation. Sony had the rights to all the cd games though. When the console came out in Japan in 1994, Playstation COULD NOT play NINTENDO GAMES. So Nintendo fired Sony and Sony kept their Playstation concept in the end of '92. In a way, gamers could have seen Nintendo games on the Playstation. Game developers where already using the Playstation platform for their games, so they naturally took the Sony route. To read the full article, go to: <http://www.nintendol...m/home2.htm?history/> I don't care because I own all Nintendo consoles except one, and all the Playstations, so what do I care what happened with Sony and Nintendo 12 years ago.

Wall Street predicts Nintendo and Microsoft may have trouble selling next generation consoles in 2005- 2006. Sales of games for the older consoles will have declined. This makes perfect sense though. Would you buy a "last generation" game when the "current generation" just came out with games for it? I wouldn't although some people might. Also, there are plenty of videogame merchants around to sell used games to you at lower prices than the one's you buy new at Best Buy or Wal-Mart. Most people take good care of their games, and they sell them in good condition. I have some used games I can't tell that they had a previous owner (the DVD case is in good condition). I had 3 DVD cases that were in "near mint" condition. In terms of game cases, Nintendo makes the best game cases, Microsoft comes in 2nd for case quality (flimsy, but hard to bust cases), and PS2 comes in 3rd place making the worst case (these get chipped very easy if fallen on concrete floors - I had this happen to me - my case got chipped off and won't close well). Right now I played just about every game I wanted to play. I have most of the greatest hits for all the consoles. I have a feeling that in 2006, I'll only own one next generation console. The console is not a problem, but buying games is. I already know that new Revolution games are starting out at $50 bucks. Don't they always - it's like a tradition.

I wasn't working on my personal webpage today, but I found out 90 % of my photo gallery's links are working. This way you can see more of me. Here's a link for easy access http://www.geocities...s101/gallery_v4.html. Right now I'm thinking of updating the broken links, and all the pages in version 4.0. I may even change the color theme to something else - such as blue or something. Or I can leave it as it is depending on what mood I'm in. Everything at nightwalkers101 is backed up on CD. Since November 2002, all the changes - all the templates - everything!

What I want the next gen consoles to have (2004-07-19 13:43)

I agree with those of you who thought my last entry was a little off. For example I thought if we lived on Mars, we would live longer. Humans would lose a lot of muscle tissue in on Mars gravity is less than Earth. As for my other topic, I thought that worm holes would make someone travel through time, and time bubbles in space would separate itself from normal outer space since it's clock is slower or faster. However, this theory is still fictional as you all know.

Yesterday, Randy did come over, and it's been 1 month now. I love people who come over, and it's been so long to have a human opponent to play games with. I tried to get him to play fighting games such as Dead or Alive 3, but he refused to play them. Instead we played Rallisport Challenge and McCollen's Rally 04 on Xbox. I know he likes rally (WRC, FIA) because he had a few comments on the phone - he likes how the rally cars go around the corners at really fast speeds, and how the mud washes up on the car when the wheels turn up mud. And they do, in the game I will play one rally car, and if I don't let off the gas, and brake at the precise moment - car smashes into a hill or rock or tree. I wonder if when I go off the road when I 'slide' on a right corner, this scenario would be real as far as the car physics go. Games have improved a lot since Playstation, and N64 generation because the game's learning curve is harder, and also more going on in this generation. Randy beat me twice while I beat him three times. He beats me on automatic transmission. Manual is supposed to make the car faster - yet he still beats me at my game. It is my skill level, I suppose. It's odd how an opponent can beat you first time, yet you know the game better than he does. There is no such thing as luck although it seems this way when there are no rules. Ah, this is why people are gamers, they feel that the challenge is worth taking, much like a game of poker.

Always, while I find a manual transmission would help me more in the game. I can down shift to a sharp corner and avoid rocks, hills, cliffs at the cost of speed. In the pros, drivers can go around corners faster with a manual than an automatic whereas videogames can simulate both transmissions. We also played ice rally circuits which are exactly like summer rally but in the winter. I wouldn't know how to compare this to real life rally.

Randy and I left to see "I, Robot" at Hudson Cinema. I saw one of my high school students there, Beth. Beth is a blonde. I said hi. Anyways, "I, Robot" wasn't that good. Perhaps a 2 1/2 star movie at the most. If you watch old movies a lot, you'll understand. The whole movie was about Will Smith claiming that Robots were turning bad and no one believed him and the whole movie was about Will escaping the horde of robots. Ironically, there was an extra-high intelligent robot on the good side (AKA - thinking for itself.) Then Will Smith ran away from a giant robot trying to destroy him. That must have been a million dollar scene. A mech-sized robot tearing up the place, and Will barely escaped. The special effects weren't bad at all. I think the futuristic theme was more realistic than Star Wars. The movie was set in 2035. All the futuristic cars in the film look very cool. Will Smith figures out that the red lights on the robots were coming from a control center, USR (US Robotics). Hmm, isn't there a company called US Robotics that makes modems/NICs? I think this movie sends a message telling us that robots are bad news. Obviously.

After seeing the movie, we went to Circuit City. I wanted to see what a Tapwave Zodiac looks like. I found out it's super thin, and has a lot of stuff on it. They are smaller than what I thought the image on the Circuit City website looks like. Actually, Circuit City is the only vender that carries them. I was also looking at DVD players that play DivX, although none of them do. The new ones read JPEG - and that format has been out for 10 years. The laptops seem really modern and have smoothed out edges.

Old laptop vs. New - see the difference in design. The Allenware has a more slick design.

Then we went to Game Stop. Nothing special over there I found. Of course, I didn't have any money. I was interested if Game Stop had used XGRA games in stock - which they didn't. The N64s are 10 dollars more than the Hudson's store. N64s are really good for one thing and that is to play Legend of Zelda games. Plus, I heard gamers still like to play Goldeneye 007 occasionally. I saw Goldeneye on satellite yesterday - it must have been Pierce Brosman's best 007 film. Randy and I headed over to Best Buy. Randy bought two Cowboy Bebop DVDs, each with 4 episodes. I reminded him that I dislike his choice, but it's his choice none-the-less. In other words - he thinks anime is awesome. I watched anime and it's a cartoon for one, and two, the voice-overs sound funny. Not really high in quality mostly because of bad voice-overs. Other movies that run under this category are Jackie Chan and Godzilla films in recent years. They were alright B movies. However, I do like Final Fantasy and that franchise is based on anime. I didn't bother to ask him if I could rip them. If I want to watch Cowboy Bebop, I can watch it on Cartoon Network. I admit, it's more real life anime than cutesy anime. I hate the ones that have bad English voice-overs - and believe me, you can tell a bad voice-over from a good one. Anime is just cartoons that have blood, not to mention adult language that attracts adults. Best Buy didn't have those new Action Replay Max Evo Editions. I looked at the Playstation 2 and X-Box sections and didn't see any games I wanted except for 'Tales of Symphonia' for Gamecube. Then I look at the PC game category, and saw Warlords: Battlecry III, a strategy game from Uri-Soft. Surprisingly, Warlords IV is the prequel to this game, Plus Warlords: Battlecry 1 and 2 and come packaged with it. Warlords Battlecry III is priced at 30 dollars where-as Warlords IV is priced at $20. I am sort of confused on why there is also a Warlords IV, and than a spin off franchise called Warlords: Battlecry?

Here's how the franchise stacks up.

1. Warlords IV: Heroes of Etheria (6th game) | Release Date: Late October 2003 | IGN Score: 85 %
2. Warlords Battlecry III (seventh game???) Release Date: May 22, 2004 | IGN.Score 80 %
3. Warlords III (3rd game) Release Date: August 1997 | Gamespot score: 86 %
4. Warlords Battlecry II (fifth game) – Release Date: March 2002 | IGN score 85 %
5. Warlords – Battlecry (forth game) Release Date: July 2000 | IGN score 84 %

Damn, it's really confusing whether to get Warlords IV or Battlecry III. Warlords IV is suppose to be the sequel to the 1997 game, Warlords III, while Warlords Battlecry franchise has been released like clockwork. I'm hearing that Battlecry III is not as good as Battlecry II because it's missing a few elements that made the series stand out from Command & Conquer and Warcraft III. I find out I hated Warcraft. Should I wait until 2005 when another Warlords game will appear on shelves? One thing's for sure... None of the Warlords appeal with their graphics. The graphics are 5 years out of date although the latest Warlords Battlecry III looks better then Warcraft III hands down.

Gamecube finally gets another RPG and it's called Tales of Symphonia. This anime based RPG is much like Final Fantasy – of course a franchise that is getting more popular on each passing game. Well, anyways, the Tales series is Namco's answer to Game Art's Grandia series....Grandia II introduced me to the RPG genre. Both have cell-shaded graphics and both are real-time battle and very fast based. I don't know....after playing Xenosaga and Final Fantasy X....I'm sort of interested now. I read the IGN.com score and they gave it a 8.8 out of 10 so that's pretty good. I trust them.

I have $160 in my savings, and I don't have a job so any adult with common sense would not spend money on anything. I want a dual layer DVD burner....this will burn 9.4GB DVDs, which is the standard medium for movies right now. With this I can copy movies with Alcohol 120 % and burn in on a dual layer DVDR without degrading the image quality. Putting the movie on regular DVD is possible with MPEG 4, of course, at the expense of CPU power and time. To prevent pirated movies to be played on the television, there is no DivX or Xvid codecs on any dvd players you can buy from electronic stores. Why are they overpriced or is the Internet prices so good, the middleman is hardly making anything, which is good for small .com businesses. On the contrary, Tigerdirect and Amazon are far from small businesses.

The other thing is the Tapwave Zodiac 128-bit handheld computer which probably will be the next gaming platform I'll probably spend my money on. I have 75 dollars on hand plus about 160 dollars in my savings which equals to $235. The difference between the 128-bit and 32-bit versions is the RAM is vital for emulators to run GBA roms, and perhaps Nintendo DS roms for example. Another question – should I sell both my GBAs for $ $ $ to buy a Zodiac? I would get about half of what I paid for both of them new which would bring me to approx 100 dollars more. But what happens if GBA emulation does not work as well as I'm thinking...I would be without GBA. But I do see that the positive out ways the negative. Plus, Give or take selling a few games to make up the difference, I would have 410 dollars, enough to get a Zodiac. I can write on the Zodiac's touch pad. I think it's worth it because then I can run 90 % of Palm based software, and still have a joystick to play games. What would be interesting is if I could hook up a game pad up to it and play N64 roms. The gaming review sites showed pics that emulation was possible and Zodiac was ideal for 'oldskool' emulation.

Toshiba e400

Aside from Zodiac, there is also a Pocket PC from Toshiba off Tigerdirect for 200 dollars. It has 64MB of RAM and 300 MHz CPU. This is 100 dollars less than the Zodiac, and benefits from a more powerful processor and twice the RAM. Although it doesn't say what the graphics accelerator is? A graphics accelerator is really only for 3D based games in my opinion. GBA games must run on the border line between emulators that need GPU power and emulators that can rely on CPU power. And all I want to play are GBA and SNES games. Plus this Pocket PC comes with a lot of software including word processor, jpeg viewer, and mp3 player. Unlike 3 years ago, color screens won't cost you a lot of money. If my dad will let not me get a PDA off the Internet, I'll go with the Zodiac handheld.

As for satellite internet – it'll depend on whether I keep up grades in school or not. It should be on my ability to pay fees at the end of each month rather than grades in school. Then again I do live in my parent's house, so it won't make any difference if I want it or not. I want to stream Internet TV, listen to internet radio, and surf faster. Online gaming would have legacy so it's unlikely that my ping will be high enough to join broadband servers. I wish it weren't so. When I move away I will have a cable based Internet at around 1 MB at least. I won't get this kind of bandwidth for a while yet so why think about it?

These are what I expect in Next Generation consoles

Playstation 3

- To enhance graphics of PS2 and make most PS1 games high resolution
- To have 256-bit graphics accelerator
- Four controller ports
- External hard drive at launch
- An Internet Browser onboard the console on CD like Dreamcast's was
- No less then 32MB memory cards
- 802.11B or 802.11G built in Ethernet support and n extra accessory that does wireless network to cable based networks
- One good racing game at launch
- One good First person shooter at launch
- 4 GHz plus CPU

Revolution

- Backwards capable with Gamecube Mini discs
- DVD playback

Make Revolution a lot like Panasonic Q

- Make something like the Panasonic Q....I love that concept!
- Definably more online games than Gamecube
- Graphics that are close to Microsoft's next generation console
- Internet Browser disc
- 802.11B or 802.11G Ethernet built in console
- On board game save memory at least 8 MB worth
- Any kind of hard drive would be good
- One game that stars Mario
- Perhaps a Mario Kart game at launch
- A RPG is a must at launch
- Be able to play Gameboy Advance and Nintendo DS games through it
- Have it compatible with Gamecube controller.

Xenon

- Be able to play Xbox games
- Keep the 3.5 GHz processor and 500 MHz GPU!
- Play MP3s in the games
- Come with PC software that allows you to put Mp3s/ WMA on the external hard drive, What does Microsoft care? They own PC!
- Make console rock solid
- Backwards compatible with Xbox controllers
- Make the console glow in the dark!
- Put a light in it so the outer rim glows Green or Blue depending on which color you buy. It's simple for Microsoft to do, just have a regular light near the top and have transparent borders so the whole console lights up. That would be much fancier than having a small light to show that it's on.
- DVD playback
- Microsoft should make a new Halo game when it comes out!
- Be able to download game saves onto Xenon without owning a Gameshark!
- Have 802.11B with the console so it can connect to another wireless Xenon.

- Play Dreamcast games on Xenon!
- Keep the Xbox logo and just have the words Xenon instead of Xbox or whatever the real name is going to be.

Anyways, life is coming along really well. I was listening to MP3s while I play Diablo 2. I talk to David again today, his assignment is in Japan. He told me through chatting that all Japanese know a little English. Probably because UK, Ireland, Australia, USA, and Canada speak English, and there is no way around this. Who knows maybe their looking on my blog right now? It is possible. I can't speak their language, and yet they live on that tiny island grouped together so population wise, it's not needed. I admit a lot of good stuff comes from Japan and China. Except the anime unless it's Final Fantasy or related RPGs than it's okay. Hondas are alright. Randy now owns a Honda Motorcycle from early 80s. He says it runs really well for a 20 year old motorcycle. The guy he bought it from had money for a better motorcycle so he had to sell his old one. Randy got it for only 800 dollars. I haven't seen it yet so I don't know whether to be impressed or keep my comments to myself. Motorcycles have improved in 20 years. 800 bucks is still 800 bucks. Just like cars, you drive them 100,000 miles then the owners sell them for almost half of what it costs to buy new.

Tomorrow will be a lazy day, but I think I'll start Final Fantasy X over again from the beginning. This seems like the logical thing to do since I knew it was a great game and it still has great game play. Plus now since I have a good idea of what to do, I can blaze through all the easy portions. I don't need to see all milk and granny aspects of the game which more then likely means I won't see the alternate ending. I will still have to go to Gamefaqs.com and find a FAQ to guide me through the temples. I already know Sir Auron is the most powerful playable character in the game. I'll use him the most through-out the game. It doesn't matter - I won't let my remaining summer break days go to waste.

Emulated Linux on Dell!!!! (2004-07-24 13:44)

Sorry about the 4 plus day period between this post and last post. Actually, I was very busy today. First, I played Final Fantasy X-2, and then I played a little Mega Man 7. Mega Man 7 was fun, just not as fun as Final Fantasy X-2. I talked to David for four hours (I'll get to this later) than after. On Wednesday, I did figure out how to burn Knoppix CD to ISO, and emulate Linux on my Dell. Big applause for me.

Today, I got Linux to run on my Dell computer. It's not the conventual way either. The problem is no emulation software to boot Linux partitions on Windows were free until I came across Corporative Linux 0.6.1. Anyways, to make this work, Windows needs to fake a cold boot of Linux. My blasted Dell has this issue of locking non-Windows OS out so when I take Linux related college classes I can not work on Linux on my Dell. This program runs under Windows, and runs Linux by booting it up naturally. Anyways, that's how I can use Linux on my computer. On my other computers, I do it the normal way. Otherwise I work on Linux homework on my other PCs.

On Wednesday I found a free CD image, containing over 50 open source programs for Windows called GNUWIN. I know, to many bloggers, MS windows is the only option. For those of you who game through Windows, this software downloadable off several servers linking to <http://gnuwin.org> gives you almost every Microsoft Windows port of Linux software in the world. To burn this program to CD for free, I use Burn4Free at <http://burn4free.com>. All programs included with GNUWIN II are open source, not freeware. Freeware is closed source software that's freely available. Open source and freeware is much like free Mountain Dew. If Mt. Dew tastes great, and if it were free, most people would gratefully take it and think nothing of it. I also know, from being a Windows user myself, that whatever works, commercial or not commercial, will be what most users will use. It makes perfect sense doesn't it? This defiantly applies games. If it has good graphics, and very awesome game play physics then most people will get that game. I am like this. I have this huge videogame collection with over 300 games.

Thursday, I didn't go anywhere special so I concentrated on cartoon sketches. I have my own drawing which doesn't fall under any other category besides amateur. It's better than stick-men drawings, and my sketches are even partially 3D! I drew myself holding a can of mountain dew, but it found itself in the recycle bin. O_o. I'm not going to post any pics on this blog when my I've just started. The reason being is I wanted to test myself if I could learn how to draw anime off the drawing tutorials. I am really not an anime person nor am I a big artist. The hardest aspect is trying to get the eyes perfect. I know if I can make one eye well, I can always mirror it using Paint. But that didn't stop me from finding out just what it takes to draw the cartoons you see on TV. It's a lot of erasing on MS Paint. I use Paint for everything related to drawing pictures. I downloaded tutorials to my hard drive using the SAVE AS option, and followed the instructions. I examined the pics of course. That was the easy part. I've been working on this from 10PM Thursday up to 7AM Friday. This pretty much kept me away from the Playstation 2 the past 24 hours. Right now I'm trying to beat Chapter 3 in Final Fantasy X-2. I didn't continue practicing drawing tonight, other things were much too important.

I got my tutorials from the following sites:

- Animeworld.com

I am about 44 % into Final Fantasy X-2 now. In each chapter I skip the Macalania Woods. The bluish blobs that change shape and squish Yuna, Rikku and Payne stealing their entire HP. It happens all the time when I'm in this place. It makes me mad, I am trying to avoid this place whenever possible. Anyhow, I've made it to Kilika Island, and did that little mini game with the guards. Once in the jungle, I couldn't get past the bamboo stakes, and accidentally saved during the process. If I can't get past this then I will have to start Chapter 3 over again. Two or three hours will be lost. I have 3 game saves on my memory card. One at my current location, one at the start of chapter 3, and the third must be a new game because I was only 2 hours into it.

Now that I got the Mega Man Anniversary Collection, I might as well get the Street Fighter Anniversary Collection too. Right now I don't really know. I am not a 2D fighter fan. I don't like Marvel vs. Capcom for it's insane speed for combos and stuff. Although Street Fighter is slower, this previous experience ruined my interest in 2D fighting games. SFAC comes with the Street Fighter 2 Animated anime Movie. Hmm, I wonder if I stick this game into a normal DVD player, it'll show the movie? Probably not since the black label says Playstation 2 in white bold letters. When I was at Bob's house yesterday, he had made a new friend, who thinks Mega Man is really cool. This guy wants MMAC, and he thought it was 50 dollars? I knew what the price was so I told him. Anyways, I wanted to watch someone who knew the old games so I could get some extra tips. Frankly, the game is not kind to me. MMAC was one of the top selling games this month on both Gamecube and PS2. It's a very good thing I haven't been around someone who hated Mega Man yet.

I had my 2nd voice-over-IP conversation today. My last one was over a year ago with my friend Bob. Today I talked to my cousin, David, through MSN Messenger 6.2. I know - people do this all the time. I don't because it slows down my surfing speeds. We first talked about Xbox. David owns an Xbox, but he doesn't own many games for it. He only uses it to watch movies, but he also bought surround sound speakers like mine but better, because they're expensive. Sony makes awesome stuff! The Navy gets them from the States, and the US merchandise store on the base can carry only so many games. He apparently lives by a navy landing strip so he sees aircraft take off and land. David's cell phone is out of service in Japan so the only way I can speak to him is MSN messenger's voice-over-IP service. We talked about various Navy aircraft, a little about what is going to replace what and when. He bought a Star Trek movie collection with three movies which he told me all about it. We both like ST: Voyager. He'll give me some more episodes when he comes home near the end of the year. I told him about Project 64K, and how he could connect to a gaming server to play Goldeneye 007 or Mario Kart 64 with me.

Some Interesting news from NGemu.com saying that Xbox emulation is possible at full speed on current PCs. Before I was saying that Xbox emulation would only be possible on 4 GHz Pentium 4 processor, 512 MB of SDRAM, and a 128-bit Geforce 5700. According to NGemu, some XBOX games like Turok: Evolution runs well on a Pentium 4 2.8 GHz CPU, 512 MB of RAM and Nvidia Geforce 5600. The developers of both Xeon and Cxbx are working hard trying to find ways to fully emulate Halo, and Panzer Dragoon Orta. The current Xbox emulators need a BIOS, and a copied ISO image from the original Xbox DVD. I tried running Xbox version of Halo on my Dell, and I couldn't get it to work. I will keep my eye on Cxbx emulator when it comes out. I'm excited for the first release! In case you were wondering, I want the XBOX game to be playable from the DVD-ROM drive and not ISO. Three emulators achieved this, EPSXE, SSF, and PCSX.

On the other hand, PS2 emulation sounds to be getting more practical. The latest unreleased build of PCSX2 is able to runs games in real time from the screenshots I saw. I downloaded the latest and greatest Direct X 9.0 plugin (GSPX9) for PCSX2, and tried to get MMAC to work on it. Unfortunately, I couldn't get the emulator to recognize the plugin.

Then by the end of my conversation with David I told him to imagine himself in a packer jacket, a cheese head hat, with green and yellow face paint on a horse! I thought this was very funny. He said I was very tired, and needed to stop talking too him. I did listen to him.

horse vacation (2005-11-09 08:51:00)

Hello Ian's Smashing Good Blog Site, I was surfing blogs and paused at your title Emulated Linux on Dell!!!!. Thats what really caught my eye. I am promoting a horse halters related website and need to find more information to offer some of my internet friends. Not exactly what I was looking for but you have givin me some good ideas about what could be done with my horse halters related site that I will book mark and come back to hopefully get some more education from your site, you have some good stuff maybe you could visit my website and let me know what you think in my contact page. Just click on the link horse halters. Thank you and I wish you well .

Hey Ian's Smashing Good Blog Site GREAT title Emulated Linux on Dell!!!!. Thats what actually caught my eye. I was surfing blogs to try and help my customers and visitors with information on my website about # #Keyword # # and paused to read but ran out of time. I will book mark it and come back to read later. This isn't really what I was looking for what I really need is information about <http://www.horse-lover-gift-ideas-central.com> related subjects but thank you and I shall return. I wish you well.

Ian's Quintessential Blog Opens Today (2004-07-25 13:45)

Hello again. I spent 12 hours searching for a new backup blog when I finally got one. I modified it heavily into a blog template which became known as Ian's Quintessential Blog v1.0. I got the word 'quintessential' from Quintessential Player. I thought the word was cool. Anyways, this webpage wasn't going to be on my Geocities site since the upload manager sent me invalid html responses. I had this problem before with them. So I joined 0catch.com today, and I got 100 MB server space free! I find only 1 thing wrong with it....the host webpage doesn't believe in putting adds on the bottom of the webpage. The ad banners makes my webpage look out-of-line!

Here's how the webpage is suppose to look (snapshot taken from my HD)

- Full entry backup of Modblog
- New photos up later today or Monday
- Link to Guest book and forum

- 100 % new material!
- Image loading screen (nice!)

I finally got a guest book post from Sega Slayer, owner of <http://segasucks.com>. I visited his page back in 2003. He's an anti-Sega propagandist! He was very mean. He says he hates my webpage for he couldn't figure out what it was for, and even my blog. I have no idea how he found my post about him in October 2003? Did I send him a full link?

New Playstation 3 Info

Sony, one of the Blu-Ray founders, is rumored to incorporate a BD-ROM into Playstation 3. This will transform 10s of millions of gamers into Blu-ray users. Single layer Blu-Ray discs can carry 25 Gigabytes of data. This is perhaps the most exciting part of the Playstation 3. DVDs can only carry 4.7 GB, and HD-DVDs (AKA DVD9) can carry twice that much. The first generation of BD-RWs for PCs are out already, but it won't be practical for home use until next year. 1x BD-RWs can burn approx. 36MB per second to disc. 2x BD-RW can burn approx. 72 MB per second. The discs must cost 10 dollars each! They will probably read CDs and DVDs. Currently, some DVD burners will only yet you burn 4.5 GB of data on DVDR. Games don't need that kind of space unless it were for going to put several PS2 games on one BD disc, then it would be practical. Blu-Ray discs could hold a higher resolution of video. A good resource for BD-ROMS are at <http://blu-ray.com>. Four of those 23 GB discs would be more than my external hard drive! That's amazing! The successor of the DVD is in question right now. Both will be available next year, but only one will be a universal format for home video. Even the HD-DVD9 will be enough for a 2 hour movie, and with MPEG 4 video compression, you'll think it's the greatest thing that ever came to your television! I'm going with Blu-ray because it holds twice as much data. I'm sure someone will figure out that they can incorporate both blu-ray and HD-DVD into the same drive. If I don't get an Xbox Next for Xmas next year – it's got to be a blu-ray drive!

This morning I've read Game Informer Magazine's August issue had one review in it talking about blu-ray discs. I know where they got their information. It was from E-week.com. I had fun reading the Japanese port of Star Ocean: Til the Ends of Time. That game finally out in Japan after 2 years of delay! I own Star Ocean II yet haven't played it yet. For one the old game (released in 1999) is just that – it's outdated and still looks like the SNES game, Star Ocean! Yay! Another Xenogears clone! Anyways, the game is rumored to be two DVDs! The largest game ever! It's being shipped on August 30th. I have to get my priorities straight. For one, I'm not done with Final Fantasy X-2 yet. I have yet to start other RPGs like Grandia Xtreme and Suikoden III. The first PS2 I bought, Xenosaga, I got lost in 6 months ago so I stop playing it all together. It wasn't that the game was really bad. I kept going into places where I was stuck going nowhere. I had my walk-through-doors action replay cheat on so I could access restricted areas so it would speed up this game (it was going on forever!). However, in Xenosaga, going through some doors makes the game go back to previous scenes. In short, if this happened without a recent game save, I was screwed. I like the game for what it was and not because it was perfect. It was heavily story based. I play for 5 minutes and another cut-scene activates. After 10 of them in 1 hour, I came to expect a cut scene every 10 minutes, and if I didn't get one, something wrong happened. Xenosaga is a cross between Robotech, Final Fantasy VIII, and Macross. I remember Robotech appearing on Cartoon Network. The game has no FMV, and all the games cut-scenes are in real-time. This is fine, but I rather have FMV mixed in. And, yes, I was reading Playstation 1 and 2 reader reviews off IGN.com for several hours this morning.

Here is a list of new games on my list

1. Doom 3 (PC) Genre - FPS
2. Star Ocean 3 – 'Til the Ends of Time (PS2) Genre – Action RPG
3. Splinter Cell 2 (PC) – FPS / Stealth
4. Metriod Prime 2 Echoes (Gamecube) - FPS
5. Halo 2 – (Xbox) FPS
6. Tales of Symphonia (Gamecube) Turn Based RPG

7. Conker Live and Uncut – Action Platformer

That's enough games for now. I probably will get Doom 3, and the rest have to be waited in line for I have to get a PDA so I can play roms! Games or Pocket PC? Pocket PC! TechTV, err...G4-TechTV's Fresh Gear showed how excited they were about the Zire 78 Palm Based PDA. It has a 1 mega-pixel digital camera in it. I would say wow except I have a 3.3 mega-pixel Sony digital camera, and it's starting to get a little old, 2 years this November. The image quality is questionable. It doesn't take very good pictures in dim lighting without the flash. Sometimes the flash doesn't go off. The D-pad's center is hard to press down sometimes. I am missing 1 64-meg flash card. I really need to find it. I hate taking 8 pictures, and have to upload them to my PC! I'll be 15 years until a Giga-pixel camera comes out. Anyhow, anymore then 5 Mega pixels will not look any better on the Internet, unless it's a very high quality JPEG at 1600x1200. I have a feeling I keep using the one I have for another 5 years or until it breaks.

Enjoy

Onslaught of old vs. new | Score: Retro - 1 3D - 0 (2004-07-27 13:46)

I found something really, really cool today. Cell phones have motion cameras on them and if they weren't so well known to many Americans, another product would be heard off, not to teens and adults...but aimed to children. A WEBCAM for Gameboy Advance silly! Yes, you can hook up a camera to the Gameboy, and transfer streaming images with sound to another person using a Gameboy Advance with this particular webcam on the other end via internal modem. From what I know - the person sending the data doesn't need an ISP. He/she needs a phone line, a GBA, and Campho Advance. There are no hidden fees attached. Take a camera on the go! So far Digital Art Corp. only sells it off their webpage listed below. I already thought of it. No PCs, no Internet, no fees! If this thing takes off because GBA is very popular amongst kids, it will have an impact of new devices that do the same thing. The only place to get the Camero Advance is on the webpage, <http://www.digitalact.co.jp/>. Digital Act also has a webcam product that hooks up the TV.

On Google News, I heard some of the headlines are on retro games! Forbes.com, CNN.com, MSNBC, and CNET.com each had their own version of the story. Yes, these are the same games you can download free off the Internet. However, this is the part the gaming industry doesn't want you to know. Ya so it's illegal? Is there any other way to play Genesis though? The fact remains you either own the game or you don't. Since there are alternative means of playing them, most people aren't bothered by it being illegal to possess them except for Genesis roms. Sega recently announced all Genesis roms are abandon-ware, and therefore not illegal to have on one's hard-drive. Anyways, to get back on my original topic, I think Nintendo plays the biggest part in retro gaming. A hand full of old-school games can run on their Gameboy Advance handheld so Nintendo exercises it's licenses to the limit. Nintendo probably has emulators designed for Gameboy Advance for all the consoles previous to it. There must be more than 15 anthologies out for it. I own one, Super Mario Advance, and I probably won't invest money in any handheld any more. Anyhow, I found a connection to this retro gaming excitement - all retro craze articles have the word 'Nintendo' in them somewhere. It stands too reason, through-out the 80s, Nintendo was a monopoly in gaming industry. I won't tell why...I think I already know why. Then from 1989 - 1996, Sega had their glory years in the 16-bit generation, publishing very fun, and popular games like Mortal Kombat, Alex the Kid, Sonic the Hedgehog 1 and 2, and Lemmings. I was interested in neither handheld. The 70s and 80s generation grew up, right? So the point I'm getting too is all these former NES and Atari 2600 gamers talk about is the glory days when games were based on sprites, not polygons and much, much simpler. (the NES and Atari 2600 controller only had 2 buttons, and the Genesis controller had six.) Back then, I was a very active kid, riding bike every week, swimming, active in boy scouts. Then I got into N64 for 2 years, and Dreamcast for another 2 before I switched back to Nintendo to support their next generation console in that I was heavily into following the hardware specs, and executive launch titles. Today, I was playing Sonic the Hedgehog 2 on the Nintendo Gamecube, and that's retro enough.

I hear rumors, that in a couple of years, Sega is going to try to issue a Genesis controller packaged with 6 - 10 games that'll directly hook up to any TV. Atari is already doing this with a higher tech 20 dollar joystick loaded with 10 Atari classics with power cable and RCA connection. I think Atari is breaking even on production costs on their new retro joystick. However, Nintendo is selling 1,000 fold that with Gameboy Advance sales.

Why I never was into the original Gameboy. Poor graphics and too expensive. I remember being a little interested in Sega Game Gear during gym in grade school. Game Gear was in color and looked powerful because of it. It's erotic that a less powerful system like Gameboy out lasted a newer higher tech handheld because the name brand was Nintendo. I didn't have access to the Internet so the only games I knew on the Game Gear were a Sonic game and Mortal Kombat. I heard the Gameboy was a popular handheld. It was the clucky green & black original. I bought a GBA in 2001 and played Mario Kart Super Circuit or Castlevania - Circle of the Moon at Renaissance Academy during lunch. After school, I bought a Gameboy Advance SP at the full asking price days before January 1st, but never got back into Gameboy at all since high school ended. Hmm, I was playing Tetris and Mario Kart on GBA in high school. Tetris is a very well known Gameboy game. I was trying to get even rows, and beat the highest score - of course. It is still very addictive videogame. I also thought about getting Pyro Pyro Advance for GBA. I love that game, Bust-a-Groove, for N64, although I never owned one.

I got money yesterday! I spent it on Onimusha 3 - Demon Siege. I liked what Onimusha 2 offered which also introduced me to the popular trilogy. I owned a PS2 after the second Onimusha was at it's height of popularity. I knew it was popular because the History Channel used the game in one of tributes of modern Japan prospective of ancient Japan. Onimusha 3 is Gamestats.com's 21st most popular PS2 game. Ya, I know, I really suck. I know Onimusha 2 was an alright hack 'n slash game, not that it was hugely popular on all continents (and islands). The gaming community calls it Capcom's answer to Tecmo's (now very popular) Ninja Gaiden for Xbox. Ninja Gaiden was originally a blockbuster arcade game in the early 1980s. I don't have much summer break left so I probably won't have time to get into a new game like Ninja Gaiden. I hear it's graphics are amongst the best on the console. Gamers who played it will say, "No duh!" Hmm, that went well. Yet there are people who haven't heard of Ninja Gaiden? Well now those of you who haven't heard - have. Both Onimusha and Ninja Gaiden are ninja vs. monster games. Yeah hear? Okay...good.

I have a conversation with Addicted2Yew on messenger. I can't tell you what she looks like, but I can tell you she likes Sega Genesis and Nintendo 64. She loves to play Goldeneye with her friends, and thinks Alex the Kid and Sonic the Hedgehog are cool. Somehow we got in discussion about baseball cards. I said that I have four, 2 inch, 3 ring binders full of them from fair to near mint condition ranging from 1986 up to 1996. And most of it is upper deck! I found out she's okay with baseball. I was wondering if Nintendo makes Japanese baseball cards. The fact remains that they were formerly a card company. I hear Nintendo is in the Magic the Gathering business. I was never into pen and paper role playing games myself. It would be very hard playing a two player game by myself - true? Nintendo still makes a big profit off Pokemon trading cards I think. Whatever works for them is fine. I still think the cartoon sucked!

Other very interesting news I came across, Wall Street and other similar world-wide stock-exchange centers agree that the gaming industry is now a monopoly. Microsoft saw this happening long ago. And in some people's opinion, it was all Sega's doing when they asked Microsoft to put their Windows CE into Dreamcast. Microsoft isn't dumb...they probably said to themselves, "Hmm, yet's make this more profitable and build our own consoles and make it the most powerful one at that. Instead they have exceeded and failed at the same time. They failed to create a budget friendly console but succeeded in barely breaking even on production costs through software. One reason it's starting to be a monopoly is take mergers make big publishers - way too big and control way too much value. Electronic Arts (US) is to Vivendi Universal (France) as Nintendo is to Sony Computer Entertainment (Japan). I didn't mention Microsoft because they are the biggest technology-related company in the world. It would be a little unfair. Most of the gaming publisher monopolies are out of state, and other countries don't have strict limits on how large one business can be. Exporting millions of dollars into one company in another country has to be eye opening to American businesses. There is also talk about Hollywood studios publishing videogames...oh wait...they already are (Universal and Disney Interactive) Damn. What's the world coming too? Legalized gambling on Xbox Live? Televised Madden 2004 exhibition matches? Professional Gamer Organizations? A 24 hour cable channel on videogames? A 300 % increase in game developer start-up companies in the pass 5 years? The scary thought that all these exist?

Generations 1985 - 2001 (2004-07-29 13:47)

The article below taken off the 'Console Wars' section at my personal webpage. I checked it for spelling errors and some grammar mistakes with Microsoft Word. http://www.geocities.../consolewars_v4.html

NES (Nintendo Entertainment System) (1985 - 1996)

NES was the first console of Nintendo's big business as a console manufacturer. It gets very confusing who Nintendo's competitors were. Atari 2600 was still competing against Nintendo in 1985. I've heard sites that said that it was the Itellivision. It is true that some developers were waiting for Atari to declare bankruptcy. Atari was highly guarded for successfully lengthen the life of the Atari 2600 to up to 1989 (that's 8 years). There were still games coming out for Atari 2600 in 1986. Atari was most successful in the late 70s, and early 80s, but lost money due to inflation, and the inability to produce at better product. As a result Atari became a multiplatform developer where it still exists in one form or other creating games for Nintendo, Sony or Microsoft. I am not clear on the story on "The Crash of 1984." Around this time, Nintendo had Super Mario Bros. along with Duck Hunt and Track & Field, and it was sold with the console to offer some sort of value package. The package sold really well. People loved the plumber so much that he began his carrier starring in several more games, and people end up buying every game starring Mario and Luigi. In 1987, it came apparent that SEGA, formally a US Army division called Service Games, had a more powerful console called the SEGA Masters System just after they became a console manufacture. SEGA didn't have the 3rd party developer support that Nintendo had. Those years of the NES was the time that people were passion to play games over and over. Nintendo made highly regarded deals with videogame developers since the U.S. government regulated monopolies like Microsoft. Nintendo turned out lucky that it wasn't one at the turn of the decade.

Nintendo had the same success with the Gameboy, which is basically a NES shrunk down into a smaller device. The original Gameboy was in green and black. Technology was too expensive to develop a color LCD screen in 1989. So Nintendo produced a monochrome green and black screen. A monochrome LCD screen was less costly then black and white version. So Nintendo chose to create games in "Green and Black." The finished design of Gameboy was the exact replica of the NES design. The 8-bit handheld stayed in the market for 11 years without any significant drops in popularity. Gameboy sales / games had a 3:1 ratio over Nintendo 64. Everyone loved Gameboy. Nintendo became a monopoly in the handheld market for 10 years since 1989, and are said to sell more GBAs than Playstation 2s. The government had trouble classifying Nintendo has a monopoly because it wasn't in the console market. They classified Nintendo as a monopoly in 1988 when Nintendo had a contract that each videogame developer had to supply the NES with 3 titles until it could supply 1 title to another console. Still today, the former Nintendo President, Hiroshi Yamauchi, owns the Seattle Mariners, and a NBA team. Nintendo owns large stock in both teams. I can only tell you that I own five Gameboy Advance games, so I missed out on the Gameboy entirely.

Super Nintendo (1991 – 1996)

Super Nintendo is probably another successful attempt by Nintendo. It was released in 1991, and its first game was Super Mario World. It's the only console that went from 2.7 MHz up to 21 MHz. The first chip to be capable of very low sprite based 3D is DSP. I don't know what this stands for, but it makes the 16-bit console capable of 3D. Remarkable really since 16-bits isn't enough to run 3D games on the PC unless it's Doom or Wolfenstein. Games which run on the DS chip were Super Mario Kart and PilotWings. It wasn't really much to look now a days, but this is when the first 3D games first came out. It brought the SNES from 2.98 MHz to 3.58 MHz. That's not even the most powerful chip on SNES cartridges.

The Super FX is the most famous chip of the 16-bit generation. This made the underpowered SNES more powerful (10 MHz) than Genesis. The most famous game to use it was Star Fox because it looked better than anything else in 1993. The studio to make it was Argonaut which developed Star Fox. Vortex was another game, but I haven't heard of it. I knew about Star Fox because of the sequel, Star Fox 64, which I own and beaten. Then the Super FX 2 came out clocking SNES at 21 MHz. Games to use it are Micro Machines, Super Mario World 2, Street Fighter Alpha 2, and Doom.

For compression, since SNES by itself had none, was a use of a decompression chip sort of like WinZip acting to decompress a compressed archive. This chip was for very large carts like Super Mario RPG and Kirby Land 3. Super Mario RPG was the last game to be released for SNES. I know that the Super Mario RPG rom was something like 42 MB and that rom file was compressed to about 6.5 MB.

It's funny that the biggest upgrade from NES and Super NES was the ability to rotate sprites from a bird's eye view. I remember the NES had Metal Gear, and it was the few games that used this technique. The best way to describe this is the NES's sprites were mostly GIFs. Everything was frames much like how animated gifs are made. The SNES was powerful enough to move the main character all by itself using advance sprite engine. Just like polygons do.

The way that Super NES games were copied was from the Super Nintendo Disc system. This was basically a device that could copy SNES games on a floppy disk.

To make it simpler

10 frame animated GIF sprite 210x210 – 30K (NES)

10 frame sprite 210x210 (using the SNES hardware) – 10K

The SNES CD that was never released – yet it was under 3rd party.

Nintendo canceled the SNES CD because of the début between them and Sony. The SNES CD would mean Nintendo games on CD, which would mean CD-Quality music and no space concerns for developers. Nintendo decided not to release one at the last minute. UFO, who also did their famous N64 backup device (which I haven't seen ever), released Super UFO, which could backup on floppy disk. UFO was superior because it could read Game Doctor or Pro Fighter files. For games that could fit on floppy disk, Bung makes a CD Drive for SNES called the Game Station. Game Station was the predecessor of the Doctor V64 which backed up N64 games.

Sega Genesis (1989 - 1996)

SEGA Genesis (MEGA DRIVE to the rest of the world) is not Sega's latest console, but Sega's most successful system. I don't know myself because I never own Genesis or any console for that matter before 1996. The debut price was better than Nintendo's SNES selling at 190 US dollars. Sega finally got to steal the market for a little while before the Super NES came out. What is interesting about it is that it had some original titles like Nintendo, but it had a mascot Sonic the Hedgehog. His debut in Sonic the Hedgehog (1991) was the top selling game for the console. He was fast and everyone liked him. Sonic Team soon made three sequels (including Sonic CD), and Traveler's Tales made an enhanced Sonic 3D Blast late in the consoles life. Sega never really gained back the market after Super NES took over in 1992. SNES games just were too good for Sega's luck. Nintendo and Sega both survived the crash of the videogame industry in the late 1980s known as "the great videogame crash of 1984". Atari was sold off to Hasbro Interactive. And all the Atari clones of that time disappeared.

Who could forget Castlevania on the Genesis? The Castlevania series has had a repetition of being good. Same goes with Castlevania - Blood Lines (1994). Castlevania is a well known game today as it was back then. It was a horror survival title for mature audiences and had a twist that made people like it and play long hours. Sega released Shadow Dancer (1992) as a sword action game. Ever played any of these games myself. Other games that came along that people liked are : Mortal Kombat II (1992), and an enhanced version of Mega Man (1993), Ecco the Dolphin (1992) Golden Axe (1989), and Strider (1990) and Shinobi (1993 : before the remake on Playstation 2)

Sega also released the Sega CD add-on in 1993 with their flagship title Sonic CD. Sega set one milestone, the first 3D game called Virtua Fighter became the first 3D game ever, and it's in the Smithsonian in Washington DC. Sonic CD turned out to be pretty good with improved graphics over Sonic 2. Although some people bought the CD add on, many people ignored Sega CD for whatever reason. I learned that Genesis was more popular than SNES. It was released under the best attentions. Sony was going to make Nintendo's new CD peripheral, but it never took off. It was scrapped months before it went under mass production.

The same year Sega came out with the Sega 32x which made the Genesis 32-bit. Sega made the wrong decision in making it, and the developers didn't have enough time to develop any high profile games for it. Doom, and Virtua Fighter was developed for it. That cost Sega millions of dollars that they couldn't invest into the Saturn, in my opinion.

In 1996, Sega released a 16-bit version of Sonic 3D Blast. It resembled closely to the Saturn counterpart. It didn't do as well as Sega hoped it would. But it was a pioneer as 16 bit titles go.

Sega Genesis had an unusually long life of seven years in the United States (1989-1996). It is still popular in Brazil and Australia, South Korea and a few Asian countries today.

Playstation (1994 - Present)

Sony Playstation was released in the US in December 02, 1994 costing 400 dollars. Sony was really successful a year later around Christmas of 1996. No good games came out in 1995. Although Nintendo 64 was a bit better nudged in with the competition, PSone was going to see it's console triple any console that existed in homes across America. One reason was because after 1996, Sony designed a new Playstation had been bug free unlike the original. Sega Saturn looked like an expensive alternative compared to Playstation which ultimately lead to it's death. When no software is developed for it it's considered 'dead'. Playstation stayed number one because it was on shelves since 1995. Playstation has games like Spyro the Dragon (1997), Madden 2000 (1999), Final Fantasy 7 (1997), and Resident Evil II (1998) to name a few. It had a long enough life span were you could see a sequel or two for your favorite game. The list is too large after 1997 to name all decent titles for Playstation.

Originally Sony was asked to build a CD add-on for Super Nintendo. Nintendo had the right idea there. But Sony Entertainment shot Nintendo in the foot and said, "We are going to compete against you, Nintendo." They paid off all their debts they owned for manufacturing, and became everyone's favorite videogame system from 1996 - 2000.

Sony also made a developers kit version for PSX called the Yaroze. It was very expensive, but it made it possible to create your own games running an advanced platform such as the Playstation. Most computers weren't as fast. I suppose that the Playstation 2 version is called Yaroze 2. I am fantasizing a bit, but wouldn't you be able to import your Yaroze game to a Yaroze 2 to run on Playstation 2. Think of it, you can have your own underground ps2 game coping business. All you would need is a DVD burner and they've come down in price since 2000 when it first appeared commercially. .

I enjoyed games like Ridge Racer Type 4 because it was racing game. I also played Dino Crisis 2 and got somewhat far into it. I found out the red raptors are inventible! I got hurt badly from the raptors so I didn't play anymore. I also played Final Fantasy VIII, and got to the end of the 2nd disc and somehow I wasn't powerful enough to defeat one of the bosses near the end. I also played Chrono Cross on it. That was pretty good. Then I got into Crash Bandicoot 2 (a little late, 2004) because it was a platform game. Anyways, I listed to specs below.

SEGA SATURN (1995 - 1998)

Released in November 1994, Sega Saturn took popularity from the Neo Geo Turbo. Sega Saturn was priced at huge 400 bucks for a combo w/ Virtua Fighter (1994). But in 1994, all the good Playstation games continued development. Ridge Racer from Namco, was Playstation's premiere racing game. This was an early driving simulation that had magnificent graphics for its time. The control was also new at the time, but Ridge Racer also was a high profile. Sega spent years trying to come up with a solid design for their console. Unlike Nintendo, Sega decided to go with optimal disc. Sega CD failed because the lack of good advertisement campaign, and with only one good game out, it wasn't worth it. Sega also had high profile games in store, like Panzer Dragoon (1995) Panzer Dragoon II (1996) with the following, Sega also had plans for Sonic in Sonic 3D Blast (1996), but became a lack luster because of it's bad control. It proves that 3D games are horrible with a digital pad. However, Sonic Team came out with another game called NiGHTS(1996), and released an analog controller (looks exactly like the Dreamcast controller). Nights had good graphics for it's time, it also featured a fully 3D engine. The death of Saturn was it hard in 1997 when Squaresoft released Final Fantasy 7 on Playstation. Final Fantasy went on to be a famous game which marked the beginning of 32-bit age after Konami's Suikoden (1996) RPGs. It may surprised everyone, but Sega came out with 5 fantastic games, Radiant Silvergun (1997), Panzer Dragoon Saga (1998), Shining Force III (1999), Burning Rangers (1999), and Lunar : The Sliver Star Story (1996) in return to make up for that. Shining Force III, and Panzer Dragoon became ideal RPGs to bet when buying the console. 3rd party games like Grandia and Lunar were close behind with sales, but also were on Playstation too. So 3rd party RPGs didn't really sell well on Saturn. Sega also tried having laser gun action with games like Virua Cop (1994) and House of the Dead (1995). But it was all done, Sega announced Saturn dead later that year. In 1996, Sony updates the PSX to just 'Playstation' (version 1.1) which means they fixed a lot of bugs, and made the console more durable in the end. I mean there are still the originals around. The PSone is said to be more durable than all previous versions of Playstation including Playstation 2s which were released a year afterwards. Now, everyone who wants a Playstation can buy one (in 1999). Sega Saturn survives today through videogame retailers selling used versions. Playstation gets a lot more use, Saturn seems old to us now and outdated. Only Nights, Panzer Dragoon Saga, Reliant Silvergun, and Shining Force III stood the test of time on it. Dreamcast was not backwards capable with Saturn games. Saturn saw no support in Japan because Sega went completely to support Dreamcast, which was the predecessor. So sales dried up completely because of it. In a sense, Sega killed Saturn.

My personal Impressions on owning a Sega Saturn are moderate because I knew that Sega would have a good product. Sega Saturn feels empty inside and not built with as strong plastic as Dreamcast and Nintendo 64. The controller feels light in my hand. I am very use to the Playstation controller feel. So I reject some of the Saturn's controller. Although, it is packaged away in my closet, I have played games like Sonic 3D Blast, Sega Championship Rally, Rayman, Gex, and Nights. Nights is my favorite Saturn title. I could never find a 3D controller for my Nights title, so I failed to make me play it for hours. Sega Rally is a good racing game. I like drafting all the time. It's an average game in my opinion. Not as fun as some of the RPGs on Playstation, but does have a little good playing it. It is 3D and I can understand that it can barely handle 3D racers. Playstation was supposed to be that way, until they came out with Gran Turismo, and that opened some eyes. Some never knew it was possible. So all and all I give Saturn a 6.0 out of 10.

This is my impressions of the Nintendo 64. The only console which went from low resolution to high resolution well almost. Some people thought Perfect Dark ran in high resolution. That's because N64 had a 4 MB expansion pack released in 1998 with Star Wars Rogue Squadron. I have no idea how they made a 64 bit machine look like an early 128-bit generation game like in Perfect Dark and Turok 2: Seeds of Evil. One thing that made Nintendo a recognizable console was Rare (which later moved to Microsoft Gaming Studios.) But kept the platform games favorable (especially Conker's Bad Fur Day) until Nintendo could reorganize a better plan for their next generation console. Nintendo had released Legend of Zelda Ocarina of Time (an exceptional game) The first game was another Mario platform surprisingly - Super Mario 64. Both are on the top 50 best videogames of all time (source: Game Informer Magazine.) Nintendo didn't get any support from any RPGs, so Final Fantasy never made it to Nintendo 64. So Nintendo missed out of Squaresoft's multimillion dollar high profile project due to Nintendo's old technology of cartridge-based games. Although most of the games used a midi version cd quality music found in most Playstation games. Nintendo did support MP3s in three N64 titles : Resident Evil 2, Conker's Bad Fur Day, and Perfect Dark. MP3 fitted cd quality audio onto a 512 MB cartridge, their largest cartridge. If Nintendo had technology to produce a 1 Gigabyte cartridge, they may have pulled off the Final Fantasy 7 title in 1997. But the technology wasn't there to make 1 GB carts.

Games like Legend of Zelda Ocarina of Time, Mario Kart 64, Perfect Dark, Banjo Kazooie, Ridge Racer, Madden Football, All Star Baseball, Turok 2, Orge Battle 64 and Rayman 2 kept the console alive along enough for people to not say, "Nintendo Sucks." Nintendo 64 was good enough, that it didn't suck though it didn't have the balls that Playstation has.

Nintendo 64 was expensive to make, but in 1996, the cartridge technology was improved enough that it would still be good to go. And this was 8 months before Intel came out with the Pentium II with 64 MB of RAM. Back then, Nintendo didn't scope out the cash and make the outrageous deal with IBM which they did in 1999. It was rather a large sum of money.

Then Nintendo released a disc drive in Japan. The most famous games for it were Mario Paint, Simcity 2000, and Legend of Zelda Ocarina of Time – Master Quest. LoZ-OoTMQ was originally designed for the disc drive which was going to be brought out much sooner. The Master Quest has more dungeons and increases overall difficulty of Ocarina of Time adding more monsters in various places.

Sega Dreamcast (1999 - 2001)

After the demise of the Saturn, could anyone say that Dreamcast sucked too? It wasn't great, but it wasn't horrible. Some people were surprised that Dreamcast was as small as it was. The controller is the almost the sized of the console. Playstation 2 was this too cool for Dreamcast. Sega continued relations with NEC to provide their processor. NEC, the 2nd largest microchip distributor in Japan. In my opinion, Dreamcast sounds better then Playstation or Nintendo 64. Sega reentered the console genre, this time a few new 1st party developers and all the other developers came back too (Activision, Capcom, Midway, Uri Soft, Namco, CBI, Crave, Infogrames) As for games went, Sega surprised everyone with Virtua Fighter 3, the only fighter with 128-bit graphics at the time. The time was November 1998 when it was released. Sega released Sonic Adventure (1999), an improvement over Sonic 3D Blast (1996), on Dreamcast. It didn't sell over a million copies, but did get media attention. Sega wanted Sonic to be known as the blue blur revisited like Genesis games were known to be. Sonic the Hedgehog 3 is one of the most popular Genesis games ever created. Sega had strike a very big deal with Namco to make a port of the arcade game, Soul Caliber (1999). Soul Caliber was the first Dreamcast title to sell over a million copies. The title was arcade perfect and looked better than any other launching title.

Sega was determined or desperate (what ever way you view it) to became focused in North America. The huge marketing campaign was unleashed in 1999 to show off Sega's new console with advertisements to support Sega's flagship title, Sonic Adventure and also Soul Caliber, NFL 2K, and Power Stone. Later Sega advertised Resident Evil 2, Crazy Taxi, Jet Grid Radio, and Space Channel 5 on MTV. Resident Evil was a popular horror survival action game upgraded to Dreamcast. Space Channel 5 was a musical game dependant on pressing buttons to keep the beat just like Dance, Dance Revolution. I played neither in my life. Shenmue (2000) was in development for many years, and was the largest scale game on any console prior to it. The game was made by Sega's internal developer AM2 who also makes Virtua Fighter. It's about a man in his mid 20s trying to unlock what really happened to him long ago in this huge vast city environment with thousands of things to do. It's the most expensive videogame ever produced.

Skies of Arcadia became Sega's new RPG from Overworks, the developer also made Shinobi for PS2 and Dreamcast. The Dreamcast version never came to the USA, but the PS2 version has. Gamers could also browse the web and search for Game Saves online. Many people were surprised that Sega brought back, and enhanced the Saturn version of Phantasy Star IV in form of Phantasy Star Online. The game had decent game play and really good graphics. In no way could it compete with today's games. There was only a few online titles, like Vanishing Point (2000), Chu Chu Rocket (1999), NFL 2K1(2001), Unreal Tournament (2001), Quake III (2001), Soldier of Fortune (2001), and Phantasy Star Online (2000, 2001) which went online. Atari came out with one quality title, Ikaruga, which is an overhead shooter, which had high resolution graphics and had tight control which had it overlooked by many gamers. This game is coming out for Gamecube, and hopefully I will have the review up soon! All of the games went online for free but only lasted 6 months as a server. In 2003, those servers still alive, but no one is playing the online on Dreamcast anymore. The largest online game was Quake III which surpassed Phantasy Star Online because Quake III could be played with PC gamers too. Playstation 2 took a huge chunk for Sega's profits. In many ways, Sega underestimated the wrath of Sony's Playstation 2. By the end of 2000, Sega knew that Dreamcast wasn't going to last another year and changes had to be met for the company's survival in the industry. Sega prepared to become a third party. Sega gave Dreamcast source code to Pace which freely displayed it over the Internet. That made this whole underground department of running emulators to run on Dreamcast.

Nintendo Gamecube (2001 - Present)

Gamecube is undeniably Nintendo's biggest project since the SNES. Nintendo called it Project Dolphin for a code name. We know it as Nintendo's only 128-bit gaming machine. Nintendo focused on games not extra hardware format so it allowed the Gamecube to be fast, yet have simple design. That's why I say it's Nintendo's best offering since SNES. The SNES was ugly, but wonderfully designed. Nintendo made the Gamecube have the best compression rate of any console of it's class. A 4:1 Ratio. The design is compact. Nintendo wanted to spend money so it could save money in the long run. My sources say that Gamecube has the cleanest agriculture of any home videogame system to date. Code named Nintendo Dolphin in 1999, Gamecube was leaked on the Internet when Nintendo announced a new gaming platform at E3 1999. Nintendo struck a fairly large deal with IBM to make the central processor that would process the graphics in Gamecube which had a very high compression rate - 1:4 ratio with no image quality lost. It was called the Gecko, the most advanced technology on the market. ATI designed the graphics chip which is also really small in size. One major difference from the N64 and Gamecube is that Gamecube has a disk drive. This disk drive spends 80 resolutions per minute which allows the buffer to analyze data faster than a DVD rom could.

Gamecube is a good machine. It recently came out with Red Faction 2 Nintendo has 5 average to above average first person shooters for the Gamecube, and made 5 first person shooter titles in stock. Nintendo, being the largest videogame developer, has made hit titles like Super Smash Bros Melee, sequel to the N64 fighter. Super Mario Sunshine, Metroid Prime (prequel to Metroid for the NES) , Resident Evil, Legend of Zelda - The Wind Waker (sequel to Ocarina of Time) Sega became a 3rd party developer and brought quality titles such as Super Monkey Ball (2001 Puzzle), Phantasy Star Online (2002 RPG), NFL 2K3 (2002 Sports), NCAA Football 2K3 (2002 Sports), Sega Soccer Slam (2002), Sonic Action Pack (2002 Platformer), and Skies of Arcadia Legends (2003 RPG). Nintendo and Sega have worked together to bring out the next F-Zero game.

Nintendo has come out with a modem, but there is no software to surf the web. I doubt that a 3rd party will have a web browser out before 2004. Nintendo doesn't want gamers to download saved games off the Internet. In my opinion, Nintendo is only hurting themselves. Nintendo also released a Gameboy Advance cart reader which allows you to play GBA games on your television. In May 2003, Nintendo announced Gameboy Player add-on was attached to Gamecube right out of the box still being able to keep the package at 150 dollars. Now you can stick Gameboy cartridges in the side of the console to play it on TV. They reported to also create the Wavebird, a very nice wireless controller, maybe even the best. I believe it's even 800 MHz, and very durable unlike 3rd party controllers.

But the LSD Display for Gamecube is the best add-on you can buy. If you have the money. The LSD Display makes Gamecube portable. Plug the adapter in your car's cigarette lighter, and you have an instant gaming machine of your dreams.

Stay tuned for Part 2 explaining hardware specs and development of Playstation 2 and Xbox.

Fiber Optic Cable (2004-07-29 13:50)

Introduction:

Fiber Optic cables are by far the most advanced cable in the world. They are orange cables with 2 layers of glass inside. The inner layer called the glass core transmits data. The outer layer glass over it reflects data traveling at light speed so it's trapped going one way. There are 2 glass fibers, one that sends the data to the source and one that receives data from the host. There are two types of fiber called modes. Single Mode Fiber Glass is more expensive, but can transfer up to 2 Gigabits per. second. Multi-mode is a lot cheaper (than single-mode) and can transmit data at 1 Gigabyte.

Coaxial Cable and RJ-45

We will get to cost later. Right now we want to talk about coaxial cable since this is the primary networked media today. The most common is unshielded twisted pair because it's the preferred media for Ethernet/LANS. There are 4 classes used today, CAT 4, CAT 5, CAT 5 enhanced and CAT 6. Cat 4 is common with home networks the past 5 years because it's so cheap. A 10 foot CAT 4 cable will run 10 dollars. A hub will cost 30 dollars, and network cards may cost as little as 20 dollars. However, many people are just getting 802.11b and 802.11g wireless cards for their computers because it's easier to operate. 802.11b wireless networks transmit at 11 Mbps and 802.11g can transmit at 100 Mbps. 802.11g networks transmit at 120 Mbps. CAT 5 network supplies are now what's available at Best Buy and CompUSA and the Internet. CAT 3 and CAT 4 networks are now obsolete. Government centers, schools, colleges are already upgraded to CAT 5 enhanced because it covers 1 Gigabyte bandwidth and it's less costly than CAT 6. CAT 6 is the newest Category in RJ 45 type cable, short for patch cable, its blue or grey. It travels at 1024 Mbit / per second with a 600 MHz frequency surpassing CAT 5e.

Fiber Optic Cable was created when?

Fiber Optic started appearing in 1996, but it was so expensive it was only used in big corporations and universities. Fiber can go longer distances than it did in 1996. Fiber Optic was first used in some houses to bring in sunlight from the roof. It can bend any light source at 90 degree angle. The maximum distance of patch cable is 14 meters. The maximum distance of coaxial cable is 100 meters, and the maximum distance of single mode fiber optic cable is 40,000 meters. Any longer and Fiber glass bandwidth will be affected greatly. A repeater is needed to every 75 feet or so to enhance data pulses. A data pulse is an electronic pulse of computer data, called data packets, when it traveling at light speed through the cable. Today that data pulse can travel from 1 Gigabit to 2 Gigabits at once.

CPU resistance to Fiber Optics Great Bandwidth.

CPU power and RAM will slow data down because data is excepted at the processing rate of the CPU. It's much like encoding audio, when the cpu is compressing wav to mp3, it is transferring information from the source file to the destination file at the rate of the CPU's own capacity. There is resistance because data going through random access memory and is delayed and waiting in line in the order it is received. This is not noticeable when download is automatically temperately loaded in virtual memory, but when completed, very noticeable when moved to your destination folder.

Seven Advantages of Fiber Optic Cable

- 1.) It has low Attenuation and high bandwidth. Attenuation is referred to resistance, measured in Ohms, in the wire. Bandwidth is the difference between the highest frequency and lowest frequency of the wire. This is measured in Hz so Gigahertz is 1000 MHz and this means 1 Gigabit of data can transmit at the speed of light. Multimode fiber travels at 1 Gigahertz and Single Mode fiber travels at 100 Gigahertz. Single Mode is obviously faster. Remember Cat 6 patch cable bandwidth is 1 GB running at 600 MHz, the speed of sound.
- 2.) Low Power Lost – Needs less power to transmit data.
- 3.) Immunity to electrical interference including lighting and fluorescent light rods.
- 4.) Smaller weight compared to patch cable. Fiber is 20 pounds per 100 Feet CAT 5 untwisted pair is 50 pounds per 100 feet and coaxial thicknet cable is 200 pounds per 100 feet.
- 5.) No crosstalk with other fiber cables or unshielded / shielded twister pair cable.
- 6.) Can't be tapped from outside line. If someone is taping the line, it must be from a computer terminal connected to a star topology connecting to a fiber wire backbone setup. Fiber is usually used from backbone to backbone cross connects or from building to building. Vampire taps are a thing of the past. No more Mission Impossible tapping.
- 7.) Fiber Wire can be used from 20 to 50 years before needing to be replaced. It'll be outdated before it becomes vulnerable to corroding.

What Matter does fiber transmit ?

Fiber is more advanced because it uses protons positively charged particles instead of electrons negatively charged particles. That's why when you fry a motherboard because it uses electrons to transmit data. You can not fry fiber optic; only snap it in half if you're not careful. The orange wire is more fragile than twisted pair.

Generations 1985 - 2001 Part 2 (2004-07-31 13:51)

Welcome back. Yesterday, I saw my rankings sky rocketed. I was number 6 for the first few hours of July 29th. That day I posted some reading material I felt good for this blog from my personal webpage. I started to post all my reviews since I'm into games, and I use to write reviews. I didn't write very long reviews, just short ones, while I like IGN.com's reviews, I don't see myself writing 3 pages of paragraphs. I took the basic concepts of writing reviews including the game's story, the graphics, game play, the sound effects / soundtrack, and conclusion. In the reviews, when the reviewer talks about lighting and shadow use - I understand that. What I don't understand too well is how some people review game play. Game play is more one's opinion, and can range 10 points (based on 100 point review system) in a videogame review. I have this habit of remembering IGN.com's review so I take content from their review, and put it on my own. This is bad. 3D games have been out long enough where games have a standard in 3D game play. All I look at is graphics and game play, I don't care about anything else unless it's something stupid like Rugrats, Superman or Drake of the 99 Dragons.

This article is the 2nd half of videogame machines dating from 2000 – 2004. Okay, where to start?...hmm...Playstation 2 is known to everyone as a 128-bit machine, and therefore high resolution, right? There is a misconception that Playstation 2 is 4 times as powerful as PSone. I believe that this is a big understatement. The Playstation's CPU was clocked at 33 MHz while the PS2's main CPU (out of four) is clocked at 300 MHz. It's more like 9 times more powerful. PS2 is based on RISC technology which means the CPU is powerful enough to handle everything including graphics, AI movements, FMV, anything that needs processing except for sound. The sound chip is apart of the motherboard, but this always has been true. Twelve years ago, Sega CD had a motherboard with a 16-bit sound chip. Back then it was pretty nifty stuff I guess. The complex part is where PS2 has two other co-processors that are both clocked at about 135 MHz to do some interesting techniques that one CPU can not do. It's basically taking the data load off the main CPU so it can concentrate at giving the graphics processing unit better graphics data by using shared RAM. It really doesn't seem that way since Gamecube can pretty much make ports of PS2 games look a lot better. The first PS2 games such as Ridge Racer V, Heroes of Might and Magic, Tekken Tag Tournament only used the main processor. The Playstation 2 also has an outdated 32-bit GPU clocked at 150 MHz. This is a little more powerful than my Nvidia TNT 2 I've had installed in my Compaq in 2001 (before I upgraded to a 64-bit Radeon). It looked good on TV for some state-of-the-art anti-aliasing, and several mip-mapping techniques the console had. My television is the analog kind from six years back, so polygons looks smoothed out on it. We had a flat screen television in the family room downstairs, and Playstation graphics are more vivid and high resolution on it. The stuff that Metal Gear Solid 3 Snake Eater is showing is pretty damn amazing for Playstation 2. I have one and sometimes I wonder how graphics are produced on it. The difference of graphic quality of Ridge Racer V and Gran Turismo 4 is huge. Not to mention Madden 2004, and ESPN Football 2K5 look better than any other football title.

Games I knew that are big on it were Jak and Dexter, Metal Gear Solid 2, Final Fantasy X and XI, Gran Turismo 3, Grand Thief Auto 3 and/or Vice City, Deer Hunter, and Need for Speed Underground.

Some interesting news today on Google. Sony Computer Entertainment plans to spend 2.5 Billion dollars on a state-of-the-art manufacturing plant somewhere in Taiwan to manufacture millions of Playstation 3s, and probably Playstation 4s as well. This doesn't include costs on how much Sony invested to IBM to create the 'Cell' microchip. In 1999, Nintendo invested 1 billion dollars into IBM to develop the 'Gecko' processor. I don't know whether or not this including manufacturing costs which would be replenished as soon as Nintendo sold their Gamecube software. The prototype "Cell" microprocessor series is going to be produced in 2005 at the Nagasaki plant. This is done so software can be made 5 months before so Sony can show the tech demo at E3 (Electronics Entertainment Expo Trade Show) 2005. This plant will also manufacture IBM servers. I'm okay with it as long as it makes Playstation 3 cheaper. It's already going to make new Playstation 2's cheaper as well, by redesigning a more efficient way to do games that 5 year old technology has done. A recent message board rumor confirms that Sony plans to unleash the PStwo in 2005 or 2006. PStwo is a miniature Playstation 2 model that looks a lot better than the current one, and cheaper to own as well when it's announced. PStwo may even be as inexpensive as Gamecube right now. Sony would love to compete at the same price as Nintendo right now. There are websites such as <http://PSinsider.com> which will tell you the exact details when really we already know PS3 is going to look cinematic, and be very, very expensive at it's launch date. No matter what, Playstation 3 will have the best hardware of next generation. Just think the Xbox versions of Half-life 2, and Doom 3 at a higher resolution. Need I say more? Of course, there's this question I have about RPGs running on the most advance console hardware? It won't be answered until the first RPG comes out for PS3. This traditionally has never been the case. Think Playstation and N64. I think it's fun to buy all three next generation consoles, and than say you have no comment on which console is better. I've done this.

There is some news on the Internet about how the Playstation 2 can be instantly transformed into a Playstation 3 by adding a box like add-on to the largest expansion slot of the PS2. It's a good idea, but the Playstation 3 has a much more advance motherboard, not to mention more RAM. The motherboard couldn't possibly fit into the expansion slot. There is an exception though, the PSP is said to future processing power almost as powerful as the Playstation 2 while the Nintendo DS will be slightly more powerful than Nintendo 64. I don't see how this could be possible in 2005 to make a motherboard that small? You're talking about a console that out performs most PCs sold in 2004 in games. Making technology that small would be really expensive. I mean just look at my desktop computer...that thing is a monster of a tower, and the motherboard is about 2/3 of the total size of my tower. It's just another unrealistic post from an imaginative gamer – some posters them noobies. He better forget about the blu-ray drive, and new sound chip. Consoles will never again have performance boosters like the questionable 4-MB expansion pack on N64 or the failed Sega CD add-on for Sega Genesis.

As for the Microsoft Xbox, we know it as the first American videogame console since Atari 7800 (100 % genuine US). Except the Xbox controller is made in Malaysia, and the Xbox console is manufactured in near by Mexico. I know this because I looked on the bottom of my Xbox. We know the Japanese hate it. They despise it. Let's face it, Japanese will always love RPGs, and RPGs aren't on Xbox. Anyhow, machines do all the work in a high tech assembly line. Does Microsoft own their own facility or do they license it out to another company? After that they loose 100 dollars on every Xbox. I think I said this before somewhere?

The best thing about Xbox is Conker will be on it. Well, maybe not the best thing. There were gamers still out there who think Halo is the best thing on Xbox right now. It was true that Halo was pulling the weight of the whole Xbox. Want Halo? Get Xbox. Don't want Halo? Don't get Xbox. That analogy was true for 12 months after it was released. Unless, of course, you felt you needed to play Madden Football 2002 or Project Gotham on it. The only RPG I was okay with on Xbox was Elder Scrolls 3: Morrowind. The game looked a lot better on my PC than Xbox though. Still, it was the entire game. Then I saw Morrowind Game of the Year for 20 bucks. It was a steal so I bought it, and got rid of the original Morrowind game. Morrowind had a horrible draw rate on Xbox. . To be more specific, it didn't have a look at the whole scenery from affair which the PC version had. The game occasionally froze. Elder Scrolls 3 - Morrowind Game of the Year freezes up less often thanks to some additional crash bug-fixes. I hear the Xbox had a problem of loading all the content off DVD so Bethesda Softworks had to cut down on draw rate. I know because I was in Elder Scrolls 3 from November to December. It still looks very good. The blocky people in the game can be overlooked. I can over look the Xbox version of Doom 3 because of the controller controls. iD Software confirmed that Doom 3 can barely work on the Xbox. That's pretty amazing since iD Software claims it has the world's most advanced 3D engine. I mean I don't care it's on Xbox, but I rather have it on PC.

Microsoft is known for their two games with Xbox package. The most famous I can think of is the limited edition Sega Jet Grind Radio / Sega GT 2002 combo DVD. This is why I think so. Sega and Microsoft did a partnership in 1997 when Dreamcast was in prototype stages. Now that Sega is an ex-console manufacture, Microsoft did them a favor by showing off Sega games on their console. . This would be normal except Sega never developed another game for another console since the Atari 2600 days. Okay, there was Bandai Wonderswan and Tiger Game.com, but those were handhelds until 2001 when Sega went multi-platform. It was probably strictly business, but I liked their 2 game package with a Sega GT 2002/Jet Grind Radio on one DVD (both sequels of Dreamcast games) made by Smilebit and WOW. All you need to know about Smilebit is that it is the only one of three developers that ports exclusive Sega games to Xbox. Formally, Smilebit was known as 2nd party developers, but now that Sega Enterprises Ltd is a 3rd party, they can't be called that. The other is WOW Entertainment (SEGA GT 2002 and SEGA GT Online). Sega is different because their big enough to have all the Dreamcast developer studios still working for them. Atari works differently now since all the developers choose them as their publisher, and are not considered a 2nd party of Atari anymore. Atari was bought by Infogrames, and then Infogrames changed their name back to Atari, which was a smart move on their part in my opinion. Who heard of Infogrames anyways? So in a way, development studios bought out by Infogrames before 2002 are now owned by the new Atari. If that makes any sense to you guys? That's the main reason why Sega absorbed AM2, and Sonic Team back into themselves last month. Having Sonic Team without a 2nd party status, the developer was able to be bought out by bigger software development studios.

I got information off a Playstation 3 forum stating that Nintendo announced the first ever 1 Gigabyte game cartridges for Nintendo DS. This is pretty amazing since the biggest N64 game cart is 512 MB, and Resident Evil 2 was the only game to use it. Here are some examples of N64 cart sizes.

- Super Mario 64 – 8 MB cartridge
- Pilot Wings – 8 MB cartridge
- Tetris 64 – 8 MB cartridge
- Mario Kart 64 – 16 MB cartridge
- Goldeneye 007 – 16 MB cartridge
- Banjo and Kajoie 32 MB cartridge
- Ridge Racer 64 – 64 MB cartridge
- Perfect Dark - 256 MB cartridge
- Conker's Bad Fur Day – 386 MB cartridge
- Resident Evil 2 – 512 MB cartridge

After I said all this information, I like to let everyone know, buy what makes you happy. I know graphics aren't everything. I'm not wasting valuable time wondering what new consoles will be like. However, I do like to look at what the console's specs are. I spoke of the confirmed Xenon spec Internet-leakage in January. And it's brand new content. I have enough games where I can play one game for 4 days, and move onto another game for 4 months without playing the same game twice. I'm not going to do this because it makes no sense.

Got it all figured out:

1. Firstly, Revolution since there has to be one quality launch title.
2. Secondly, Playstation 3 since it's bound to have Gran Turismo 5, and RPGs such as Xenosaga Episode 3, Final Fantasy XIII, XIV, XV, Grandia 4, Suikoden V, Breath of Fire VI, and Star Ocean IV.
3. Then if Xenon is any good I'll buy it. My guess is it'll look very close to what Nintendo and Sony consoles.

For those who wonder if they should wait and save up for a new generation console with money left over for games - I going with Playstation 3 is the wisest decision. Even the Xenon should look a lot better than Xbox. But that's what people said with Dreamcast and Playstation 2 back in 1999. I remember it so well. Dreamcast is going to be outsold by PS2. It ended up with Dreamcast having better quality games than PS2, including games like Soul Caliber, and Sonic Adventure 2 that looked better than let's say 'Tekken Tag Tournament' and 'Ridge Racer V'.

Today, I've been downloading roms including Conker's Bad Fur Day, Paper Mario, and F-Zero X. CBF D is still downloading through my modem. I called my friend, Bob, earlier today, but I got no answer. I didn't do anything this week except play Gamecube and X-box, and there is only 2 weeks until school starts again. I thought about downloading some large files off the T1 server at school since they would let me during the summer (WITC is vacant during summer but the library is open). What sucks is I can't find my UT2004 play disc! I have to find a no-cd crack that works with the game now. I could download stuff at school, but peer to peer networks don't download well although there was that time I successfully downloaded Doom 3 CD 1 off Overnet at school over one weekend. It was unfortunate that Doom 3 was corrupted. It's coming out on Thursday anyhow. SWEET!

I downloaded Bittorrent today, <http://bitconjurer.org/BitTorrent>. I thought it would be an application like Limewire, but instead it incorporates itself into the web browser. That's still impressive. I already know why it's out although it basically does what Emule does. Emule allows users to put in an IP address of anyone on the server and allow the user to connect to them directly. There is no privacy on Emule though which makes users afraid of this type of Internet. I wanted a Jaguar BIOS so I could run Atari Karts on a Jaguar emulator called Project Tempest. Soon I found out that the Jaguar emulator did not need a BIOS to play most ROMS. That's always nice to figure out.

Today, I played good old Dreamcast again. Sonic Adventure has a big issue on skipping after 20 minutes of play. My Dreamcast will be 5 years old this September, and I played it a lot for the first 3 years. Resident Evil 2, Code Veronica, and The Next Tetris have this same loading problem. I played Sega Rally Championship 2 and Dead or Alive 2 yesterday. I heard from some gaming sites that the Dreamcast version of Dead or Alive 2 looks better than the Playstation 2 version, and even has more polygons. This made me want to put in Dead or Alive 3 and play that. The Xbox controller isn't that much different from the Dreamcast controller, and the buttons are exactly the same!

Yahoo Boasts Size of Its Search Engine Index

Trying not to include any phallic analogies, Yahoo this week announced that its overall search engine index is much larger than Google's and is the most in depth index of 'web objects' on the search market. On the Yahoo Search Blog, Yahoo disclosed that its index now includes 19.2 billion web documents, 1.6 billion images and more than 50 million audio and video files - over 20 billion items.

Yahoo is usually shy about disclosing the size of its search index, but the Yahoo Search Blog is celebrating its first year anniversary and Tim Mayer thought that somewhat of a retrospect was in order - since Yahoo has grown into its own as a search engine powerhouse over the past 365 days.

From the YSearchBlog : While we typically don't disclose size (since we've always said that size is only one dimension of the quality of a search engine), for those who are curious this update includes just over 19.2 billion web documents, 1.6 billion images, and over 50 million audio and video files.

Note that as with all index updates we are still tuning things so you'll continue to see some fluctuation in ranking over the next few weeks.

Greg Sterling of the Kelsey Group, however, makes the distinction of quality over quantity What I, Joseph User, care about is accuracy, quality and relevance. The available index does matter in terms of bringing me a sufficient quantity of results. (And if I'm looking for something really obscure, having that thing in the index is obviously important, which may go to size.).

But there's a major case of diminishing returns—there's already way too much information online for people to assimilate. Throwing more volume at me does nothing but make my eyes glaze over. What I want is enough relevant results."

Index schminindex, the moral of the story is what Yahoo has accomplished over the past year and what the next 12 months will bring with not only Yahoo Search, but the Yahoo Publishers Network, Yahoo LinkSpots, Yahoo Pay Per Call, and Site Explorer. What has Yahoo accomplished over the past year? Well, here's Tim's rundown :

Is the PC game market? (Dallas Morning News)

The last few years have not been all fun and games for computer game fans, but that might be changing. As attention has shifted to sophisticated video game consoles such as the Xbox and PlayStation 2, PC gamers have watched their preferred platform wither.

I am curious what you think about the future of blogging and how it fits with your long term plans? Your site looks great of course; it seems blogs are the big craze right now. There is a huge rise in blogs everywhere on the web. But does it take away from the web to have so many cookie cutter sites popping up by the thousands? What if 500 other companies find and download the same theme you install? I wonder if blogs will be a fad that everyone gets really tired of eventually and goes back to making their own sites that actually use the whole screen. Check this site out custom motorcycle helmet it uses a blog theme that takes up the entire width of the page as if it was an HTML page. What do you guys think? How hard would it be for people to make blogs look more like a full blown 'developed' web site?

Advanced Space Technology Stolen? (2004-08-01 13:52)

A new generation of jet propulsion developed in secrecy by N.A.S.A. (National Aeronautics and Space Administration) until the word got out on the Internet that they were working on a new engine with "20 thrust cells or more." A thrust cell is like a fuel cell, but more high tech. The new generation engine has been worked on by the United States to develop a better means of space travel. The new engine is called the "X-33 Linear Aerospike Engine " In 15 years down the road; we can use this technology in fighter aircraft. We stole this information from advance Soviet technology. This could be used in maybe 2 or 3 generations of new stealth aircraft. Aerospike is being developed in 3 different places. Including the well known Lockheed Martin Skunk Works (the creators of the F-14, F-22 and Nighthawk Stealth Fighter Aircraft), and Stennis Space Center. SSC, in North Carolina, tests the new space engine. The third place is unknown at the present.

This engine runs cold instead of hot liquid fuel, which makes me question what technology, so advanced, could run at a low temperature, while generating enough power to fly a space shuttle. NASA said that the engine used liquid nitrogen / hydrogen mix that went through the engine as highly concentrated fuel.

Technology hasn't brought us as far as not using fossil fuels at all. This technology has been around since the late 1960s as a means of thrust in the lunar module (Apollo 11.) It was never used because the technology was too "immature ." With this new technology the United States could send space probes farther then before, like to Pluto, for example, and the life of the satellite could be twice as long. Then you ask why they don't keep using nuclear rods. Nuclear energy is an aging technology. When we do send highly expensive technology into space, it usually becomes outdated in 5 years, unless it is military technology, then it's 2 times as advanced as any civilian space technology. Remember it was not too long ago that citizens got to use globe positioning, and that is relatively primitive to what military satellites are used for. AKA. American spy satellites that have 3000x zooming capabilities are nice, yet expensive toys for the United States government.

France is developing their own next generation military satellite called Syracuse III, it is an exact replica of the US military technology of today, but funded by not just France...Germany and Russia as well. This satellite has a bandwidth of SEVERAL HUNDRED MEGABYTES of data per second! This means that France would be interested in getting next generation space propulsion, especially the 'cold running kind.'

Certainly, countries would have the same technology like France , who is in second place for developing rockets used for satellites and such. Their military satellites called "Telecom" serve dual roles for both telecommunication and military 'spy' usage. France enhances television, and global commutations for the whole contention of Europe. Europe uses military defenses a well. Satellites, like Syracuse III types, are authorized to watch American satellites in space. It's scary what can be observed, and France has a right to do so. We know that France has at least one military satellite in space. France is against us in Iraq. Although they are still allies in the U.N.'s eyes, they could sell technology that we Americans use, like "Aerospike", to other countries to do analyzing of their own... places like China, and North Korea would like to use the same technology, but it would be 5 years before either one of them could even be at the stage of testing. It took China and North Korea until the 1990s to figure out how to become nuclear. Maybe North Korea could, in the future, could use nuclear powered satellites to analyze our new space probes using new propulsion like "AeroSpike." This is why we try to safeguard our technology because we built "AeroSpike". It's ours, and ours only!!!!

Double Windows XP re-installations due to trojan (2004-08-08 13:53)

Two days ago, I was going to get an Atari Jaguar. The thing costs 59 dollars used only because you don't see them at all. Jaguar is known as the first console to be 64-bit. Some find it untrue since the Jaguar had two 32-bit processors that were more powerful than Playstation. Jaguar, of course, had full support from Atari although Atari did release some anthologies on other consoles during the Jaguar age. Jaguar was a monster failure although its software was more advanced than Sega Saturn in some ways. I've seen the console and Box at the River Falls videogame store.

Anyways, I came across Project Tempest. Project Tempest emulates the Jaguar. So far I downloaded Jaguar ROMs from http://www.rom-world.com/dl.php?name=Atari_Jaguar&letter=A, and ran them in Project Tempest 1.5. The Jaguar controller was very odd. It had a D-pad and 6 buttons like the Genesis, but 12 code buttons, and I don't know what they are used for. Anyhow, I had to assign 18 keys to the keyboard to play Tempest 2000. I found out that the latest version of Project Tempest has issues with Direct X 9.0. I use an older version that uses Direct X 8.1.

After that, I played Final Fantasy for the first time on TV. I'm talking about the original. The title that started it all. I bought Final Fantasy Origins long time ago, but I never got a chance to play it. So I played it today. Most noticeably the music is remixed, and upgraded to SNES sound standards. That's nice. My warrior died in the first battle and the rest followed due to a man short. I should have had a white mage to heal him, but I chose a red mage instead. I'm more of a fighter than sorcerer/sorceress. The coolest thing about a Playstation disc is that it'll always be able to run on the computer. Final Fantasy graphics are enhanced. All the backgrounds have been made of 100s of sprites. I was playing that for 8 hours last night.

I watched Bran Stoker's Dracula yesterday. It's not the traditional Dracula, but yet it has that edge in horror films. The 1992 Academy awards gave it 3 academies for Best sound effects, best make-up, and best director. Keanu Reeves was in it. This was early in his career, and yet he gives a better performance than The Matrix in my opinion. He teamed up with Anthony Hopkins (Hannibal Lector from The Silence of the Lambs, this was his next movie). The count in this movie first tries to stay away from blood, yet then he gets the urge to kill off his whole ship. A vampire has to go on a masquerade sometime, doesn't he? Unlike other vampire movies, Count Dracula is human without the sharp teeth. In older Dracula's, the count had his sharp teeth all the time. We all know Dracula evil, but some films make him more evil than others. Blade II must be the most evil vampire movie around.

I got hit with another Trojan horse. This time it didn't allow Windows to see my own DVD-ROM drives. I got a mad, which led me to believe that the IDE cable got disconnected from bumping the computer. I've "looked under the hood" and saw that there were no disconnections. My second idea was that I could repair the file system with the WINXP installation CD. This failed. This particular file that was infected was the DVD-ROM driver. Oh-no! This disallowed Windows to read files off the DVD-ROM during installation. So I reformatted in NTFS, and reinstalled Windows XP again. I was able to back up my files before something went wrong. I'm smart like that.

That's not all folks! I got errors on my custom PC (the sound didn't work) so I was going to reinstall the OS while I watched a couple Space Ghost Coast to Coast episodes, and laughed my heart out when suddenly the custom PC shuts off, and made a very long BEEEEEEEEEP! A shiver went down my spine, and without thinking I pulled the power cable. My guess is the PC shuts down when it gets above a certain temperature. So I played with the on switch a few times - it didn't go on. Then I was saved 10 minutes later when my PC cooled off and turned on. I was scared for a moment there. And no, I haven't over-clocked the RAM. In fact, a year ago I've changed the RAM BIOS setting to 233 MHz. Oops! My computer of didn't work afterwards. I had burnt marks on my processor. It was an Athlon too. Other possibilities are the CPU fan stopped working or my SDRAM is not functioning. This wasn't the case since after I turned on the computer an hour later it seemed to have no issues.

I played Unreal Tournament 2004 with the no-cd crack after the fresh installation. I can't find the play disc. I play Onslaught and Capture the Flag. My Pentium 4 seems to have no problem playing it at 1600x1200. I play at experienced, but I have one lost in onslaught. My strategy is to go the opposite direction away from the bots, and hope that the other team is not going where I'm going. It's a very addictive game. I die more than I fight though. The bots are extremely aggressive at experienced. My GPU is a Radeon 9800 XT. I think I left my UT 2004 Play Disc at Mikes, which makes it a little more difficult to play the game. I remember an error accruing when I apply the patch. This was at Mikes. But I do play that game a lot this pass week.

Seeing this picture leads me to believe that Doom 3 is all graphics. Look into his eyes and tell me that this model isn't 200,000 polygons. He looks like my Uncle LeRoy.

I have 40 Planetary Radio episodes now. Planetary Radio talks about space a lot. That's where I got my very odd article about Star Trek 8 three weeks ago. The Star Trek episode in December 2002 was my favorite. They talk about warp speed, and the truth about it is we'll never go light-speed in my life time. If you think about it, the world will be more populated. It's kind of a trade-off. One-hundred years ago we were simpler people, set aside the Civil War, I only think in 2104, people will look back 100 years and say how the most powerful computer is 100 gigahertz and the average computer user had a 2.0 – 3.2 Gigahertz computer 100 years back is like comparing the 386 processor to the most powerful super computer today, the Earth Simulator. Right now we have such a thing commonly known as Head Mounted Displays or HMD for short. These are most commonly used with the DVD players to watch movies. You just ware a visor which connects to the Internet and you can walk into anywhere. There will be a choice of VR gloves and a controller. The gloves will work as virtual hands so you can type in a virtual keyboard. Plus, your self image will be in 3D so you can meet people real city in a virtual world. Much lower tech than the Matrix. In 2154, we'll have VR units that hook directly up to the brain which will take DNA samples, and make a replica image of yourself which can walk and talk like you through virtual reality, and you'll move around using your brain. It's much better than seeing myself of TV! To bad I won't be alive when someone revolutionizes a practical way to upload you into the Internet. I think those devices that make a 3D image of someone whose across seas, but visibly in the same room as I am will happen in my life-time. Except, your brain can be in the real world as-well. The Nintendo Virtual Boy could not connect to the Internet nor does it have any good titles. The fact that it had to be setup on a table alone made it not likeable. I suppose you could find leather straps and make a head holder. It would be clunky and very heavy. It was ahead of it's time, but didn't have color screens and I've heard the visor was heavy and the gloves often moved around in a wire-frame world. It is often said that videogame consoles will pioneer a product that will have virtual reality, although the Virtual Boy failed commercially. It is said that 3D Tetris was the only decent title on Virtual Boy. Gamers much rather use a keyboard, and a mouse or controller.

The HMD from Cy-Visor looks very futuristic. This visor has dual SVGA 24-bit color LCD screens. The visor can (of course) make images appear big to the retina thus making it seem like your in the 3D action. I want to play Unreal Tournament 2004 with some stereo speakers and a these visors. The new ones have 800x600 display (again if your not using military versions) with 180,000 pixels on screen. The website is here <http://www.personaldisplay.com/english/>. There is also this manufacture with makes i-glasses (a mid-level) HMD for the PC. These can play with consoles, and these are much better then the nine year old monochrome Virtual Boy ever was. I want one.

Except if I had that kind of cash, I would invest it into a better motherboard/processor.

The military uses these for training simulations, and hooks up to the helmet. The i-glasses are one of the units that will do this.

Oh yeah, I updated Ian's Quintessential Blog today. Added new pictures, added boarders. Go here: <http://www.angelfire.com/blog2/renegadeviking/> The entries in it are exactly the same as his webpage, but you might want to look at my sexy photo gallery complete with scrolling thumbnails all below 20K.

Doom 3 was supposed to be released today!!!! I plan to get it this week at Wal-Mart. I expect it to be 50 bucks, and I'll be living the surround sound to an extent. I do not have the best sound system. Although if I turn the sound system all the way someone can hear it clearly in the garage, that's way too loud! It's a first person shooter none-the-less, but with state-of-the-art graphics and a powerful graphics engine – it's bound to get attention. I think I'm good with what I have for another 16 months. People should know already, there are full versions on Emule, and I have a feeling that there will be a lot of Doom 3 ISO downloading! My guess is Doom 3 will defiantly use Securom 5x copyright protection.

Here are updated requirements for Doom 3 :

256 MB of RAM (512 MB Recommended)
1.3 GHz Pentium 4 or Athlon XP (2.0 GHz Pentium 4 recommended)
64-bit GPU (128-bit GPU recommended)
4 Gigs of hard drive space

Sample screenshot of a 512-bit Graphic Processing Unit (this one using Matrox Parhelia) Reminds me of Ecco the Dolphin : Defender of the Future (Dreamcast, PS2)

If I were to get anything for 500 dollars, I would spend it on technology, it would be a 512-bit Geforce FX 6000, when the damn thing comes out. Games don't need that power yet, or won't for another 2 years. There is one 512-bit GPU out from Creative Labs called the Wildcat. There is also a lesser known GPU manufacture called Matrox. Matrox Parhelia is technically superior to Radeon 9800 XT and Nvidia Geforce FX 5900, and it clocks at 600 MHz. This is more than the Xenon GPU! Nvidia makes a super high-end 128-bit, and 256-bit GPU called the Quadro for dual screen displays.

Matrox Parhelia is technically superior to Radeon 9800 XT and Nvidia Geforce FX 5900. Nvidia makes a super high-end 128-bit and 256-bit GPU called the Quadro for dual screen displays. Parhelia is more for gaming on a single monitor although it can do two. This means if you want three monitors to show a widescreen display thus having one picture. Just imagine this using a HMD. I much rather spend 500 bucks on a GPU like the Parhelia than a headset that focuses light into the retina. The lowest Internet price for the 512-bit Parhelia is 360 dollars US! This is very reasonable for a really powerful GPU with two monitor inputs. This is very useful for monitor and television combos. One thing that puts Parhelia chipsets at a disadvantage is Matrox makes it and nobody else. Geforce and Radeon go under several 3rd party manufacture name-plates like XFX for an example. There are these specs on how Parhelia uses vortex shader 2.0 (Microsoft Direct X 9.0 graphics accelerator) whereas Geforce 4 uses vortex-shader 1.3 (Direct X 8.1). I assure you that there are little difference if both chips are both 512-bit. Most games are optimized for Geforce and Radeon so they don't run technology on vortex-shader 2.0 yet. Both can run circles around X-Box graphics now-a-days. If you're not a big graphics card person...I can understand this. I don't even have the money to go out and buy every new graphics card that's out.....I don't think anyone does. Not even millionaires do.

And it should go in this order for gaming rigs

- 1.) Processor
- 2.) GPU
- 3.) Memory

As far as school goes, I will be getting some class assignment assistance from student services there. The meeting is one week before school starts. Dad and I had a discussion on what I should do to improve my skills. I am on probation since I hadn't got my assignments on time. That and the fact that I missed a good part of Linux, and was asked why I didn't go to class. I again said this was a result of a minor misconception that I'd sent college credits in from high school, and now they aren't counted. My first thought is this can not be happening to me. Yet it was and I wanted them to transfer. My guess is the school wanted money so they asked me to forget about updating high school college credits (Intro to DOS and Intro to Linux) into the system. I failed Linux, that's why. Something's screwy going on at the school. My dad I don't think sees it. Chippewa Valley was a little easier than WITC. WITC's version of Linux class wanted me to learn more commands. That's not their fault. That's not my fault. My school wanted me to be enrolled in college. And I had all these bad thoughts about not being in high school. College students come and go. It's all in the past, yet I feel that I going to have a bad case of disavow here and I'm not liking it. At least my dad's paying for the courses – that's why I try not to complain about it. I wait for something to go wrong, in this case failing another class, and than something does go wrong at the very end. This is very negative thinking although it was somewhat true last year.

Got Doom 3 | Phantasy Star out for PC in Japan (2004-08-09 13:54)

Bring on the weekend. Or so I once thought. Pierce County Fair was this weekend, but I decided not to go. The Pierce County Fair is one tenth the size of the Minnesota State Fair. It goes on for 3 days. There are monster truck rallies, dirt bike racing, and tractor pulls held there every year. Tractor pulls! Instead, I played Doom 3. Of course, I bought the game. The retail version is surprisingly stable. There are few slow downs in the game except I can play it at 1600x1200 with high textures, and 2x anti-analyzing The textures are such a high resolution that 4x anti-analyzing doesn't look any different from 2x anti-analyzing. Normally it does. One of the reason for this is the resolution is so high that there are unheard of polygons rates - about 40,000 of them on screen. I got to alpha labs part 1. I couldn't find the access card to get pass a door so I'm stuck, and always die from ambushes. I know - the point of the game is to have the enemies jump out at you. I admit, Doom 3 is never boring. The lighting effects are out of this world, more advance than Unreal Tournament 2004 - not by much though. I mean I've seen better, but not in my game collection. I like how the viewing monitors have video going, and still go on after the outbreak. What's up with that "Chicken Puncher 3" arcade game that looks like it's running on the really old doom engine? It's stupid. Of course, I could cheat in the console (CTRL+ALT+), and type in 'GOD' to be invincible, but this would not sharpen my shooting skills and alertness. It would make them worst. If you haven't played much doom 3 at its level of difficulty than you might fall victim to many, many blood-thirty demons that hide in the dark (AKA nightmarish, nightwalkers). Most appear out of no where, and then resurrect when you come back to haunt you once more. Well, the game is rated mature, and Doom is known for very gory, and uncanny demon-spawn creatures. Damn, these things don't stay died. Anyways, it's a fun game. Addictive, if you don't have a fit about the game's hard difficulty. Even Recruit difficulty (Easy mode) is hard in Doom 3. Ranks up there with Halo's difficulty. The game has revolutionary graphics engine (called the Doomsday engine), and the game play is a bit above average too, but nothing to get really excited about. No doubt, first person shooters in the USA are an above average genre, and there are several innovations in 2004 that 5 year old first person shooters like Unreal Tournament, and Quake 3 Arena don't have. Not to say that they aren't fun. Doom 3 has twice as many features as those games. It's not just about picking up a weapon, and shooting anymore. I now have all sorts of things in my inventory such as access keys, and a PDA that downloads data from many terminals throughout the Mars facility. Modblog isn't a place for a full review of the game. My personal (Geocities) webpage is. I believe Americans prefer first person shooters over racing pc games or role playing games. Most Americans have a little of each. And there will always be patches that'll add maps, features, and stability to Doom 3. The retail version is stable by itself. The game never crashed on me at all, and seems to very compatible with all recent video cards that are 64-bit or better.

I got a new cat whom we named Amberious was found on the front porch yesterday. Amberious is a 2 month old kitten, but we call all our kittens - cats. Actually, the mother was roaming around the back yard days before. We live by a farm with farm cats. No doubt it's where the mother cat came from. I said, "Well, Mom - the cat's free." Our last cat, Sassy, didn't live very long. She was about 2 years old when she died. The illness was caused by an unknown poisonous substance. Something caused the cat to have a stroke (which it lived through) so the vet killed it to prevent further misery. She had saliva spilling out of her mouth. Sassy never wanted to be held therefore she wasn't a good lap cat. Sassy wasn't expected to live more than two weeks after her illness. Amberious likes to be held, and very affectionate, therefore a wonderful lap cat. I'll post a picture of both of them at <http://www.angelfire.com/blog2/renegadeviking/>. Angelfire will not allow me to direct link the image with Modblog using an IMG tag. Mom brought them to the vet for rabies shots. We found a black kitten, probably Amberious's sister, on the door, we took her in as well. He is a yellow / white cat who I've mistaken for a female cat. Then we have this other cat who is mostly black with a white chest like Sassy was. Sassy was full grown when she died, and maybe Iris will look a lot like her.

David and I were on messenger Friday. He is building a new plastic model airplane of an X-35. I had to guess a couple of times of what it was, and I got as close as saying an X-31. I thought it ran in the fighter category. The F-14 is a really solid aircraft, but it's very expensive to manufacture from what I've been told. It's manufactured by Lockheed Martin. A place where to US Governments goes for all their military aircraft needs. The F-16 Strike Eagle is the most popular since it is easy to control and very powerful, and most cost-efficient. The X-35 is suppose to be even more cost efficient than the F-16 Strike Eagle. David says the X-35 is the first joint-strike aircraft. Joint Strike Fighter (JSF) means it's be used by the US Marines, US Airforce, and US Navy. The first American squadron is supposed to be around in 2008. The most powerful American aircraft out is the F-22 Raptor, and that thing's is extremely high-tech. It can out gun / out maneuver, out radar, out run all the competition. The F/A 22s in existence have never seen action yet. I'm not an airplane person so I don't know much about it. I hear it's every pilot's dream to fly one from what I've heard on the History Channel. The Aircraft's armor and weapon systems are classified. Only the prototypes are out now. Other countries Lockheed Martin is sharing technology to reduce manufacturing costs are Australia, Royal Navy, Canada, Russia, and Israel. The US Government is going to purchase 3,000 of these as well as 2,000 international purchases to boot. The engine powering the jet is the modified F-22 Raptor engine, the Pratt & Whitney F112. What's also fascinating is the X-35 can do vertical landings. It serves as a part-time helicopter which is also neat! What's also interesting is new aircraft, X-35 being the first, is using IMF for real-time modification from talented aerospace designers around the world using the Internet. My guess is that IMF could be something as simple as a 128K encrypted webpage with information evolving the aircraft model, and probably a message board as well. Or it could be a FTP server with username / password / IP identity security protocols.

Check out this very interesting site:

- <http://www.lockheedmartin.com> – talks a little about the company's history, projects including fighter jets, satellites, NASA jets, combat gear. Very interesting stuff. They have information on the planes like what records they broke, when they were created, but the specs barely scratch the service. So don't think this site will tell you the real facts about their projects because you're not gonna get any.

Lockheed Martin is responsible for several military satellites including the most powerful one, the Lockheed Titan. NASA contracts with Lockheed for the Hubble Space Telescope, the Space Shuttle, and several military aircraft including F16, F/A-22 (most advanced fighter), X-33 (next generation space shuttle), the famous U2 spy plane, and X-35.

I'm getting off topic here, but I compressed more movies in DivX. I've got the first 3 episodes of Band of Brothers encoded in DIVx. I plan to have one episode per CD - making a total of 10 CDs. With only an hour of video on CD, I can increase the image quality to 800/600 at 1200 KBPS. This is medium video quality. I guess I could use Xvid for compression, but I never encoded video in Xvid 1.0.1 before. I'm going to use something that I know will not compromise speed for video glitches, and the infamous delayed sound effect in compressed video. Band of Brothers DVD collection is my Dads, but this way I will have my own copy of the epic WWII saga. I could put 2 episodes on DVD compressed in DIVx 5.1.1. For one, the image gets errors at resolutions higher than 800x600 - such as badly deteriorated image parts in the film. Although I haven't tried a lower resolution like 640x480 at 1400 KBPS. A compressed video should be no more than 2000 KBPS. Works well for the both of us. We also have The Longest Day, Patton, The 6th of June, and Saving Private Ryan on DVD.

Today is Monday. I downloaded 400MB worth of PC game patches off the WITC's T1 server including Battlefield 1942, Unreal Tournament, Unreal Tournament 2004, and Far Cry version 1.2. The fricken technicians were able to put an administrator password on all mass storage devices like thumb drives. This makes me mad. I've been doing this before. I left without asking for the password since the librarians would know that I downloaded stuff, and two, it wouldn't really matter because PC already erased my downloads. I was afraid this would happen. Well, school starts in 2 weeks so that'll give me access to all the computers. With luck, maybe I can find a PC running Windows 2000, which will give me access to thumb drives.

Top 3 videogames I'm playing:

- Doom 3
- Unreal Tournament 2004
- Unreal Tournament

I was looking at movie reviews so I looked up the worst movies I could think of are "The Hulk", "Tomb Raider", "The Time Machine", and "Star Troopers 2 - Hero of the Federation" at <http://rottentomatoes.com>. I neglect seeing any horror film before 1970 because it gets pretty stupid. Don't you like it when the movie sticks from the Rotten Tomatoes review, and then you get someone on the board say, "Uh...yeah, I really like the movie." I have a strange taste for favorite movies. I like War films from 50 years ago such as The Longest Day, Green Beret, In Harm's Way, Kelly's Army, Tora, Tora, Tora to name a few. So my point is they're not worth reviewing, because everyone has their own opinion and that's how it'll be. I also check up movie reviews at <http://filmforce.ign.com>. IGN.com is a leading videogame reviewing website which also reviews Hollywood films, and anime films. It also has servers for Neverwinter Nights mods.

Other interesting news I found that Phantasy Star Online is out for the PC! Phantasy Star started on the Masters System in 1987. It was a RPG. Then Phantasy Star II and Phantasy Star III came on the Sega Genesis. Phantasy Star Online is Sega's first Massive Multiplayer Role Playing Game, one of which brought the Dreamcast online. It was also Gamecube's first online game, and since then been it's strongest online title. It was also released for the Xbox. Now, Sega has a PC version called Phantasy Star Online: Blue Burst. The game has PSO versions 1 and 2 on PC with several game play upgrades. The game will be released on 07/15/04 in Japan. I have tried connecting the Dreamcast version of PSO online so I could play with other players. The PC version will, of course, feature enhanced graphics. The disappointments are that it has a monthly fee. I like retail games with free servers such as Neverwinter Nights, and Diablo 2 because you can play them without having to worry about extra costs.

This is Ian signing off.

I think that what you published was very logical. But, what about this?

what if you were to create a awesome headline?

I ain't suggesting your information is not solid, but what if you added a post title that makes people desire more? I mean "Got Doom 3 | Phantasy Star out for PC in Japan" is kinda vanilla. You could look at Yahoo's front page and see how they create article titles to grab viewers to open the links. You might add a related video or a picture or two to grab readers excited about everything've written. In my opinion, it could bring your posts a little livelier. Also visit my web-site just Click the next document nevermore! (2004-08-11 13:55)

Hey, I know a lot of you bloggers like poetry so here is my favorite from Edgar Allan Poe. It's sad, but it's really famous. Despite the fact the old man goes insane from "The Raven", it's a well written poem otherwise. This document remains legal since it remains unchanged.

Once upon a midnight dreary, while I pondered, weak and weary
Over many a quaint and curious volume of forgotten lore-
While I nodded, nearly napping, suddenly there came a tapping
As of some one gently rapping, rapping at my chamber door
" 'T is some visitor," I muttered, "tapping at my chamber door-
Only this and nothing more."

Ah, distinctly I remember it was in the bleak December;
And each separate dying ember wrought its ghost upon the floor.
Eagerly I wished the morrow;-vainly I had sought to borrow
From my books surcease of sorrow-sorrow for the lost Lenore-
For the rare and radiant maiden whom the angels name Lenore-
Nameless here for evermore.

Then the silken, sad, uncertain rustling of each purple curtain
Thrilled me-filled me with fantastic terrors never felt before;
So that now, to still the beating of my heart, I stood repeating,
" 'T is some visitor entreating entrance at my chamber door-
Some late visitor entreating entrance at my chamber door;-
This it is and nothing more."

Presently my soul grew stronger; hesitating then no longer,
"Sir," said I, "or Madam, truly your forgiveness I implore;
But the fact is I was napping, and so gently you came rapping,
And so faintly you came tapping, tapping at my chamber door,
That I scarce was sure I heard you"-here I opened wide the door;-
Darkness there and nothing more."

Deep into that darkness peering, long I stood there wondering, fearing,
Doubting, dreaming dreams no mortal ever dared to dream before;
But the silence was unbroken, and the stillness gave no token,
And the only word there spoken was the whispered word, "Lenore?"
This I whispered, and an echo murmured back the word, "Lenore!"
Merely this and nothing more.

Back into the chamber turning, all my soul within me burning,
Soon again I heard a tapping somewhat louder than before.
"Surely," said I, "surely that is something at my window lattice;
Let me see, then, what thereat is, and this mystery explore-
Let my heart be still a moment and this mystery explore;-
'T is the wind and nothing more!"

Open here I flung the shutter, when, with many a flirt and flutter,
In there stepped a stately Raven of the saintly days of yore;

Not the least obeisance made he; not a minute stopped or stayed he;
But, with mien of lord or lady, perched above my chamber door-
Perched upon a bust of Pallas just above my chamber door-
Perched, and sat, and nothing more.

Then this ebony bird beguiling my sad fancy into smiling,
By the grave and stern decorum of the countenance it wore,
"Though thy crest be shorn and shaven, thou," I said, "art sure no craven, Ghastly grim and ancient Raven wandering from the Nightly shore-
Tell me what they lordly name is on the Night's Plutonian shore!"
Quoth the Raven, "Nevermore."

Much I marvelled the ungainly fowl to hear discourse so plainly,
Though its answer little meaning-little relevancy bore;
For we cannot help agreeing that no living human being Ever yet was blessed with seeing bird above his chamber door-
Bird or beast upon the culptured bust above his chamber door,
With such name as "Nevermore."

But the Raven, sitting lonely on the placid bust, spoke only
That one word, as if his soul in that one word he did outpour.
Nothing farther then he uttered-not a feather then he fluttered-
Till I scarcely more than muttered, "Other friends have flown before-
On the morrow he will leave me, as my Hopes have flown before."
Then the bird said, "Nevermore."

Startled at the stillness broken by reply so aptly spoken,
"Doubtless," said I, "what it utters is its only stock and store
Caught from some unhappy master whom unmerciful Disaster
Followed fast and followed faster till his songs one burden bore-
Till the dirges of his Hope that melancholy burden more Of 'Never-nevermore.' "

But the Raven still beguiling my sad fancy into smiling,
Straight I wheeled a cushioned seat in front of bird and bust and door;
Then, upon the velvet sinking, I betook myself to linking Fancy unto fancy, thinking what this ominous bird of yore-
What this grim, ungainly, ghastly, gaunt, and ominous bird of yore
Meant in croaking "Nevermore."

This I sat engaged in guessing, but no syllable expressing
To the fowl whose fiery eyes now burned into my bosom's core;
This and more I sat divining, with my head at ease reclining
On the cushion's velvet lining that the lamp-light gloating o'er,
But whose velvet-violet lining with the lamp-light gloating o'er,
She shall press, ah, nevermore!

Then, methought, the air grew denser, perfumed from an unseen censer
Swung by seraphim whose foot-falls tinkled on the tufted floor.
"Wretch," I cried, "thy God hath lent thee-by these angels he hath sent thee

Respite-respite and nepenthe from thy memories of Lenore;
 Quaff, oh, quaff this kind nepenthe and forget this lost Lenore!"

Quoth the Raven, "Nevermore."

"Prophet!" said I, "thing of evil!-prophet still, if bird or devil!-
 By that Heaven that bends above us-by that God we both adore-
 Tell this soul with sorrow laden if, within the distant
 Aidenn, It shall clasp a sainted maiden whom the angels name Lenore-Clasp a rare and radiant maiden whom the angels name Lenore."
 Quoth the Raven, "Nevermore."

"Be that word our sign of parting, bird or fiend!" I shrieked, upstarting-
 "Get thee back into the tempest and the Night's Plutonian shore!
 Leave no black plume as a token of that lie thy soul hath spoken!
 Leave my loneliness unbroken!-quit the bust above my door!
 Take thy beak from out my heart, and take thy form from off my door!"

Quoth the Raven, "Nevermore."

And the Raven, never flitting, still is sitting, still is sitting
 On the pallid bust of Pallas just above my chamber door;
 And his eyes have all the seeming of a demon's that is dreaming,
 And the lamp-light o'er him streaming throws his shadow on the floor;
 And my soul from out that shadow that lies floating on the floor
 Shall be lifted-nevermore!

P.S. I hate pasting other people's work, except I like the idea about the Raven. It is obviously about death and the point of it is everyone dies. Besides, blogging is one's own opinion, of course, so likewise, it's not good to copy other people's stuff for my own. I, myself, could never write a good poem nor would I want too.

A shared web hosting service or understood hosting repair or receive tummler refers to a cobweb hosting service where various websites reside on anyone snare server connected to the Internet. Each locale "sits" on its own split-up, or section/place on the server, to keep it discriminate from other sites. This is customarily the most thrifty choice on account of hosting, as numerous people share the complete expenditure of server maintenance.

Why I can't emulate Gamecube games on PC (2004-08-15 13:56)

Today's main topic is why the Gamecube can't be emulated on my computer. To answer this question, you first have to know that Gamecube dumps are absolutely huge. They have to be dumped onto you're hard drive. These files are 1.5 gigabytes in size. I know because I was looking on Emule for Ikaruga and the game is 1.5 gigabytes. I've seen screenshots from the Gamecube emulator, Dolphin, which can run Ikaruga at 50 frames per second. I own the real copy of Ikaruga and played it. Ikaruga is very hard. But this would-have had been my first emulated Gamecube game. I doubt when Bob gets high-speed Internet, he won't want to download 1.5 Gigabytes to this hard drive. I doubt that he would have this amount on his drive with his MP3 collection. I have good news the Dreamcast version of Ikaruga is only 15 MB. Or is it? I could be a fake! I tried downloading it, but the server was busy so I'm out of luck! What a shame this is indeed. Ikaruga is extremely hard to play, I own the Gamecube version, and I feel that playing the game makes me feel death is inedible when playing it. The enemy crossfire is pretty amazing. You play Ikargua, which is a prototype spacecraft, which shoots black and white bullets with similar shielding. The white Ikargua transformation shields me almost entirely from white enemy bullets. The black Ikargua transformation shields me from black bullets. The learning curve is very straight forward until you loose all your power ups in the first level. Then the game is a pain to play through. How can the fighter transform precisely in time when the black and white bullets hit it is the whole point of it. Mastering the shielding is very difficult at first. The game starts the player with 5 lives, I believe, not nearly enough to complete the game. I can not do it without cheating. It is impossible to stay clear of enemy bullets therefore the player must be in the line-of-fire continually. Most people without Gameshark / Action Replay will probably not get pass Level 2 in Ikargua including me. I have a very had time playing without invisibility. The game is made by Treasure, and was officially Sega Dreamcast's last videogame.

My blog doesn't have two side bars, therefore, it has more words in it than most blogs, and however, it doesn't look as long vertically. For my second topic, and this one I am really excited to excess my opinion on. Yesterday, I was looking on the Space.com message boards today under Space Technology, and found an interesting footnote I never heard of - CATS. NASA is focusing its energy on CATS or 'cheap access to space.' I heard of NASA looking for a way to make space shuttles more inexpensive - I didn't know NASA gave it a name until today. NASA has been known to develop technologies before they use them in space craft. A good example is the shuttle navigational computer. The shuttle needs to calculate everything from navigation to structural integrity. For this NASA contracts with one company to assemble satellites and space craft - Lockheed Martin. The purpose of CATS is this, have privately funded dollars put into the CATS project, and whenever NASA invents something new that gives cheap access to space, that organization can copyright mechanical parts and/or inventions so when the new technology (such as the newly invented solar sail) becomes profitable, the investors can cash in when the technology works. I think I agree with one of the posts that agree with the view: NASA's top three priorities are Finish ISS, Go to Mars, test and fly the X-43A. The X-43A can achieve MACH 7. The truth about it is - the USA only has a trillion dollar annual budget. That's why American or International investors are so important to them in 2004 through the CATS program. We know one, Lockheed Martin.

Here are my thoughts on inner-planetary travel. The space shuttle will surely serve NASA for another 15 years. For one, we already have all of them operational. It sure beats researching a new space craft. They are well built despite the Discovery incident last year. And it takes a while for new technologies to be developed so my point is - well still have the space shuttle for a long time yet. NASA canceled the X-33 in 2001. The X-33 is developed by Lockheed Martin, and the prototype was 85 % compete when the project got scraped. Recently, NASA successfully flew an X-43A rocket plane. This new plane can go very fast and broke the world record this week for the fastest jet in the world. MACH 7 although some say NASA is developing an X-43B that can go MACH 10. Ten times the speed of sound!!! Whoa!

Now I'm about the change the main topic completely! I wanna be sure everyone's on the same page as I am.

One of the things that I was also doing yesterday was playing Star Ocean. The reason why is I knew this is an extremely hard videogame to seek out. It's top priority for collectors, and if I did show up somewhere it would cost approximately 80 dollars or more Online. I've been looking at the instruction booklet of Star Ocean II - The Second Coming, which was on the shelf for quite some time now - since 2002. Star Ocean II is worth 50 dollars, and is a very rare find at game merchants. I only looked at the manual a couple times - never booting up the game in PSone to take a look-see at what the game's suppose to be about. And I thought, "Well, I have nothing to do this weekend, so I should get into one RPG at least before school starts again." I was playing Doom 3 yesterday since it is popular right now. Although Diablo 2 is still my favorite game, the trigger-finger-with- mouse feeling that gave the game its charm is fading away. I have little desire to play Diablo 2 anymore. And - then again - why get into an old SNES game when the 32/64 generation is much better, in my opinion, and much easier on the eyes. Not to say that old games like Star Ocean don't demand strategy and knowledge on what skills to use. Sometimes even more so, because most RPGs of that era have 'active-time-battle' intergraded into them which means I almost always have to select my spell quickly or lose HP very fast. I'm tried to pull off as many normal (physical) attacks as I can because a lot of times spells confuse me. The games usually start your mage with piss poor spells to begin with and your character doesn't have a chance against stronger bosses. That's where Game Genie codes come into play. Using those I don't have to worry about losing. Games are about being fun - not frustrating - are they not?

Star Ocean is the really late RPG for the SNES (1996). Star Ocean is supposed to have the some of the best graphics on the SNES. So I downloaded the English translation ROM of Star Ocean so I could play it with SNES9x. I do not own Star Ocean, but I want to play the game. I already know it's not ownable except if you happen to buy it off Ebay. So I played Star Ocean since 9:30AM to 12:30 PM yesterday, and haven't got into the game. The graphics are supposed to beat graphics of Chrono Trigger and Final Fantasy III. Both are exceptional in their graphics. Star Ocean is uber-exceptional! Then, of course, you have 2D sprites in a polygonal background on Playstation with games like Star Ocean - the Second Coming, Grandia, and Tales of Destiny which surpass any 2D RPG on SNES.

I added a new logo to Modblog. The one you see now! It wasn't hard to do in Photoshop. I also put it on 'Ian's Quintessential Blog', and a few minor changes to the design. I haven't updated the entries on that site yet. Sorry. I don't have my cat pictures uploaded to <http://www.angelfire...log2/renegeadeviking/> yet. I will upload them soon. I like the new template I modified. The template has multiple tables inside tables. The site is dominantly white since dark text and whitish colors are in favor of most sites I visit. I have 4 major websites: 'Ian's Personal Webpage 4.0', 'Ian's Square-Enix Fan Page', 'Ian's Quintessential Blog', and 'Ian's 512-bit Generation News Page'. Those are the major ones I've created within 12 months. I modified some templates on Geocities.com (which are still online by the way). I wanted a personal webpage that looked like IGN.com - a very modern webpage. My favorite color is blue so I try to have several shades of blue in my webpage. Designing webpages is a form of art - the colors almost always have to be similar to one another. Right now, I focus most of my energy on Modblog which drives people to my interests, of course. If it weren't for Modblog, and gaming forums....I would just be another node in the cyber-universe. Do I rather not be heard or be noticed? I felt I wanted to write publicly instead of privately for the first time in November 2003.

I've been looking at other people's blogs yesterday, and I must say, this web log idea is getting really popular. I mean look at all the good technical information Modblog shows. It has writers who keep up with software downloads everyday so I don't have too. Do they do this for a living - keep updating checking for updates? The world-wide-web is vast so it's addicting. If it weren't so - I wouldn't be in my office chair spending hours a pond end looking up information, and downloading upgrades to existing programs. I can write infinity topics from just browsing computer / videogame technology reviews alone. Gaming is driving computer technology further. There are just enough people out there who are willing to upgrade their PC/MAC to play the latest PC games. I'm a little poor now. I spend my money on software, and that extra gigabyte-stick drained half my savings. Those computer problems I thought I had with my custom pc went away when I re-installed Windows XP Professional. The Ethernet is now back on-line, and the sound works. And I don't get those funny internal motherboard beeps when shutting down Windows XP.

While I was playing Unreal Tournament on Friday and Saturday, I found out it plays on a Geforce 5600 rather slowly, and it runs at the high resolution, but it doesn't have a smooth frame-rate. This is a software issue. Reason I started to play Unreal Tournament is, well, I have a CD filled with downloaded maps, mostly composed of Capture the Flag and Deathmatch. I have Direct X 8.1 installed, and UT runs on Direct X 6.0. It is backwards compatible, but I get missing polygons in UT. Epic Games released their last patch for Unreal Tournament in 2000. Perhaps they should release more video card support in their next patch. Unfortunately, there more than likely won't be another patch. I mean look at Half-life and how many patches that game had. Valve supported Half-life up to 2003 with their v1.1.1 patch. That's six years of updates! The sound is flawed in some levels. The voices in UT sound robotic most of the time. But hey, I'm not complaining (mainly because the sound works and I'm happy). UT loads a lot faster than it did on the old Compaq Presario. It's was a slug compared to my Dell PC. Graphics really improved, and all my 21st century PCs can handle Unreal Tournament easily. UT character models and backgrounds look extremely flattened compared to sequels, UT2003 and UT2004.

I have 80 dollars now! What shall I spend it on? There is one PS2 game I really want, and one RPG on Gamecube I'm unsure about. Both are RPGs. RPGs I'll probably never play....but I'll try because I like the battle systems and some times I like the cut-scenes also. With school starting in one week, I fear I'll never get into it, but seeing how videogames come, and go as quickly as they do in terms of shelf life these days...I fear I will get one or two shots at owning them. 1.) Buying video-games at Wal-mart or Target or Best Buy during its short shelf life. 2.) At Game Stop or Toyriffic (videogame retailer) in Hudson and River Falls. First title I was thinking about owning is Tales of Symphonia (the sequel to Tales of Destiny II on Playstation 2) exclusive for Gamecube. And the very Internet-hyped videogame none other than Star Ocean 3: Til the End of Time which is due to be in stores August 31st. Okay, how should I put this? I never played Tales of Phantasia (SNES rom) nor that interested in Star Ocean yesterday when I attempted to play it. To tell ya the truth - I will get only one since IGN.com gives Star Ocean 3 a 9.5/10, and Tales of Symphonia a 8.5/10 thus Star Ocean 3 an exceptional game in most reviewer's eyes, and Tales of Symphonia good enough, but not as good as Star Ocean 3.

The truth that Gamecube is more powerful than Playstation 2 hardware, therefore, ToS might be more graphically detailed than Star Ocean 3. I've been reading review sites stating that Star Ocean 3 is instead a better game in terms of presentation, graphics, story and game play. But from what I read in reviews, ToS plays a lot like Grandia 2. Grandia 2 was the first Anime RPG I've was introduced too after I've completed Legend of Zelda Ocarina of Time. I only had Dreamcast and N64 before 2001. The only RPGs for N64 was Ocarina of Time and Majora's Mask and Dreamcast only had Grandia 2, Skies of Arcadia, and Record of Lacross War.

Why are there so many anime fanatics on the web? I mean I can't read videogame reviews or read message boards with out seeing some sort of Anime or Hentai character in banner form. Forums are littered with them. There is this idea that anime is popular through-out the world or English world because there aren't too many other cartoon styles except for Disney's. Even worst Walt Disney is starting to make their own anime inspired cartoons. Kingdom Hearts is a prime example. You have a mix of Japanese and American animation in the mix together. This hasn't been attempted before. From what I heard, Kingdom Hearts sold very well and Disney and Square-soft are going ahead with Kingdom Hearts II. Aren't most adults old enough to realize that cartoons are over with? Instead the Internet turns it into some type of popular culture I do not fully understand. That's the way I see it. A lot of RPGs have anime just like 10 years ago in form of sprites. For me it stops there. There was this one time one month ago where I tried drawing anime characters freehand myself. Ya, ok...so it's somewhat difficult to draw, and even harder to draw the cell-shaded animation types in Adobe Photoshop 8. What I mean is you'd better be pretty damn good at Photoshop to make those professional animations like ones on the Internet. Making the cartoon porn too, LOL! I played around with Paint Shop Pro 8 more than Photoshop 8, and used the paint brushes in the toolbar, and I can't get that aspect of it too work very well. My cousin called me crazy because I told him I was drawing anime that day. I never practiced drawing anime since then. I'm almost 20, and I'm too old for this sort of thing. Then some videogame historians argue that anime/hentai is for young and old a like. I disagree. However, my friend Randy really likes to watch Cowboy Bebop on Adult Swim whenever he can. I'm not a big fan myself. I seen it, and it the episodes turn me off. I don't watch silly shows like that.

Here are some good retro review sites I've found today. I got a kick out of reading old games. Really made my day!

- <http://members.lycos.co.uk/snesreviews/>
- <http://robsgaming.com>
- <http://www.shinforce.../genesis/Reviews.htm>
- <http://www.vgmuseum.com/reviews/genesis/>

If I owned a Genesis I would buy....

- Revenge of Shinobi
- Shinobi III
- Castlevania Bloodlines
- Robocop Vs. The Terminator
- Mortal Kombat II
- Earthworm Jim
- Ecco the Dolphin

[Modified a day later (Monday)] I decided to run to River Falls to ShopKo, and invest 80 dollars into two RPGs. It was a hard decision to make – two games would fully drain my 80 dollars. I really wanted Tales of Symphonia so I paid full price for it. I wanted it because I really like Grandia II. I'm thinking that this looks and plays almost exactly like Grandia II. Another game I got for 25 dollars is Dark Cloud 2. I paid 20 dollars for Dark Cloud earlier this year – a real bargain. Pretty good deal considering how much the game went down in price this year. I don't know how the game plays because I've haven't tried playing it. But IGN.com gave the first Dark Cloud an 8.0/10 so it's seems to be better than average. I'm excited to play Tales of Symphonia. I also ran to the River Falls videogame store and bought Secret of Mana (made from Squaresoft). I read the review of it on a retro reviews fan pages. I talked to the British retailer there, and I tried asking him about what SNES games are great. He says he first owned a Playstation then he bought an Xbox later. We also had a conversation on MAC 10 and Windows XP. I learned that Microsoft Corporation owns stock in Apple Computer Corporation. Aren't they competitors for god sakes? Yes, his name is Nick who that funny British accent. The Midwestern accent in the Midwest must sound really funny to him too. To be precise, I am a lonely Midwestern speaking British-American techno loving citizen. We talked about Tomb Raider for a long time. He likes Tomb Raider. I got the general idea that Tomb Raider is big for Lara's big boobs, and the fact Tomb Raider was one of the first 3D polygon games out.

Bye Bloggers!

Red Hat Linux 8.0 Impressions (2004-08-16 13:57)

My paper is about how Unix became a bug-free operating system, survived getting graphical in the early 1990s, and continued to be a help to computer users. First this documentation of Unix have a little about its history when Unix started in 1978. Then it grew to "System V" when Bell Labs eventually sold it off venders. (<http://www.unixgeeks.org/security/newbie/unix/history.html>) Then I'll talk about what I like about Redhat Linux 8.0, the closest thing to Unix I'm using.

Two men called Ken Thompson and Dennis Ritchie created Unix. Thompson created the em editor. The em editor compiled text to show on screen. He was also the creator of the pipe key. A Pipe links one program to another program so that two programs could be used on after another. Dennis Ritchie earned the US national medal of technology for his continuous support on Unix. My research paper will ask the questions how it transformed into a universal operating system spreading out to be the complex operating system. [<http://www.ehliis.com/adam/solaris/history.html>, <http://www.ehliis.com/adam/solaris/history.html>, <http://www2.educ.umu.se/~bjorn/unix/unix-history.html>]

Unix is a global universe of Operating Systems. I use Linux, because it has a ton of free software. Some people prefer Windows for its user friendliness and the fact that all games can works on it. Windows can fit the lifestyle of any human being. But that doesn't make Unix worst then Windows. Unix never crashes. Ah-ha now! Now, I got your attention. I am a Windows user since 1996 and I know that Microsoft made it easy on people when they created the Windows 95. Unix & Linux are harder to learn then Windows. [Evolution of Unix by Dennis M. Ritchie - <http://cm.bell-labs.com/cm/cs/who/dmr/hist.html>]

The predecessor of Unix was called Multics[1] (Multitasked Information and Computing Service) Multics was the original operating system that could recognize iNode [2] numbers in computer's number state. It was programmed in the B scripting language. This was before C scripting language, which is easier to understand. Multic was later used to create early videogame platforms like Magnavox Odyssey and Atari 2600 coming out in 1977.

Bell-Labs created the first Unix Operating System in 1971. This is before Microsoft DOS, which most people knew as DOS. It was a battle of who could deliver the best Unix.

In 1974, Unix was first built in a computer in a big room and the hardware was state-of-the-art. Unix was used to show how planets circled the solar system in the 1970s. Unix 7.0 was rewritten in C programming language.[3] Before that it was written in the B language, a complex language which used more code to do the same thing, C did. Unix was put into the computer mainframe by a series of data discs as thick as records. This was a time after the keyhole punch mainframe computers. Unix was the next revolution. This system was the first operating system to be able to run programs in. Data sheets could be calculated on a personal computer type machine because the software ran on Unix. The first Unix weren't able to keep data. Data was stored on a 5.2 inch discs and had to be installed every time they used the disc operating system. This was done by a command line but this was far better then using punch hole keys in huge mainframe type computers. [<http://www.crackmonkey.org/unix.html>]

The same year Unix was released on the market, members at Unix (Bell Net Corporation) sent the first electronic mail message from Palo Alto, California to New York City. It took the message 2 days to reach the other end.

If it wasn't for 1984, I wouldn't be lurking around, and that's bad. This was also the year that a group of programmers went to court to say that software should be free, creating the GNU project. [<http://www.gnu.org/fsf/fsf.html>, Sourceforge.net – a GNU licensed site with a lot of programs on it.] It wasn't until 1990 that they actually announced that they were going to make a version of Unix that was free. It would later be called FreeBSD. It would have graphical user interface and a kernel made from scratch. So the license only went as far to give programmers opportunity to make free software. Other problems included that they couldn't develop software that would take away from bigger software organizations. So GNU kept getting sued as result of giving people licenses to make free software. Now the government passed the law that computer users use free software at their own risk.

After Unix 10.0 was released in late 1989, a few months later Unix's source code became freely available. The strength of the market slowly killed off the Bell-labs version of Unix. BSD was one of them. The division of Unix at Bell Labs was also called "System V." System V was the successor Bell Labs made using the Unix kernel. All software were simple in System V, programs were a lot simpler then programs run now-a-days. All Unix systems had a terminal. The terminal was what all text information is based on. The Vi editor was ported which enabled developers to edit system files. It is still used today. "Unix" is used to describe the script of the script originally introduced in 1974 as a command based operating system.

At the turn of the decade, Graphically User Interfaces became available. And that started yet another war of who had the best GUI. Sadly that award didn't go to the hard working programmers who designed Unix, but Microsoft, with their multi-million-dollar Windows project, ruined it all. Microsoft smoked the Unix operating system ten fold. Windows 3.1 was also a operating system that used it's own source code to meet the demands that was better then 14 years of Unix evolution. At the same time, Redhat created the first Linux Operating System[4]. [History on Linux - <http://ragib.hypermart.net/linux/>] A programmer called Linus, a programmer from the GNU Project, originally created Linux. Redhat Linux is still the best Linux ever developed. Linus created Linux because he wanted to release a new kernel called HURD. HURD was the next generation of kernel[5]. Unlike Unix, RedHat made Linux feel like Windows. Redhat was perfect for teaching in technical colleges.

Unix was the first operating system that used the logical file system beginning with the root directory, following your parent directory, following the directory your in. Larger more functional programs could easily replace programs that existed in more recent versions of Unix. In Windows, you can't add Windows XP to a previous version such as Windows 98. In Unix, you can update desktop shells. The current software that was in the other version can say the same. That's why some people with let's say Solaris have the latest shell available. Problem with Microsoft is that you had to always buy a upgrade, that would add features to your computer. It wouldn't necessarily make it more stable. Programs do that. All commercial versions of Unix and Linux have system notification, which searches for updates on the company's website. It updates the shell so you have a free upgrade. It is rather quite easily done. Computer industry could do that 10 years ago. People didn't always have the Internet[6] to download software so they had to find more recent versions. That's what the middleman market came in and made everything expensive. Most Americans would go buy an upgrade anyway. Since the World Wide Web was introduced in 1994, millions of users upgraded their Unix systems for free. The vending companies simply make their money on people who cannot afford DSL or digital cable in their homes to upgrade free system files!

On June 07, 1999, the United States congress passed a law that open source code can't be trademarked ever again. That means that future Unix projects can be programmed to new versions without being sued as long as they gave the programmers who created it credit. Microsoft will soon have open source code for their operating system. Microsoft will never put software for Linux because they will have to develop it free and that is against every thing Microsoft stands for. People will buy from other vendors. Think of it, if your personal computer you've bought from Dell came with Linux instead of Windows, would you bring it in and delete the operating system or would you use it? In the future, software will appear for both Windows and Linux.

FreeBSD 5.0 could very well be the cheapest of all the Linux operating Systems. This operating system is used mostly for a networking solution. You can buy this version of Unix at any electronic store for a mere 10 dollars. Unix Operating Systems are the same, because they have network capabilities, web browsers, an office suite and a powerful web server. Most people who want to run a UNIX web server would most likely buy Solaris from Sun Microsystems. People with pocket change would like NetBSD & FreeBSD. Unix has the same desktop shells, KDE and gnome, as Linux. SUN Microsystems [7] is the world leader in Unix operating systems. Sun has recently come out with their version of Unix, Solaris 9.0. [<http://www.ehllis.com/adam/solaris/history.html>] Sun is responsible for creating the first _Javascript for web browsers. In 1997, _JavaScript was first used to show the first mission to mars showing a slideshow on NASA.com. Netscape contracted with Sun to put their most recent version of java in Netscape Communicator. Now every web browser except Internet Explorer used Sun's basic java software. I use java when I go on Opera and surf the Internet. Sun's Java works fine for what I do.

The Linux platform is under GNU License, but any vendor can charge for the debugging costs that comes with releasing a new version of their operating system. It is very cool because all software that is developed in Red Hat Linux or Mandrake Linux is free. Although, you need to have the programming skills to program for it. I am going to debug Unix systems for a job. Anyone can look at the script and compile it. It allows anyone to be equal in his or her design. Dennis Richie, co founder of the Unix operating system talks about a new scripting tool that will revolutionize Unix again. The project is called Plan 9 4.0 [8] and will allow multiple users to be able to change source code in real time. The project already has security built in firewall with network users picture on the screen. This will allow Unix like operating systems to be able to edit source code. Plan 9 can be good for the development cycle because the system administrator can control from start to end on how much code can be edited. The program also has a glossary where users can leave their source code so it can be researched at a later time.

Since Microsoft is dominate over any other operating system, computer manufactures like HP and IBM want to team up with successful Unix and Linux vendors to keep generating money. Both manufactures make versions of Unix themselves. However, their popularity isn't near the successful SUSE Linux or Solaris operating systems. IBM spoke out that they would support both companies. HP this sells Linux through their servers. So far they want to make their software as well as Redhat successful operating system has. Some guy quoted "RedHat is a 300 pound guerilla in this business" [<http://www.eweek.com/article2/0,3959,881,00.asp>]

Red Hat is a really big distributor located at a North California Campus. They are a profit organization to make a commercial version of the Unix Operating System. They are always looking for talent to up the technology of their version of Linux. Red hat has 5 campuses nation wide.

The following is my Introduction I got from Unix, which I got off my webpage. I never used it as a report so technically no one ever seen it except me so here is my review of Redhat Linux 8.0:

What does a Unix Network Specialist Do?

A network specialist is a member of bigger companies who control data passing through a network. He answers to the system administrator. A good example of this company could be Yahoo. Yahoo is an organization that lists WebPages in their search engine. They use some sort of Unix operating system to keep their server loaded. Their primary job is to create a working network for Windows NT or FreeBSD using network cables for high speed T1 or T3 servers.

I. Installation ("A Practical Guide to Red Hat Linux" by Mark G. Sobell | pages 208-211, 266-268)

Redhat Linux 8.0 installation will the single boot works as well as it did in Redhat Linux 7.1. The new setup allows you to pick if you want the latest version of KDE or Gnome 2.0 on your desktop. [<http://www.gnome.org/>] Does this mean more stable compensates? Considering that Redhat Linux 7.1 was more stable then Windows XP anyway - it's pretty stable in Redhat 8.0. When I booted Redhat, I made sure I reserved some free space. Redhat can take anywhere from 800 MBs of free space to two gigabytes of free space. All Linux users know how to load Swap, Ext3 partitions. I went the fast way, letting Linux install it self with the free space given. The option is on the installation menu on the installation disk. Nothing has changed in this area (that I'm aware of) since Redhat 7.1. There has not been one program which can with the box that wasn't stable. Some online web editors have known to be unstable. One I know that is unstable is Blueprint. I was able to boot both Windows XP and Linux using Partition Magic 8.0. But it can be done with out. The key element is when you boot your Windows XP Upgrade Installation Disc into the CD ROM be sure to have the current Windows XP installation wiped out entirely. I got confused when the installation screen told me if I choose to boot a second Windows operating system with my current one. The installation process is easy. But be aware that KDE software doesn't install on default. So I had to check the software I wanted. Redhat recognized all my hardware. Which is good.

II. The Difference

Looking at the professional job Redhat has done, Linux is every bit as cool as Windows. Gnome Desktop version 2.1 is easier then ever. I guess I almost prefer Gnome to KDE now. Gnome has more a Windows touch. Icons seem to be more illustrated then in Redhat's 7.1 version. This is also what everyone else on the web says about Redhat 8.0, but it is true that Redhat made Gnome a little more user friendly. Gnome has a lot of help menus and show how the shell works. You can always click on the file menu. Gnome's programs are all GNU programs working for the GNU Project. KDE, the other desktop is written in open source code. KDE is the commercial version of Linux shells. Both shells run all the programs on the other shell. It makes things much easier. KDE sort of resembles Windows. KDE has cloned every application that Gnome has including a web browser. A lot of people like Linux because they have the same file system. Your saved files automatically go to /home/student. No one can access your files if they have a different user name. It's the security thing they have in Unix.

Open Office is the word processor from Sun Microsystems used in Red Hat 8.0. This processor is different from Microsoft Word in that it's free and has open source code. This word processor can spell check and grammar check like Microsoft Word can. Open Office can import Word documents on IBM formatted floppies. It was better then KDE

Office which crashed on me when I ran Red Hat 7.1 six months ago. Gnome makes an Office suite developed under the GNU Project including AbiWord, Gnumeric (spreadsheet) and Agubuis (similar to powerpoint.)

Take it that I am done taking the college class and learned how to make and change directories and files in Terminal. Even the terminal has been updated in this version of Linux. Everything that deals with file creation has been updated to 2001 / 2002 standards, which is good. That's why Redhat Linux 8.0 is bigger than 7.1.

Linux rarely crashes. But even if it does - it usually is because the kernel didn't mount correctly (AKA files didn't get enough electricity) and the system had a panic attack. Sometimes all you have to do is restart Linux. If you are a super user[9] you can go into the etc directory and find that security file that will do dynamics (some files may be corrupted and can effect your boot up) Like Windows, you have to be careful what you touch, because these files aren't replaceable. But a good super user in Linux will know not to customize the console even though that's what a super user is for. The user has to set a user and password for many users. All documented in the /etc/passwd. In many high schools, the server they use doesn't protect the system files. Linux is cool in that no one can touch the Root directory or /etc or /bin directories unless they have a passwd. It almost makes Linux fool proof. Then again, we use Redhat the same way a hacker [10] would use it. They use it because they know it's stable!!! Yeah, so I bet everyone knows it's not hacker proof.

The Pluses in Redhat 8.0

1.) A new office suite made by Sun

Microsystems. Open Office is more stable than KWord and does more stuff!

2.) Redhat updated Mozilla to version 1.1. It beats older versions because it doesn't crash ever when in 7.1 it crashed a few times. I noticed at least one enhancement that made surfing the web better.

3.) The VI Editor makes website updating easier.

4.) Redhat now comes with more systems files and drivers. I always had a hard time finding files for programs I downloaded off the web. Now I can use more of them.

5.) Package Manager is easier to use. It is a wizard now instead of a client like WinZip. The gzip utility is also a good command to zip files.

6.) Still reads my gaming guides I previously burned on cd.

III. The V Improved Editor "VI"

Linux has all the power with a handy little tool that Unix users like to use as a text editor. Except some users use the notepad to edit text. Notepad is still great for taking college notes. Technical people use the Vi editor to edit files on Linux / Unix. Vi is like any other text editor except users can also use the keyboard to scroll up / down / sideways; yank / paste or build working command files. I know nothing about how advanced users can change how Linux boots by customizing certain system files. Most likely I would use Vi to read HTMLs. No need for updated software. Vi is updated each time there is a new version of RedHat.

DOSedit is outdated. You needed plugins that worked in the DOS emulator that is hard to find and not guaranteed to work. One of many major improvements Unix had over MS Windows. Until 4 years ago you couldn't find any advanced editor like Vi. Download the GVIM editor for the MS Windows.

In most beginning college classes, teachers don't expect you to know the Vi editor that well cause of all the commands used in the Kconsole or Gnome Terminal (same program)

IV. The Terminal

The terminal [11] is the text command line type window aspect of all Unix Operating Systems. The terminal is for some people are the opposite of most computer users, no mouse clicking, type everything. The terminal is also used when Linux (the GUI isn't functional) Type in the command to eliminate human error. Linux users use many commands accompanied with filenames in it.

Terminal Commands Examples

> cd /parent directory/directory - brings you up to next directory > gzip /o filename - compresses file and adds it to the directory > ls -l - lists files in current directory with # of links / date / size > df - lists the partition sizes hda 1, hda 3 and Linux Swap unusually

- > man 'command' - Gives a adequately description of the command your using.
- > vi filename - edits any file
- > tail -1 filename - takes the last line of a document
- > cp filename filename2 - copies files to another file
- > grep "contents" filename - this unity shows results on words found in files. grep can print sentences with the word in the terminal.

The Terminal comes with updated versions of common unities like Mtools (let's you modify Windows discs in Linux through the terminal) Redhat 8.0 reads any floppy disc with no problem. The grep tool looks at a larger range of files then in Redhat 7.1. It makes it easier then entering that inode number to find a file. The Manuel onboard Linux is a updated and documents all of 8.0 many unites.

V. The New Fun wear in Redhat 8.0

Gimp has completely designated the competition and crowned itself the only competitor in graphic design on Linux. If you want to draw and have fun drawing, Gimp has a simple drawing tool. If it is your favorite car or a sketch of a anime character, you'll find that Gimp has it all. Gimp includes intelligent background color copying. It can do many effects such as remove red eye from pictures. Lighten and darken pictures is no problem in Gimp[12]. Yank a part of picture out of image and paste it. So basically Gimps an image editor and paint tool all in one! People are waiting for Gimp 2.0 to come out in 2004. It's suppose to be more powerful then the present Gimp.

The games of Redhat 7.1 have returned. Some even updated. You can't really tell a difference between the old and the new. One game that is now aboard Linux is Chess. I wanted to play Chromium (a space shooter) but it won't run properly if OpenGL isn't configured. It was too bad because I wanted to play Tux Racer as a side game. One positive turnout of Redhat 8.0 is it recognizes the latest video card. I own an Nvidia Geforce 2 MX and ATI Radeon 9000. An operating system always runs better with a good video card installed. Else the fricken monitor My favorite game in Linux is Ksirlet. I play it only because it is a tetris game. Tetris is cool and will never die. Ksirlet is much harder to play then most Tetris style type clones. However the game increases its speed and like all games aboard Redhat. You have to use some strategy and a quick pointing finger in most of them. I also was trying to stack up points in that connect four games Linux comes with. Linux 8.0 comes with an extra space shooter unlike Maelstrom that's really hard to play. It's a more recent version of Maelstrom called Chromium. The overhead shooter is a great game. Unfortunately most graphics cards have hard time running OpenGL in Linux.

VI. Battle of the Browsers

Mozilla 1.01 [13]now replaces Netscape Communicator. Mozilla is like Internet Explorer in that it displays web pages with limited frame space. When I say that, it means that Mozilla cuts text off certain areas. Since Mozilla appeared in 1998, it has improved a lot. Sometimes it has a hard time reading _JavaScript from html made exclusive to Internet Explorer. Microsoft Front Page would generate html files with their form of html compiler. That cursed all web browsers build in Linux I use Mozilla composer for all my webpages. But I do most of my webpage editing in Windows.

The KDE shell has their own version of browser is Konqueror[14] 3.0.3.8. This browser can read html better then Mozilla. There is a problem looking at flash on Konqueror because flash won't show up. Web surfing I guess doesn't really matter since both browsers can read html 5.0 source code. Mozilla has a html editor built in. It can recognize most webpages. Mozilla has the only html editor you'll ever need. Obviously. Both browsers use Sun's java applet. Sun, however wasn't able to configure java so it could run java applets so I can't see java graphics I made in Windows. I have a problem with not being able to see the same java script, I seen in Internet Explorer.

VII. Communication Software bundled with Redhat

Anyways, Linux comes backward capable with Microsoft's latest OS, Windows XP. Redhat can see Windows files and folders off CDROM and though a network. And this of course is good because it can read txt files, mp3 files and html files off Windows servers. Yay. Linux users praise you for this ability. One thing I've noticed in 8.0 is Network Device[15] control no longer a client like Package Manager[16]. It's more a wizard and knows exactly what to look for when combining Windows and Linux though a network. I had a little trouble having Linux recognize the ping that the host system had, but it works pretty well. That proves that the ping work. But I still haven't seen how to transfer files. Perhaps Mozilla could help me on that. Something like FTP://129.900.29.90 could do the trick.

I also like Gaim, which is the premiere instant messenger for Linux. It has all the instant messengers packed in one. The version loaded with Redhat 8.0 isn't the latest version. I recently downloaded the latest version.

VIII. Want to get to know Linux on a moderate Scale?

I learned Linux through a book called "A Practical Guide to Red Hat Linux 8" by Mark G Sobel © 2002". Mark is a long time Linux Programmer whom helps create programs for the Linux Kernel for 30 years. His book tells of all the terminal commands plus all the System Administer key functions with easy to read syntax. His book is also used in technical colleges everywhere in the United States. I skim though many of these chapters are pick up many key commands in Linux. The book also allows me to look back quickly when I forget. If I didn't have this book, I wouldn't be able to get a B average in my class.

IX. Why should I go out and buy a new version?

In the end, if you haven't tried Redhat Linux 8, just go out and buy it. If you have Redhat 6.1 loaded on the computer and can't use my copy of Redhat 8.0, go out and spend 80 bucks to get it. But, of course, Windows users who don't want to lose Windows should stay away from Redhat 8.0. It's a small chance that your Linux partition won't install correctly. As a result, you'll use all your computer data. But this is a slight possibility and shouldn't happen.

In short, Unix is not Linux. But, Linux spin off of Unix is better. In my opinion, Linux is taking over Unix as a preferred operating system. Some people already now this, and won't admit it for a reason that's not legit, so I made this report to tell people that Unix is a thing of the past. Linux is the future.

SUSE Linux 8.0 Professional Impressions (2004-08-16 14:01)

Suse Ltd was created in 1997 in Oakland, California. The four lucky people who created capital in Suse includes Hubert Mantel, Burchard Steinbild, Roland Dyroff and Thomas Fehr. Suse went into business with the goal of distributing a better OS than Red Hat. Red Hat publicly introduced itself in 1998, one year before Linux soared high on the stock market. (source : "Revolution OS" on IFC) Red Hat has been making commercial versions that weren't sold in stores until 1998 (Red Hat 6.1). So it came together by a group ownership. With SUSE's Germany operation(s), Suse was able to create something competitive to Red Hat's OS. Suse bought the Jurix Linux source code, and renamed it to Suse making a much improved interface. By this time Linux was well established. Since the operating system was commercialized, it quadrupled in size. Now we are at version 8.2 with version 9.0 around the corner. Recently Suse went 64-bit instead of 32. This improved the interface, it booted up faster, and do more applications than it has done. Suse has an office sweep specifically designed for Suse Linux.

If you haven't read my Red Hat 8.0 editorial, you should read it, I mean I put weeks into that project. I described how Red Hat looked a lot like Windows. I don't know about copyright laws, but Linux in general has moved up the bar and broke laws. Windows applications are able to run on Linux! I think that is so cools. I talk about this later. Red Hat has recently been keeping up with the industry, surprisingly. They have both Gnome 2.2 and KDE 3.1 on their desktop. Red Hat supports both operating systems! KDE is entirely commercial in it's looks, and it's performance as a desktop shell. I knew Red Hat is good at what they do now. But I realized that their competition have had some interesting ideas. Suse, which is entirely profit driven, is unlike Red Hat who goes more towards the GNU Project, and is huge in industrial networking. Both operating systems use the same KDE Desktop, and it comes with all the applications. But Suse Linux is priced 20 dollars less than Red Hat. I choose the Personal version because it was cheaper.

Suse is already faster than Red Hat. The bootup is faster. I like this much better. Instead of commands being compiled, Suse has an upload statist bar. Opening applications is as fast as Windows XP. I have a 1.8 Ghz Athlon XP with 386 MB of DRam with a ATI Radeon 9000 video card. My processing speed is plenty fast. When the industry lowers it's price for 3.0 Ghz processors I'm going to upgrade.

The X factor [rating 9.5/10]

X as in Xwindows. Xwindows seems much stronger in Suse 8.2 than in Red Hat 8.0. Suse has a system were the MS Windows C drive is displayed on the KDE desktop. I shrugged at this massive accomplishment, for I have never seen the c drive on Linux before. Whether this option is in Red Hat 9.0, I don't know. But it makes it highly flexible to save things to the Window's C drive through Linux. Infact the C drive is listed on /root for easy access. You have the stability of linux to do your work without it crashing. I can do multiple stuff on the c drive that I couldn't of done in Red Hat 8.0. Personally I listen to MP3s on Linux that's on Windows. The sound quality is as good as it was on Windows. The drives for Red Hat 8.0 will also pop up. If you saved work in Red Hat 8.0, it'll automatically work in Suse. It was really weird, but it was really awesome. I know Suse did one thing right, they've added a full directory listing to Kstart so that you can directly access /root directory through the gui. I suppose I went sur-crazy for a mere 10 seconds. It's that cool. I don't have to make cdr each time I go on the Internet like I thought I had too.

Installation [8/10]

Installation (YaST) has a lot in common with Red Hat. No doubt it is a excellent and well set up Installation effort done by SUSE programmers. I liked Red Hat's latest installation wizard in version 8.0. By default, Suse 8.2 comes only with KDE desktop. What we really need is both Gnome and KDE. YaST will help you through the installation. If you have this by default. KDE runs faster than Gnome, slightly. Gnome has even more programs than Red Hat. All programs are installed in Gnome show up in KDE. The Professional version of Suse comes with 5 discs instead of 3 disks, and can add up to 3 Gigabytes instead of 2 Gigabytes. The source code has been shorten in the Professional version, and helps the computer load software faster. But the Personal version, what I have, has the exact same properties, but a little slower. The system will have to re-partition your current Linux partition whether it is Red Hat or Mandrake because Suse has to use the same partitions to create it's basis too. It's the damn competition way of saying, " You bought me, now you have to use me instead of Red Hat" So at least Suse is kind enough to show file progresses that are installed to the Linux partition. Put this can easily be reversed by renaming the partition to a different Swap drive, and have Ext 4, 5 and 6 for Suse or vice versa for Red Hat. There is an option that allows the super user to check gnome, too. With gnome you get another desktop. The installation takes 15 minutes. It takes anywhere from 1 Gigabytes to 2

Gigabytes of hard drive space. KDE and Gnome are both 700 MBs each. With the huge, and cheap options with hard drives these days, it should be recommended by anyone for the full installation of both Shells.

X .

The YaST asks the user to check his modem. The modem is connected in the COM1 of my computer (bottom socket of the motherboard) The only modem that'll worked in Red Hat is the common 3COM Robotics 56K Fax Modem. YaST needs to be updated further. If you have a Win modem, it won't work. So I went back to CompUSA to get an External Modem called the Creative Modem Blaster. That time it worked. Sometimes I think that PCI cards aren't viewable since they aren't in use unless you stick something in the serial port such as a external fax modem. I have had a odd connection viewing my fax modem inside my computer. There has been news off the web that Suse doesn't have the proper drivers for PCI modems. YaST will ask you if you want to download a patch for your Nvidia videocard. I know most people will go, and buy a Geforce II or IV. While others will go with ATI Radeon series. This patch will give your card compatibility with OpenGL.

Suse Personal version automatically asks you if you want to become a workstation in a LAN. Since most people will only own one computer, this isn't possible. So workstations work fine. Like in all The installation recognizes all 2003 hardware components, and earlier (video card, hard drive, monitor, mouse, sound card, speakers, processor, modem, network card, fire wire ports, USB ports, etc.) When Suse is installed I like to use Partition Magic 8.0 to create free space so Red Hat can detect it, and install according to it. I haven't seen a way that Suse can do that. No problem though.

The difference between SuSe 8.1, and 8.2 are noticeable. I don't know. I've never used Suse. So I heard: A lot of the bug fixes that comes with shell development are now fixed. Not so much a new release of the two desktop shells, but rather improved use of memory, and small application fixes. Suse 8 can now recognize newer hardware. Suse 8.2 never crashes. That's good news. To prevent extra work. Suse put more updates on the Programs on 3rd disc. I never needed to use the third disc.

The Internet on Linux [rating 8.5/10]

Unix has much Improved in the Internet field. Netscape Communicator has been whipped off the face of Linux distributions! This OS comes with Konqueror, Mozilla, Opera. Out of the three, Konqueror is the most advanced browser. It can open any webpage without a problem. Not to say that Mozilla or Opera don't have that ability. You can't read most javascript made by independent users that work exclusive for Internet Explorer seen on both iMac and Windows. Gaim is still the premiere instant messenger for Linux. It has everything : MSN Messenger, ICQ, AIM, Yahoo, IRC. And is very reliable. There is more drivers that allow automatic detection like you see in Windows XP. That annoying "Hardware Found" icon on the Windows taskbar is in Suse 8.2. I don't know how long Suse had the technology though. It comes with Opera 6.0 and Mozilla 1.0.2. Opera and Mozilla are award winning programs. Both browsers use Sun's Javascript in bedded into each. This allows you to see some basic html javascript like popup menus and slide shows.

The Word Processor / html editing / programming [rating 9.0/10]

I recently talked about Open Office on Red Hat, and it's so good, that it's back on Suse 8.2 version. It is the preferred office suite of all KDE, and Gnome operating systems. KDE makes its own version of Koffice. And Gnome makes Abiword. But these word processors, although close, don't have as many features as Open Office.org. Office Suite. One enhancement is that it highlights your typing in blue and while you type and also displays the end result as you type. That's cool. Now I don't have a problem of missing words. In OpenOffice.org 1.0.1 for Red Hat, OpenOffice.org crashed once every time I use it. The only thing that kept me from getting mad at it is that it periodically saved my files to /home/students/ directory. It's better in Suse or Linux in general.

If you want to edit html, you have plenty of options. Linux comes with Mozilla Composer. It has much improved over the Netscape 6.0 composer. MC can view both gui style, and html script in the same program. Than you can use Open Office to create light html pages too. There are some free downloadable software like Bluefish 0.9, and Coffeecup HTML editor. Both a command line based html editor. People can use the Kate for easy access to their html script. It highlights different code in color so you can easily find your code. It's also used for Pearl, C++, shell script, and Python shell script. Best of all, when your system crashes, Kate will keep your work for you till you log in, and open Kate again. I seen this work in different Linux OS, and it isn't new to Linux.

One thing new aboard linux is Python 2.2 programming client. Python script looks like shell script, but has MSDOS commands are built into it, and some simple commands. It's available for all Linux distributions. The script is simpler than shell script for linux, and looks the same. Not like Korn shell. That's what the terminal uses now. What is Korn, you ask? Korn is a more advanced shell programming structure than Bourlen Shell script. It's a hybrid, to be exact. Python is included with SUSE under the programming tab of the statist bar.

The Multimedia Software [7/10]

With the ability to see Mp3s on windows partition, you can use a program called XMMS (looks exactly like Winamp), and play your songs. The XMMS can read all Winamp customized zipped skins. It's about the highest quality mp3 player out for Linux. XMMS comes with equalizer abilities, and a range of sound adjustments. I really like. XMMS is in Red Hat 8.0 too. So it's a Linux thing. Sometimes XMMS will play, but not show up, and than crash with the music still playing. At least XMMS is skinnable. Mplayer can show DVD movies not very well, but the idea is there. I haven't seen this program in Red Hat at all. Mplayer can read avi, and mpeg off DVDRs, so that's a plus. It's not as buggy as the Red Hat version of it's media player. Suse comes with Realplayer. Realplayer reads MPEG off cds, but also doubles as an Internet radio tuner, and streaming video client.

Picture clients are cool. I like Kuinkshow better than Image Viewer in Gnome. This program will read graphic files off Linux / Windows, and scrolls through them as you scroll the mouse wheel. Esc on the keyboard cancels Kuinkshow. It has many similarities with Irfanview. One thing that I find difficult in Suse makes it's file system so you can't bring up Kuinkshow first, and look at your photos, but have to find them on the desktop or even cut / paste directory shortcuts to the open statist window. I look at Kuinkshow so I can easily page through my artwork I made in Windows.

Many games have the same problem with Nvidia cards that use Direct 3D. Suse has an easier time using the video card to it's advantage, but SUSE stop supporting Nvidia drivers for what ever reason. The focus for Linux partitions is OpenGL, an open source graphics accelerator which should work as well as Direct 3D, and doesn't. OpenGL improved some since 1999, but it still doesn't look as good or have as good as frame rate as Direct 3D. However I was able to get a Geforce driver off Nvidia.com, which improved graphics acceleration slightly.

Video editing can also be done on Suse with "MovieActor 3.7." The Linux version of Microsoft's Moviemaker software, and still more filled out with options. It is still very basic. Some features that properly describe it is that it can move mpeg video around by cropping the video, and export it to mpeg. It can add still images, and add slide transitions too.

New Games [7/10]

All the games are stable in Suse 8.2. Gnome's game package grown bigger in this version. Racer is a 3D Car Simulation (a 250 MB game) The game is much like Midnight Racer for the PS2. At least we know that 3D racers are supported by the operating system. There is also Fool Billiards, a pool game for Linux that uses real nice 3D acceleration.

Loki makes some affordable commercial versions of Neverwinter Nights, Civilization 4, Simcity 3000, Quake III, and Unreal Tournament 2003 for all Linux OS. There just isn't games to go around in Linux. I found a large selection of free games off linux.tucows.com. Chronoium is a good 2D shooter, but it requires OpenGL. Should Direct X be on a Linux operating system, that will be the day. The frustrating time comes when 3Ddiag doesn't work with Nvidia's latest driver. The driver can come in a compact 1.3 tar.tz format or a very large uncompressed .run format. Quadra is a new Tetris game put in Suse. It wasn't in Red Hat's distribution. It's fun, but Ksirtris is more fun, and it has somewhat better level adjustment. Quadra is impossible to keep up with after level 3. Grometris is Grome's version of Tetris. It's a basic game at best. KDE had come up with Kbattleship after the board game Battleship. That is a little fun too. The buttons in the game have been updated to look rounded, and shady that went well with the desktop anyway. This wasn't possible 5 years ago. Desktop appearance took a giant leap in the Linux department in KDE 2.0 and 3.0 AisleRiot is the only solitaire game on board Suse Linux. That sucks! Katomic is a fun games. It's a well known game in the Linux community. I am good at it. The game is about matching balls which move, and stop by hitting a wall. Than they have to be in the order of the matching screen to go on. There is 50 levels in this game. There is plenty of time to fool around. The higher levels are unreachable by the average person, I believe. Linux is about having fun. The more fun your having, the more you are educated about Linux, and that is the best part of using Linux. Patience is another solitaire game. Solitaire is relaxing. Thus, Solitaire is the bomb! Everyone agrees with it.

I've played Tux Racer, and it's a good game. It has a catchy jingle to it. It's more of a Penguin Grand Prix than a racer. It's a nice game though. A good effort. As a player, you can race 6 tracks. The tracks are better than most racers. It has various shades of tree colors, and snow cover. Good background artwork. It runs in high resolution. I wonder if KDE or Gnome plan to add Doom 1.1 to their 3D games. If so it would be awesome. If not, that's ok, I'll just download it off the Internet. If only I had a videocard that excepted OpenGL.

There was one game that worked with OpenGL well called Frozen Bubble. I love this game. It's new, and it's cool. Frozen Bubble most resembles the N64 game, Bust-a-Bubble. It's simple, it's stable, just line the bubbles up with the color, and there it all goes down. Do this all in time to move on. This game has 100. Newer versions should have more than 100. The program comes with mp3 music that is appropriate for this style genre. The music isn't that cheesy. Red Hat didn't come with this game. It was top rated on the web for most enjoyable game on Linux. So ... I rest my case. This is one of the best games for Linux off the Internet, period. This game deserves a 9.0/10 user rating. If you don't own a brand new computer like me, you can even lower the graphics quality so it'll run on your video card. You'll see once you find it.

If you like to download a lot of games, I advice you to download the compressed format .tar or .gz. Than you won't be missing files, and a lot of times, if your games come pre-compiled, you can get away with it. So download the zip format of your games. If you don't have an unity, which you should have if you're running Linux is ARK.

Desktop Management [8/10]

Desktops in Linux improved slightly in the last 2 years. Linux has a good os shell recovery system (something that occurs in the kernel.) Applications can't crash as they would in Windows. It's a Linux standard, and gets better in every release of Suse / Red Hat / Mandrake. In the industry, there is an argument whether or not the latest versions of SUSE, Red Hat or Mandrake are as stable as they were 2 years ago. It shouldn't been true though, the kernel went up more than a 100 public releases since than. All of these curacy of the GNU Project. These companies release a new version every 6 to 8 months every year. They're always trying to put something new in there OS. I mean ,in Linux, SUSE took a more drastic turn than Microsoft did when they went from Windows 98 to Windows 2000. Now you can go to your folder, right click, and do renaming, moving of files to any directory. Use the terminal or use of the gui to make adjustments to your files is quick. If you right click on the desktop itself you have a broad view of many options. By the way, I found out all the screen savers that Linux is known for is in Gnome. In KDE, you get a scenic black screen that will enlighten your Desktop. You can change your resolution to look like Windows, Change your background image. I tried this on my mom, and she thought she was using Windows XP. It was so funny to watch. She did see something different about "Kstart." I didn't say anything. Like in KDE 2.1, you could change your title bars to look a lot like Windows 2000. There are a lot of Desktop backgrounds that come with Suse. Really cool screen savers appear when you don't use the desktop for a length of time. I had seen these in Red Hat, though. Every thing has a minimum quality, for all screensavers have to look cool, and not crash. Linux also has an option where you can reserve energy by putting your computer into sleep mode. Sleep mode doesn't make much since to me when you can turn your computer off.

Installing programs are varied. RPMs usually don't have the the system files I need to install what I need. RPMs are the install wizard similar to EXE for Windows. Some programs come compressed in tar.gz format. I don't like these as much because there harder to work with. YaST gives me errors saying that the packages need to run the wizard is unavailable. A lot of times you need to be signed in as root to allow any rpms to be installed. Sometimes you can't install new versions over the old version (such as Mozilla) so you have to delete the directory Mozilla, and install the latest version over that. Suse has an uninstall wizard, but I have no idea where it is?

FIN : The End Result

The end result is that I much rather have Suse on my Desktop than Red Hat. Although in the future, I'll use Red Hat for school. I can have what I feel more comfortable with in Suse 8.2. I like the ability to see the Windows hard drive, it gives me more options I never had. I like Red Hat's smooth features like the screensavers. They both run the same version of KDE, and Gnome. But, Suse runs faster than Red Hat. So I have to like Suse more than Red Hat 8.0. I'll see what Red Hat 10.0 is like in 2004. But until then, I like what I have with Suse. Suse.com doesn't have any selection of drivers for hardware what-so-ever. But they do have a toll free 1800 number to call for tech support.

Suse 9.0 came out a while ago. I own Suse 9.0 now. I feels exactly like SUSE 9.0. SUSE 9.0 must have a little more compatibility with hardware such as modems, and processors. It has some newer program versions. It's all it is. Up-dated versions of the same old programs. And not something like version 0.4 to version 1.3 for programs. It's more like version 0.8 to version 1.3. It's only browser 5 releases. Like I say before, SUSE 9.0 is still a wonderful version of Linux except if you have 8.0 - 8.2 than you might as well wait until SUSE Corporation releases Suse Linux 10.0 in late 2004 or early 2005. Other programs that have changed since 8.2 are XMMS. It went from version 1.2.7 to version

1.2.8. See? It's not the much of a change. With 9.0 I got a double sided DVD in the box which made an unbelievable amount of open source software on it.

The Big Bang Theory (2004-08-18 14:02)

Hmm, more on the thought that the recent scientific discovery The Big Bang Theory may of existed 40 Billion years ago. I'm more into the fact that there will be another more valid theory in the near future. What I mean by the near future, after my life has ended in the 2060s or something. If you put it into prospective, the Big Bang is just a current theory created when we ventured out into space for the first time. It's a good theory, and I am sure some of the radiation, and hydrogen facts that I'm about to retell you are going to be true 2000 years in the future when people 'supposedly' pioneer outer-space, and landed on planets Saturn, Jupiter, and Neptune. It would end up somewhat like Xenosaga (videogame, RPG). Again, after my life-time. I mean, if I'm lucky, I may see an astronaut set foot on Mars. The 20th century made more progress in technology, obviously, and then all the previous centuries combined.

Firstly, NASA states that the Big Bang theory will never prove itself. The big bang theory states that a cosmic explosion occurred 10 billion years ago, and like an atomic bomb, the radiation first imploded (as an atomic bomb would do), and spread radiation everywhere. Radiation was harmful, but it eventually formed all different types of Suns. The radiation turned into rock which eventually became suns. There are 4 types of suns I know of. Blue Sun, Red Sun, Yellow Sun, Brown Sun (dead sun) and Orange Sun. Also a recent discovery from a British scientist made the discovery of a brown dwarf or dead star in 1995. Brown Dwarfs are much smaller than Suns, but bigger than any planets. Parts of the sun can also be asteroids (much, much smaller). We have an asteroid belt before Jupiter. (The fact remains an asteroid hit Earth 20,000 years ago ending the dinosaurs existence, and began the first ice age.) In other words dead stars shrink. They are bright in the galaxy like suns, but they don't burn hydrogen as Suns do. No one knows why they do that?

The smaller pieces of the sun could become planets or moons. I'll get to suns in a minute. Ironically, the man who invented it was as much of a priest as a scientist. Priests are supposed to believe in God, therefore, it's against Christian/Hebrew/Lutheran religion to think that our universe was created by an implosion. Arno Penzias, and Robert Wilson stated that radiation is moving around in space in 1964, and won the Nobel Peace Prize. The other big theory is about God creating the Earth in 7 days. We know that the Earth was not created in 7 days. In 1445 BC, when the final version of chapter one, Genesis, of the Bible was written in Hebrew, it was the only logical reason for people to bear with their existence. Funny right? Humans are biologically unchanged from 1996 BC to 2004 AD (4000 years) so the human brain is just as capable of understanding things then as now with the exception that most people aren't brilliant thinkers. We are a lot smarter now than we were 4000 years ago, that's obvious. In the 21st century, religion kind of ended up like the movie Dogma. If you've seen Dogma, then you might know what I'm saying here. The 18th through 21st century religion is the thinking that there is a Master of the Universe as well as our own Earth. It's just until recently - 100 years - that we've known how old our galaxy is. I watched Jurassic Park on Monday, and I remember this line. In Jeff Goldblum's (played Dr. Ian Malcolm) line in Jurassic Park he says, "God created the Dinosaurs. God destroyed the dinosaurs. God creates Man. Man creates Dinosaurs. Dinosaurs destroys Man. Women inherits the Earth....." Well, in Jurassic Park, it was true that cloning scientists created freaks-of-nature that soon got and rampaged across the tiny island due to a familiar double-crosser to most of us Americans. The point is we're just another step in Earth's revolution. In that film, we brought back the dinosaurs because it's human thinking that it could bring back the past, therefore, go down into the history books as "Most Successful Cloning Experiment". There is something about that fat guy from Seinfeld who purposely shut down the Jurassic Park's live-wire fence so T-REX, and the Raptors could escape through the barriers. I thought this too. Hammond's Butterfingers comment had double meaning. It could mean that he couldn't eat 'Buttlerfingers', and be happy so he was a double-crosser or 'double-agent', and got the Dino-DNA, but failed to escape with it. In this case - it's true that he gone through all the trouble of getting the cheap 'technician' job so he could steal the dinosaur DNA samples in the end. He looked kind of careless when he first appeared in the movie, but I think everyone underestimated his cleverness. Have you ever noticed that he and Ian weren't in the same room together! The fat guy from Seinfeld was no-doubt in my mind the villain of the whole movie. Ian also was the main character in the B rated film not directed by Steven Stelberg,

I know this is really off topic and I said this on my version of the Big Bang Theory, but we probably have 100,000 years until a big asteroid hits, and we'll destroy it in time. Thanks to scientist and technology, it is possible to destroy any rock that comes in focus with the Earth. I do not believe that man hates another man that much that he would drop a nuclear bombs on one another so nuclear winter will not happen. Your God probably did not give anyone this level of hatred. I don't think we'll repeat Hiroshima, and Nagisashi again partly because the aftermath was too horrible to comprehend. In the 1960s we had the Cuban Missile Crisis. That was an extremely close call. This has only one thing to do with the BIG BANG theory. Our sun is a young child in the galaxy partly because the color of it is yellow. We are the 2nd intelligent species to living here on this water-filled planet. The first was the Neanderthal. We were actually aliens to them long time ago. It's a long story on why Neanderthal don't exist anymore. It is obviously because they couldn't reproduce their species. There was a long time where there were two intelligent species on Earth side by side. And I mean smarter than whales, dolphins, chimps, and the like. Then again dinosaurs were the dominate species before the 2nd ice age when we were fair game to saber tooth tigers. Again this was long time ago. It too bad the Bible existed before fossil diggers. We hunted down woolly mammoth like deer, and so did the Neanderthal. This was well before Christ was born though.

As our sun becomes older - we may see Earth no longer able to support life, and may see life on Jupiter's moon, Titan. The ESA (European Space Agency) is sending a probe to study Titan up close, and verify that it has the same mountainous terrain, river channels, some kind of weather, and erosion that Earth has. We made a recent discovery that Jupiter's moon, Titan, may have life on it in 40 million years. This doesn't mean intelligent life like us, but rather microscopic organisms. It's hard too imagine that we were more ape than human 600 thousand years ago.

Secondly, how did the Big Bang begin? The center of the universe imploded like an atomic bomb, and compressed matter shockwave through infinite light years. The reason why I say infinite is the Universe is continue to span. The structural integrity couldn't hold the mass any longer so it expanded at the speed of light to the outer reaches of space. The universe is still expanding. Anyhow, the matter that was first formed is called plasma. Plasma is a type of radiation. The plasma eventually becomes pure energy or a form of electricity called "Maffei". As gas cloud forms in the galaxy. The next 30,000 years, the universe cools itself to 10,000°K or Kelvin temperature. The Fahrenheit equivalent to this is 17540.33 degrees [$F = ((K - 273.15) * 1.8) + 32$]. The protons eventually turn into hydrogen (we know the hydrogen is made up of one atom, the smallest matter known to man) No light is visible during this period. And the 'H' gas eventually forms planetary systems, and continues to harden into a solid to form various classes of planets. All planets have different type of gases that make up their atmosphere. To our knowledge, only oxygen, nitrogen, and hydrogen can make up an atmosphere or AKA air capable for life-forms. To have life, you must have plant life, which everyone knows, needs carbon monoxide to live. The by-product of plants is in fact oxygen. Earth is the only planet with these three ingredients. Also the Sun has to warm the planet above freezing so plant life can grow, and water can form. All life forms in water first before it's far along it's evolution to move across continents or land masses. It seems that all the planetary systems are red-shifting or moving away from our "Sol" planetary system. Blue shift planetary systems do not exist to our knowledge meaning that the planetary systems are moving towards us. Some sources say red-shift planetary systems are much like the sonic boom here on earth. Think it as if when I heard the sonic boom of an aircraft flying over me seconds before the sound hits,, and then the sound fades. Same thing with red-shifting. This also is known as the 'Doppler Effect'. The sound of an aircraft is also a Doppler Effect. The site explaining this phenomenon used the whistle of a bullet-train as an example. The train whistles as it comes to a railroad crossing than the sound gets louder because the frequency is higher. The planetary system travels near us at light-speed, and then it breaks away from our solar system's gravitational field just as quickly with its enormous speed. Our sun is small compared to other planetary systems so the likelihood of our "Sol" planetary system blue-shifting another planetary system is very, very small. I found out this fact today. To our knowledge, only yellow-colored suns can support life forms. Yellow colored suns are middle-aged suns. Blue suns are newly born suns, and red suns are almost dead suns.

Thirdly, evidence of the big bang:

- First of all, we are reasonably certain that the universe had a beginning.
- Second, galaxies appear to be moving away from us at speeds proportional to their distance. This is called "Hubble's Law," named after Edwin Hubble (1889-1953) who discovered this phenomenon in 1929. This observation supports the expansion of the universe, and suggests that the universe was once compacted.
- Third, if the universe was initially very, very hot as the Big Bang suggests, we should be able to find some remnant of this heat. In 1965, Radioastronomers Arno Penzias, and Robert Wilson discovered a 2.725 degree Kelvin (-454.765 degree Fahrenheit, -270.425 degree Celsius) Cosmic Microwave Background radiation (CMB) which pervades the observable universe. This is thought to be the remnant which scientists were looking for. Penzias, and Wilson shared in the 1978 Nobel Prize for Physics for their discovery.
- Finally, the abundance of the "light elements" Hydrogen, and Helium found in the observable universe are thought to support the Big Bang model of origins.

Fourthly, one of the popular spin-offs that astronomers make of the Big Bang theory is the red-shifting of planets. I don't know if this is referring to the Hubble space telescope created in 1991 or a scientific term. Anyways it theorizes that radiation loses its speed over long distances when it continues to expand. The big explosion is over thus most of the universe is already created. It also states that if the universe is 10 billion years old, and continues to grow for another 10 billion it will be less than twice the size it is now.

Our Galaxy, The Milky Way

The universe is growing all the time with new planetary systems every day. When planetary Systems get destroyed - it's usually because the sun is no longer a sun than it's considered a black hole or brown-dwarf. Everything in that planetary system is died. Anyways, the center of the Universe is a set amount of light years for 1 split second, and changes the next second to more. We do not yet know if our home, the Milky Way Galaxy, is being pushed further back into the Universe. Our Milky Way Galaxy is on the outer layers of the Universe. I don't know much other than the fact that we're a new galaxy in the Universe of 999,999,999,999,999,999 total galaxies, and a 100 billion times that in planetary systems per galaxy. Yes, honestly, there are 100 Billion star planetary systems in our galaxy! We are the only one we know of with 9 planets. I got this information from my 6th grade Science class. Have you ever looked up in a sky, and saw thousands of stars some nights? These are the sun's light that travels hundreds of light-years to our solar system. Most planetary systems have 2 suns also called a binary planetary system. Some planetary systems have as many as 4 suns.

The big bang theory is the only theory we have to state that the universe was created this way until we have any reason to make a new theory with known scientific evidence. It's just in 100 or 200 years in the future when something new is theorized. The Big Bang theory made just be another out-of-date theory? Perhaps scientists will discover that there isn't just one big bang, but several big bangs that happened at once like a chain reaction. Who knows? Maybe that evolutionary radiation explodes with contact of other gases to form Suns and planets. In our life-spans, this is the popular theory that human-kind has excepted to why everything is the way it is, and our solar system, like other planetary systems, were created from millions of years of evolution. And the evolution isn't over with. Perhaps human-kind soon dies out in 10,500 AD, and another species will take our place. They'll find all this ancient human civilization on the Earth. Perhaps they'll use our existing technology, and adapt to it so they'll eventually be smarter aliens than we are.

This article is all for fun. And remember I'm not an astronomer. I need extensive research on Google.com just to ensure there isn't any false information. If I have states something wrong or am off-the-wall with my explaining, comment on it, please. Oh yeah – I don't know crap about the Milky Way. Please reference on Google on “End of Humanity”, “The Milky Way”, “Red-shifting”, and most obviously, “The Big Bang”.

Kepler & ET Planet Finder | NASA S-Comp goes onlin (2004-08-20 14:03)

This entry is about life on other planets. Neanderthal could have been the aliens! But we destroyed them in the 2nd Ice age. All that remains are their bones. First, I'm going to get into satellites, particularly the Kepler satellite, and what planets they are going to search on. Co-existing with satellites are the telescopes NASA is developing with Lockheed. Telescopes are also satellites in a way. The military spy satellite such as titan is more of a telescope. That thing can magnify 5000x bypassing Earth's Atmosphere looking at each one of us right now. Scary right? Have you seen the James Bond film, Tomorrow is not Enough? It had some fake satellite images taking of ground zero of the missile's target.

While I was looking up stuff to put into my last post, I found a headline for NASA's next super computer. A super computer is really the processor. I don't know what they last one was, but this one is very powerful. Not to say the last one isn't powerful. And there on reason not too use the last one too. This new series is called Kalpana. The first Kalpana arrived last year. SGI is developing the first of a series of super computers which will all be working together. This particular super-computer is using 512 Intel Itanium 2s. The first one was running last year. And 19 more are going to be shipped this month, each with 512 Intel Itanium 2s. I don't know what it's going to be used for? Perhaps space exploration, and a lot of simulations. NASA can license it off to research. The newest Itanium 2 clocks at 1.5 GHz, and has a 6 MB cache. All together the super computer(s) will have 500 terabytes of memory. They will all run Linux. The article didn't say what type of Linux the super computer uses. I'm thinking it's Red Hat. Linux OS only takes 2.5 GB of space. That's 499,997.5 GB left of storage for miscellaneous applications. Such as classified space video and Hubble images.

Do NASA / ESA Satellites to use MJPEG codec for space video?

I wonder if they use MJPEG to compress their satellite images? Wink. I personally love JPEG in terms of compressing images. Everyone else must too, because it's everywhere on the Internet. JPEG is a monopoly. It's better than PNG and GIF plus all the other compression formats. High-end motion video cameras use M-JPEG where every scene is made up of compressed JPEG while still retaining highest possible pixel quality in the compression process. The quality is every bit as good as uncompressed video taken by a high-end industrial video camera. M-JPEG has a 1/2 to 1/3 compression ratio. Only high end equipment can handle this since JPEG takes CPU power for real-time broadcasts. It's has a 1/20 compression ratio with no visible image loss. The Internet JPEG that we use can be resized, of course, and be compressed 1/50th the normal uncompressed size. Think of bit-map (BMP) than think of JPEG! I think JPEG will be around for another 100 years. MPEG 2 and MPEG 4 compression is a lot better than MJPEG and MJPEG2000. DVD video uses MPEG 2 compression. I spoke of this in earlier entry, the one talking about putting MPEG 4 video on SVCD and DVDs. That is a state-of-a-art movie-to-disc technique I use. An M-JPEG converter is found here: <http://www.morgan-multimedia.com/> has a 60 day trial version of MJPEG2000 video codec. My guess is it plugs itself into Windows Media Player, therefore, available to every program that'll compress video will be compatible with the MJPEG codec thingy. Good. We all understand. At this website - you can also find a free JPEG2000 for Internet Explorer, and also a Netscape/Mozilla plug-in on their webpage! Now what I found out there was a free one, I could compress images about 5 to 10 KB better. But is 10 KB really that much more too load? Not really. It does, however, make it easier on us modem users.

NASA's exploring Alien Life on other planets with Satellites confirmed.

I found out what NASA's next satellite is going to be which I commented on in my last entry. It's called Kepler. Kepler (not the astronomer) will take close up pictures of planets when they are on the near side of the Star/Sun.

Fine. But isn't this information obvious? Of course, the lens in Kepler that Lockheed Martin is building for NASA, is a lot more powerful than Hubble. The image will probably be 10 tera-pixel. 10,000,000 mega-pixels. I don't know for sure. At the moment, NASA is not releasing information on the final product. Anyways, it is possible for Kepler to view alien-made satellites within 100 light-years from Earth. Yes, that is right! This may prove alien intelligence is somewhere out there! Well, of course, the USA government will not release those photos of alien space stations or probes out there for many years. This is undoubtedly Kepler's prime purpose. Star Trek may not be all fictional after all!

Still, NASA is building an even more powerful, and expensive, satellite called the Extraterrestrial Planet Finder [http://planetquest.jpl.nasa.gov/TPF/tpf_index.html] in as early 2015, which will take pictures of earth size planets in ultra high resolution. 500 tera-pixels? Anyways, it's incredible! Real alien satellite photos! Except if there are any, it's Top Secret. So don't expect any confirmation of it unless it leaks onto the Internet. NASA's official and only comment on it was, and I quote, "Conduct advanced telescope searches for Earth-like planets, and habitable environments around other stars."

"The discovery of life on another planet is potentially one of the most important scientific advances of this century, let alone this decade, and it would have enormous philosophical implications." * AKA we want to find to find aliens!

Life on Titan?

Oh yeah, I also found out there may have been life on the Saturn's largest moon, Titan. Titan is the only moon with an Earth-like atmosphere. By Earth-like I mean rivers, oceans and erosion. Jupiter and Mars have this too. This part I wrote after I listened to the Titan Planetary Radio episode. Fifty-one moons orbit Jupiter. This means the planet once had water. This stands to reason, since Yellow suns are less than middle-aged suns. When our sun is bright blue, it will be a lot hotter. The heat must reach Titan before it can make life. In a few billion years, Titan, as well as Jupiter, may have life on it. Titan is only 800,000,000 miles from the sun! Scientists are using Titan as a possible example of when Earth had no life, before the dinosaurs. Titan's atmosphere is full of nitrogen, and carbon dioxide could support life. I never imagined that life could exist on a moon as well as a planet. Is a moon still a moon, if it's orbiting a planet, and even the size of a planet itself? The answer to that is yes! Moons can be the size of Earth, and as long as the Planet it's orbiting is bigger than it, it's considered a moon or satellite of that particular planet. Now, if an object is 'orbiting' around a moon then it's called a satellite. Kepler's 3rd Law states this as a fact. Scientist named the Moon - Titan, because Greek Gods sent titans to walk the Earth in Greek myth. Giant creatures such as Cyclopes. Titan can be observed from Earth with a small telescope if you aim it at Jupiter. If you're lucky, the moon will be in front of the planet. In the audio commentary, I also found out that this new satellite from the ESA can do 100 feet per pixel on Titan. I am unsure what they mean? Surely a mega-pixel camera can not view the surface of a moon or planet so it must mean a digital image. The resolution is 1x1 per 10 feet so 1000x1000 would be approximately 10,000 square feet of planetary service.

Audio commentary of Titan - <http://www.planetary.org/files/pr20040621.wma>

Kepler's 3 Laws:

- 1.) Each planet moves around the Sun in an orbit that is an ellipse with the Sun at one focus.
- 2) Each planet moves so that an imaginary line joining the Sun and the planet sweeps out equal areas in equal times.
- 3) The squares of the periods of time required for a planet to complete a trip around the Sun are proportional to the Cube of the average distance from the Sun.

A joint effort of NASA, and ESA will bring the European space probe to Titan. In short – NASA builds the rocket, and Europe builds the probe, and together the two space agencies launch it into space until it arrives to Titan. Then the rocket will also shield it from dangerous space, and the satellite will orbit the moon taking climate readings and pictures of the surface of it. We already know that water will be on it in 4 billion years. Titan will be like Earth in many ways. Of course, it'll have different animals on it perhaps a species or two intelligent enough to create a civilization advanced enough to make buildings, planetary travel, radio signals to commute. This would have been the case with Earth too. Yes, we would have co-existed with another species! We, as Earthlings, are lucky enough to not co-exist with another species. Who knows? We could have been a slave race of another race like the slave trade in America the 19th century before the Civil War.

If we did co-exist with another species it would mean that a.) Another species traveled to Earth via mother ship or b.) We co-existed with a fellow species that just happen to be another of Earth's creation at around the same time period. For example, Neanderthal or half-ape people. Even stronger than man! Unfortunately, these species died out shortly after the 2nd ice age! Human's simply made better spears than Neanderthal therefore Neanderthal went to WAR against our ancestors over land and lost. Not too much more than that. Neanderthal were dumb for the most part. If a Neanderthal and human had an arm strength contest, the Neanderthal would easily win. Ape-man was supposed to be just as intelligent as humans, and stronger as well. Have ya ever seen Planet of the Apes? The new one made in 2000? The 2000 version is better than the 1961 version. I think the end shot of Planet of the Apes where intelligent ape-man appearing in the 20th century is a quite interesting footnote.

Facts about the Moon, Titan

1. Orange atmosphere

Titan's surface is a mystery as the whole world is cloaked in a hazy orange atmosphere. It's made of nitrogen, with traces of other simple molecules, and forms a thick cloud around the moon, hiding its surface.

2. Even the Voyager probe was unable to see through the clouds. However, it was able to detect liquid methane on the surface.

3. Though parts of Titan's surface may be liquid, the Hubble Telescope has detected patterns beneath the clouds that may be continents of land.

4. The atmosphere on Titan could be identical to that of the early Earth when life began. If the world was warmer in the past, then life may have sprouted.

Yesterday was my first CISCO class:

I'm getting a little off topic here, but I started my CISCO class yesterday! Joyce talked about the CISCO 2600 and CISCO 3700 rack routers. The CISCO 3700 router is state-of-the-art, and obviously the one with the most features. Hmmm. I imagined that the students there would be nice to me there because there is a conduct rules there. In class, there are 5 other students. They seem to know each other. I knew that before. Anyways, I tried making friends, but they wouldn't talk to me. We all introduced ourselves in the beginning. I knew this would happen so I resisted what I would speak of. I told them I was a gamer. There is something wrong with Gamers! I resent this! I realize that people don't have time for games. But it would make perfect sense. To play games together – you need to set up LANs – which has everything to do with CISCO. I know gamers. They're probably playing first person shooters. I wanted to get into asking them to my house so we could play UT2004. And I also made a mistake in class by clicking on 'Yes' on the dialog box to keep passwords for <http://cisco.netacad.net> which is dangerous for me. I'm using a public computer. I know I had to ask for help because I didn't know that to erase the passwords, I had to go through Internet Options / Content / Autocomplete / Clear Passwords to clear passwords for Internet Explorer. I didn't know that before yesterday! But as I first expected, they don't want to know me. Why? Do they disagree with the gamer part? Or the fact that I've been here a year while part time? I don't think all gamers are immature! Gaming is cool!

I don't game that much anymore. Not like I use too. Joyce doesn't understand this. Why do people suspect that all gamers are immature, and therefore, lacking in intelligent conversation. I mean the conversation between me, and them is mute for the most part! And I wasn't even being an asshole to them. I barely said anything! I believe people who are in the glass made the choice to do so, and CISCO even has to do with the Internet thus everyone. The truth is everything which CISCO's teaching us can be accessed online with only a working user-name and a password!

I have a CD full of Power Point Presentations, and actual webpage files of the actual CISCO online course of version 2.9. I've been looking over the power point presentations memorizing the pictures. And no my memory isn't photo-graphic, but if it was, I be looking at this in a day, and be passing all my tests the first time around!

Interesting radio broadcasts from Planetary Radio (all files are 6.75 MB - 7 MB) To read the html over view, just replace "wma" with "html" for each radio episode Right click on your mouse, click 'copy link location', and paste it in your address bar. Also you can change wma to mp3 to get the MP3 version of the same thing, which is almost twice as big as WMA versions:

Please support JPEG2000! Browser plugin is free. (2004-08-21 14:05)

Hello all. It's me and I want to say I've seen the next best thing in graphic files. And it is called JPEG2000! Best of all, JPEG2000 browser plug-ins are free! JPEG2000 has a better pixel resolution for the file size. I want to use JPEG 2000, but am afraid it's not standardized for most users. JPEG 2000 is state-of-the-art compression for images. JPEG 2000 files always have the *.J2C or *.J2K extensions. But I found out that Paint Shop Pro 7 and 8, and Adobe Photoshop 7, 8, 9 have support for it. You can also download Morgan Media's JPEG tool to make J2C files. This is a shareware program. I recommend anyone to download the free browser plugin, and forget about it. I have it installed and all it does is adds support for J2K files. I want to use JPEG2000 on my webpage, but I can't because more than half of Internet users don't have support for it. There is enough pixel enhancements for this format to make a difference in Internet. JPEG is 14 years old. JPEG 2000 just came out in 2001. Please support JPEG 2000, and hope Microsoft Corp. standardizes it in Internet Explorer 7.0

I'm sorry. I can't show you a JPEG2000 image on here because it won't show up if you don't download and install the plugin.

16KB JPEG file

PNG image acting as if it were a 16 KB JPEG 2000 image

This is the actual JPEG2000 image compressed at 16K....like it :)

Below is the very useful image tag for J2c and J2K files :)

School starts (2004-08-23 14:05)

<http://Stuff5.modblog.com> recognized my JPEG 2000 plugin suggestion! It was a pretty damn good suggestion I think. JPEG2000 (JPG2) is state-of-the-art JPEG compression. JPG as many of us know – is a huge – it's the second web browser standard (first was GIF), and now JPEG2000 is the forth. GIF (1993), JPEG (1995), PNG (1999), Macromedia Flash (1999), and JPEG2000 (2004).

On Saturday, I woke up and played a little Tales of Symphonia (Gamecube RPG). I'm currently on Chapter 3. My dad was in the other room watching baseball so I was afraid of him staring at the weird music in this game. I, personally like the game play, and I'm a little interested in the cut-scenes. Namco definitely didn't rush through the voice-overs. I was right about the game playing a lot like Grandia II. That's a big plus. Grandia II was really long, the battles were intense, and it had an interesting enough story that I played to the end. With the Dreamcast version, I was able to download hacked game saves from the Internet via Dreamcast. By hacked, I mean someone actually upped the stats of the characters and gave me 99 of all items. The bosses in Grandia II really bug me, as in a lot of them have physical and magic spells, which of course, is in a lot of RPGs. I played closely to the Walkthrough, so I knew what I was doing. Plus you can see your enemies on screen before activating a battle sequence. Tales of Symphonia is the exact same except it keeps the side view in the battles. The game is cell-shaded, and everything is in 3 dimensions including the battle sequence. After that, I played Wave Race. Not great, not bad. One thing I like about Wave Race: Blue Storm is the wave effects - they still look above average. I completed Normal Championship cup. The sequel makes me remember the old Wave Race 64 game that I also own. That game was cool even if it's one of the first N64 games to come out, thus it's has out-dated graphics on N64 near the end of it's life. The Gamecube version looks photo-realistic. Well, of course, not as photo-realistic as Resident Evil and Resident Evil Zero. My point is - it's still a load of fun to play. Then I played Colin McRae 04 on X-box. My skills improve enough that I broke my own record a couple of times. Colin McRae is made by Codemasters, and was out for Xbox in 2003. Codemasters is making a Colin McRae 2005 coming out in December. Xbox has 2 big Rally games. Colin McRae is more of a realistic simulation like Gran Turismo 3 while Rallysport Challenge aims more towards an arcade simulation. Arcade simulations are about driving fast and beating your best time. Simulations are about realistic features, and are often prettier and challenging at the same time.

After my late dinner, I went over to see my friend Randy, whom I haven't seen for more than a month. I came over about 8PM. He happened to be playing Madden 2004 on his new Playstation 2. I knew it was Madden because I know what John Madden's voice sounds like. I joked about it barely looking high resolution. His TV is a little old so it doesn't have as nice displays as a new television would. He had the sound hooked up to the stereo speakers to give it that boosted surround sound capability. Him being the Green Bay Packers, and the other team the Pittsburgh Steelers. He said there was a Madden 2005 Collectors Edition for 60 dollars. So he just bought the normal 50 dollar version. Madden 2005 seemed to have a graphical boost compared to my Madden 2002. Then again, PS2 is already out of date. I don't know if the hardware is ancient, but today's computers look a whole lot better. Still, it's high resolution and can support full 3D games. The PSone could do that - but not as well. I always find most average Playstation games having a lack of texture - don't know why because Final Fantasy and Gran Turismo games always had great texture. Then he showed me Need for Speed Underground. He loves the game - it's all he plays. I brought Winning Eleven Soccer 6 and Mega Man Anniversary Edition over there. Winning Eleven (produced and developed by Konami Japan) is the top franchise all over the world in Soccer games. It beats EA Sports FIFA everywhere except USA. But WES6 was the first of the franchise to come to North America. In other parts of the world, it's known as football. And NFL Europe is known as American Football. Anyways Randy commented that the game's commentators really like their soccer which, of course, were British. The British are known to go crazy over their beloved soccer (in the stadium. In UK, it's not just any sport - it's THE sport! In US, we have the MLS, but it's not as nearly as popular as NFL or NASCAR. Okay, so it's more popular than NCAA (college) baseball, but that's about all. It ranks below College Football, and College Basketball in ratings. Randy and I had a hard time scoring goals. I thought the R3 button scored goals, but soccer guy always passes it away from the goal. This makes me very mad. Whenever I use circle or square, it always goes above the net or the Goalie catches it. Our game went through the first, and second halves than both extended times to the shoot out. Randy didn't control the net in the shoot out. If my ball didn't hit the edge of the post, and bounce off, I would have won that game. Randy wasn't even guarding that end of the net!

Then we played Mega Man and Mega Man 7. No comment on this. Winners can only brag, losers can not at least in gaming. It doesn't sound right if the 'underdog' brags. In the gaming industry, it's weird how small companies brag about their game. That's what VG review sites are for...to reveal the truth of any of them. Neither one of us completed a level. Yes, we were that bad at it. I scored even were Randy was so we were even on skills. The game is pretty difficult for a 16 year old game. I told him I've beaten Mega Man through JNES with an invincibility code.

On Sunday, the Minnesota Twins (<http://minnesota.twins.mlb.com/>) were playing the Cleveland Indians. Twins won. The Twins are a small market team, one of the smallest in the National League. Their pay roll is about 30 million. Sometimes the Twins play really good, like they've done tonight against Cleveland. For an example - Christian Guzman hit a double with no outs. The Cleveland pitcher walks the 3rd batter so when the bases are loaded, the Indians could make a double play. Then one of the worst players on the Twins struck out (Ford). Torii Hunter almost hit a home run on STRIKE 3, but instead it bounced off the Metrodome wall below the stands which freed up all the bases. Best thing - it was a pitcher's worst nightmare which put the Twins ahead, and the game was pretty much over then.

I went to the Toyriific, and didn't see anything good. I was looking for Rallisport Challenge II. They didn't have it. However, I did buy ESPN Football 2K5 for 20 dollars.

I got home and played ESPN Football 2K5. This is the first time I played football since I bought Madden 2002 8 months ago. I picked Vikings as my home team against 49ers. MN Vikings are my favorite NFL team. I played picked a random selection for possible plays. I feel unlucky. I don't know a heck a lot about football. I feel dumb at it because I read the manual, and did the plays threw the football with X button, and tried to catch it, but the quarter-back threw it out of bounds. I wasn't even aiming towards the sidelines. When it was my turn, I couldn't figure out how to make the catcher catch the ball. This would definitely help a lot if he did. I tried pressing X on the dual shock II controller, and the running back didn't do anything to catch the ball automatically. Soccer, on the other end, evolves around no coaching so, therefore, it is more fun to play. Turning coaching off in NFL football would make the game harder, and I had it on the easiest setting. I've got frustrated and turned the PS2 off.

Then today I watched Star Wars - A New Hope, and Star Wars - Empire Strikes Back. Two very old movies. Oh, Star Wars fan base is huge. Internet sites everywhere. I am not a fan of the prequels. Star Wars doesn't have very good actors - but its story and effects are questionable. I own the Star Wars Trilogy Special Edition. Darth Vader is very cool. I like the part where he squishes the necks of those who disobeyed him. Carrie Fisher is a hottie in the early 80s. That scene in the beginning of Return of the Jedi when she was in a bikini (obviously propaganda) made her look a bit how should we say - out of the ordinary. I wouldn't want to be close to a slimy disgusting slug neither. George Lucas has a sick mind having Luke Skywalker save a princess, who's barely wearing anything. That slug definitely has issues. I was looking up the homebrew Star Wars sites after I saw Empire Strike Back. If I had a choice of which one is my favorite of all the Star Wars films - I would pick Empire Strikes Back.

I found out the name of Episode III - it's called "Star Wars Episode III - Revenge of the Sith". We know Anekin Skywalker gets married, and turns to the dark side as Darth Vader. What will make people watch it is the fact it's Star Wars, and that it has state-of-the-art special effects.

I just started "Fundamentals of Human Relations" today. I'm being thought by Dr. Kezner again. Dr. Kezner is a nice guy. It's old about 60 and served in Vietnam War or so he told us. My dad also got drafted too, and may be as old as he is, but didn't go to Vietnam. He was in Company C. Dr. Kezner was too short - he had to be at least 5.7 feet. He's like 5.3. It's odd because my dad's dad was also in company C which didn't go into the war itself. Company C was more a reserve. A platoon is 6 men. A Company is 600 - 800 men. My dad keeps his Dad's WWII uniform that had Corporal signature on it. Yes, this is only one rank up from Private, but remember neither one saw action so -. Anyway, I entered class at WITC for the 2nd day. Everyone was talking, of course, because they can. Talking is aloud. It IS an American right and it's human nature. They all know everybody anyways. I don't know anyone. Then Kezner joked about when we had a discussion with someone, that's 40 % of the class right there. The book is much smaller than last year so - therefore - it should be easier? Answer to this: Yes and No. The language hasn't changed at all in 25 years. So no. The book is much smaller therefore a little easier to comprehend and memorize. It always helps. So I'll wait and see what happens. Phil Kezner probably knows this class in his sleep. He knows all this information in the textbook that cost me 80 dollars today, and than some. At school today - Kezner brought up John Kerry. I don't believe that students there don't know who the president elect runner up is? That is the most ridiculous news of the day.

At school - I downloaded Knoppix 3.4. The program took 2 hours to download, and nearly 10 seconds to the finished download, the computer shuts off and restarts. I know what it was too. The Novell Network Agent restarted the computer before it could achieve 100 %. Why didn't the agent restart when the download started? The answers to this....I have no idea. So I'm leaving that terminal on over night. I even made desktop wallpaper saying please don't delete my download. Well, with any luck, my download will be there tomorrow.

I was thinking about my CISCO textbook today. My text book is long and it's a lot of reading. I mean come on! I looked at the online course - it looks a lot higher tech.

Time to study CISCO - bye! The CISCO online course is only on at certain parts of the day! It's not available at night. I found the curriculum off Emule today. I'm downloading it right now. Its 26 MB total compressed. It has all the content of the online Cisco course. Problem is I'm downloading the 3.0 version not the 3.1.1 version. I hope there isn't too much difference.

I'm studying the PowerPoint that still may be useful. I was thinking of zipping all the content I have, but that's illegal, and I probably do not have that kind of server space. Ocatch has 100 MB though. Ocatch is a free server. No one would want my outdated information. It's still good information. Just that CISCO has improved somehow...I can't figure how though. It's a mystery.

This is Ian signing off.

"Counter Strike: SOURCE" beta now avaiable (2004-08-24 14:07)

I am sorry about the last 2 blog entries. They were filled with grammar errors - so therefore - they weren't up to par with some of my other well-thought out entries. I am trying to quality control my site. Not just everything can be said here - it must have meaning in computer technology. There are days were I just write whatever on my mind. There is very little grouping. I found out that a lot of bloggers have shorter entries, and don't modify them more than once. Shall I write shorter entries? There is no such thing of a short version of the long entry, but there is a long version of a short entry - at least in my mind. Short entries are for short reading. I like to read several paragraphs of something. Okay?

Today's conversation is back on Half-Life 2 which has now been delayed until next year. Surely it's because Valve is doing tweaking / polishing / and more tweaking until perfection. Valve confirmed "Counter-Strike: Source", and "Half-life: Source" is included in the Half-life 2 box. As in buy one game and get 2 games free. Counter-Strike: Source is Counter-Strike 2.0 in discuss. I have never played Counter-Strike. I hear it's fun. IGN.com got a preview up of this game before I ever knew it existed. Actually, I knew Valve was going to port Half-life into the Source Engine - because they've would have hurt themselves otherwise. This is a free bonus courtesy of Valve. Counter-Strike: Source is a stand alone game meaning unlike Counter-Strike 1.5 and below, you don't need another game installed to play it. I downloaded both Counter-Strike 1.5 and Counter-Strike 1.6 a while back. I know it's popular, but haven't had time play it. I just remember I heard some bad things about version 1.6 so I downloaded 1.5 too.

To download the beta (CS: Source), you must download the application that'll download the game directly from Valve's servers onto your computer. This is done for security reasons. I got CS1.5 and CS 1.6 off Soft32.com, and that's not secure. Maybe there are loop-holes (in terms of downloading games)? The game is a 350 MB download - smaller than Counter-Strike 1.6. You'll need a password from Counter-Strike: Conduction Zero to unlock the download screen. Plus, I don't know why anyone would want to download the beta. It's filled with bug crashes, and it's going to come packaged with less glitches with Half-life 2 next year. It is rumored that's exactly why Half-life 2 is delayed presently. I've been reading most of the reader reviews. It's 50/50 whether or not it's better than the Counter-Strike mod. Some say Condition Zero for Xbox wasn't very good at all according to many Internet sources.

Today's been chaotic. I went to CISCO taught by Joyce. Told her that my online curriculum wouldn't show up at home. One of the student's commented that my Internet Security is too high. I have to set it on "low" for CISCO online to show up. I'm sure it has to put cookies on my hard drive. Cookies aren't bad - they're just little files that have user data on them. Then I went to student services to get help in note taking for CISCO. I didn't get any help. No one knows anything about Cisco. So I compromised and agreed for the teachers to look at my notes. My notes looked fine. Then I got home and started to read the first and second chapter in my Human Relations textbook. That took time out of my day.

On my slack off time I spared, I looked up if there were any new Half-Life 2 information. Which there was. I also found out what the new Counter-Strike is called (stated above). Next, I looked up Microsoft Xenon facts again. It tickles my hardware funny bone. Headlines: "Xenon: The PowerPC made by Microsoft." Earlier, I found out the official specs, but just to make sure I was right, I reread the Xenon (really pronounced Zenon) article.

Origin of Ian Goes back to 12th century Scotland (2004-08-27 14:08)

[First Topic #1]

I wonder why I haven't thought of this sooner - my origin of my name. According to one site, Ian came from Iain (pronounced E N not I-in). Iain is the old English version of Ian or sometimes Iann starting sometime in the 1800s in Scotland. Ian was spelled Iain in mid-evil Scotland. The meaning of Ian is "God's Gift."

Anyway, Celtic/Gaelic versions of present day Ian before the 19th century was spelled Eion, but sounded exactly like today's spelling of Ian. However, it's a little confusing because Ian did not start it's spelling at this time. Some Eions spelled Ian are found in the 14th century. It's confusing. So in the 14th century we have Eion, Iain, Ian, and Iann. The first two spellings died out over time and today two spellings remain in present day. In English the only proper way to spell "E" is with an IA, EE, EA.

Also interesting is John and Ian mean the same thing. In 19th century Eion was translated into English as John which is a more popular American name.

Here's how my name is spelled in Chinese:

Oh yeah, I tried writing an entry on CISCO about hexadecimal and binary, but it only got 2 hits in two hours so I realized that it was a bad entry, therefore, I deleted it. Simply put, binary and hexadecimal is the computer language down to the 1s and 0s. Standard of each character is 8 bits or 1 byte of data. 100 bytes make up one kilobyte.

[Next Topic #2]

I am sure that a lot of you know how to count in binary. I never had binary or hexadecimal math in high school therefore, I find it fascinating. Binary goes from left to right while reducing the number in half after each step. See how every number doubles after each step. I have to the 8 total steps backwards left to right starting dividing 128 into what number I need to 'decode' (seen below) until I get to step 8:

16 32
64
128

If my address was 192.100.189.0

For 192 I would take 192 minus 128 and that would equal 64. So 128 is less than 192 and that would be 1. Then I take 64 minus 64 and that would be 0 because it is excepted by 64. Since it equals 0, the other numbers will not apply.

Binary version of 192 is 11000000 (fixed)

For 100, the next group of digits in the IP address. I can not do 100 - 128 so the first process is 0. 100 can be divided into 64. [100 minus 64 equals 36] so the next digit is 1. 32 can be divided into 36 [36 minus 32 equals 4] We can not do division with 16 or 8. However, 4 works since [4 minus 4 equals 0] so the end result is also 1 in binary. We can do 2 (as seen above) because 2 minus 2 equals 0. As long as 2 can be subtracted into 2 the binary equivalent is 1. 1 we can not do so that binary step is 0. If 0 is subtracted by 0 to equal 0 - I could do this infinite times so that's why IP addresses only have 8 digits/bits of binary.

Binary version of "100" is 01100110

For 189 I would take 189 minus 128 equals 61 or X so my binary number will be 1. The next step, which is dividing X minus 64 to equal Y. This is not possible since 61 is smaller than 64 already so the next digit must be 0. 61 can be minus by 32 to equal 29 so the third binary digit is 1. 29 can be minus by 16 which will equal 13 so the forth binary digit is 1. 13 minus 8 is 5 since 8 is already smaller than 13 and would counted as 1 as the fifth binary digit. 5 can be minus from 4 so that would be the sixth binary digit of 1. Next I skip 2 because it's impossible for me to minus 2 from 1 so the seventh binary digit is 0. This would in fact get me into negative numbers. And 1 can minus 1 to equal 0 so the final digit is 1.

Binary version of 189 is 10111101

And the binary version of 0 is 00000000 once.

Binary version of 192.100.189.0.0 is (11000000) . (01100110) . (10111101). (00000000)

Now yet's say I wanted to decode 10111101 into decimal that is really easy. Just add these numbers: 128+32+16+8+4+1.

Now Hexadecimal is:

8 is first digit | 4 is second digit | 2 is third digit | 1 is fourth digit

1 = 0001 (1)

2 = 0010 (2)

3 = 0011 (2 + 1)

4 = 0100 (4)

5 = 0101 (4 + 1)

6 = 0110 (4 + 2)

7 = 0111 (4 + 2 + 1)

8 = 1000 (8)

9 = 1001 (8 + 1)

A (10) = 1010 (8 + 2)

B (11) = 1011 (8 + 2 + 1)

C (12) = 1100 (8 + 4)

D (13) = 1101 (8 + 4 + 1)

E (14) = 1110 (8 + 4 + 2)

F (15) = 1111 (8 + 4 + 2 + 1)

Now if 8 digits equal one byte. The Hex version is A5F1 That's (1010) (0101) (1111) (0001). I can now decode Decimal to Binary or Binary to Decimal or Hex to Decimal or Decimal to Hex.

Some get binary confused with ASCII. The standard ASCII is used by default in the Text editor. ASCII is binary. But what's confusing is I can do 1 through F in binary. What happened to G through Z and all the funky symbols like ? / ! @ $ % & * () - = + ' . | Okay you get my point. For these you need twice the digits which will do 256 characters. Don't ask me the grouping of 1s and 0s for those because I don't know. Actually, there are only 255 characters in the computer translation of English language. Think of HTML with all these 1s and 0s for one character that makes up source code. Actually, technicians don't refer binary as this. Binary is simply the computer language called ASCII. Yes. Your keyboard can convert decimal to hexadecimal so the CPU and video card can make use of it. I didn't know my keyboard did the encoding!

Now for color we know them as pixels okay. In monochrome bitmap anyways black represents 1 and white represents 0. Now if there is 1000/1000 image. There are 1,000,000 1s and 0s in that monochrome bitmap. Let's say you have a 4 bit color BITMAP.

Blue is 8

Green is 4

Yellow is 2

Red 1

0100 or 1010 is Green

0010 is Yellow

1000 is blue

0001 is red

0100 or Green is counted as 1 pixel. Now, 8-bit color is hexadecimal. I think this is so because there are 256 possible colors in 8-bit color. Think way back to APPLE][e color screens in the 1980s. 8 digits can do 256 characters on the computer screen. But ASCII only uses 255 characters. One reason is you don't want to minus 128 from 256 and get 128. You would run out of digits in hex. 16-bit color would be 256 to the 256th power to get the answer of 65,536 possible colors. Or add 256 [256] times. 32-bit color would be [256] to the 256th power, and then the next number again to the 256th power. his answer would be 4,294,967,296 colors. 16-bit, 24-bit, 32-bit color is something else. It's defiantly not binary or hexadecimal. T Since this is massive CPU color for GPUs only games have 32-bit color. The desktop resolution is usually 24-bit to ease CPU power. To display high resolution images all I need is 24-bit color.

Now for the confusing part. Compression like GIF and PNG is very complex. You must convert the binary BITMAP to compression compiler or "codec". CODEC stands for "Compress Decompress" compiler. Some people think it's "Code Decode" when it's not. Codecs can be closed source (freeware or shareware) or open source. You must than have an image compression decoding compiler or "codec" in your computer. A compiler takes the compressed data and translates it to color. For this, the compiler is made in hexadecimal because the source code is made up of 255 characters. Don't ask me how. In fact, I don't why any open source image formats thus every image codec is copyrighted! Then I ask myself if the image compiler is closed source than why the hell can Linux and Unix have it? The answer to this is simple. The Internet uses these as a standard. A web browser must compile these so they must be free. This is why the Microsoft Anti Trust was concerning Internet Explorer. While Internet Explorer is closed source, open source browsers must have the right to read the same content. So the US Government actually stepped in and said to the organizations such as the "Joint Photographic Experts Group" to let Mozilla and Konqueror programmers see their closed source code to plug the CODEC into Mozilla, and Konqueror so they can include it in their web browser. Problem is Mozilla and Konqueror were created before the Microsoft anti-trust. This ment legal Internet competition. The Supreme Court realized that it couldn't make MS smaller using the web browser monopoly gimmick. Better luck next time supreme judge! JPEG had to agree to this. The deal was that the image CODEC must have tags in the source code giving credit to JPEG or GIF organizations, and can not be modified or it would be illegal.

Generations 1985 - 2001: Part 3 (2004-08-29 14:09)

Hello and welcome to this special entry, "Generations 1989 - 2005: Handhelds". In this entry I really want to give the specs of Gameboy Color and Gameboy Advance. I never owned a Gameboy until 2001. I should take pictures, and put all my handhelds up on my Angelfire site! I have two Gameboys (Gameboy Advance and Gameboy Advance SP). According to Wikipedia, GBA is Nintendo's fifth generation of handheld. First was the Game and Watch (1985 - 1989), than came Gameboy (1989 - 1997), Gameboy Pocket (1997 - 1998) Gameboy Color (1999 - 2001), GBA (2001 - Present) and GBASP (2003 - Present). According to the Geniis Book of World Records - the most successful handheld in sales is the Gameboy Color, and most popular handheld game to date is Super Mario Bros. DX. Keeping this in mine, GBA can play all the original GB and GB Color game carts. One Nintendo propaganda gimmick is to keep their Pocket Monsters franchise on the GB and GBA so kids would buy Game Boys. It works out for Nintendo, adult gamers will buy Gameboys. Those who still find playing games fun.

| Gameboy Advance |

As far as handheld specs go, the Gameboy Advance can show 15-bit color (32768 colors). Features a 32-bit RISC processor (like PDAs use) and a separate 8-bit processor for Gameboy Color games. The GBA doesn't use both processors at the same time. Not that that's really important, but it does show that GameBoy Advance does not emulate GameBoy games rather read it with a real GB processor. One important thing about GameBoy is that the early games showed Dark on it. This is fixed by owning a 10 dollar mini-light that plugs into the GBA. I happen to own one. It works well. I use to play all my games in bed when I was 16. I can get at least 5 ½ hours of game play in with 2 fully charged AA alkaline batteries. I can get twice that with no light. I usually didn't play sound and that saved me 40 minutes to 1 hour of battery life. With no light and no sound, I can play GBA for over approximately 7 hours. I haven't tested my GBA SP's longevity yet. I was fond of the back-light in GBA SP. That's one of the reasons I bought it at Wal-Mart at a full 99. I never have to buy batteries for it. If the lithium battery ever wears out, I simply replace it with another lithium battery. I don't think I played more then 5 hours with it since I bought. The GBA, however, I played almost everyday during lunch break in high school. I've grown old and I look on Gameboy as an expensive kid's toy. People can buy several LCD screens for cars at Best Buy and Circuit City now-a-days, playing PS2 or Xbox in your car isn't an issue any longer.

| Gameboy / Gameboy Pocket / Gameboy Color |

The original Gameboy ran on the 8-bit Z80 processor. Z80 was created in 1976 as a very powerful prototype. It was designed by Federico Figgin at Zilog Inc. The frequency of the Z80 was 2.5 MHz. The Z80a was introduced in 1977 and was clocked up too 4 MHz. The Z80 can do approx. 272 instructions per second. The processor is still used today in many mobile devices, Gameboy being to most recognizable. Gameboy supported the most powerful handheld processor in mobile gaming devices from 1989 through 1990 until the Sega Game Gear came out in 1990 in the US. In Japan it was out in 1989. The Game Boy was created by Gunpei Yokoi who later also created the Wonderspan for Bandai. Yokoi died in a car accident in 1997 while going to Kyoto, Japan. He produced and created the popular Nintendo character "Samus Aran™" seen in Metroid and Super Smash Brothers. Another character he created who isn't as well known is Kid Icarus. I think that game use to be on the NES. Metriod is actually unlockable after Metroid Prime is beaten or if you beaten Metriod Fusion on Gameboy Advance and hook the link cable up to the Gamecube to unlock Metroid. I cheat by loading my Action Replay code which allows you to bypass both requirements stated above, and play Metriod on-the-spot!

That question about Game Boy Advance worth the money I paid for it? It's a no-brainer for me. Yep, it's worth every penny. I don't see any money wasted. The first GBA was a Birthday Present. In December 2003, I choice whether or not to buy a GBASP or a Gamecube. I think I bought it because it looked cool. You already know what I've chosen. I already made up the minor set back with chores I did around the house in January.

| SEGA GAME GEAR (1990 – 1997 USA) |

Sega's first handheld was the Game Gear. It was in color! I see one in Toyriffic every time I go in the store and actually handled one for the first time 3 weeks ago. I really don't know much about it. Toyriffic didn't have a very good selection- in fact – the store had more used Game Gears than Game Gear games! We already know it was a failure. I don't know why gaming sites keep saying that. I think everyone who's into handheld videogames knows this. I call this anti-SEGA propaganda. Okay, yes, you're absolutely right about Game Gear being a failure! Well I believe you said that [to site] because you took information off another site, and said "Sega Sucks" because you know you've would agree with 8 out of ten people, and the fact it makes you look good. Obviously, if the Game Gear did well enough, SEGA would have made a Game Gear 2. So I mean come on here. I am referring to Wikipedia's description of Game Gear.

Majesco came in and manufactured the Game Gear Core System sometimes called the Game Gear Pocket due to its smaller design. Majesco also manufactured the Sega Genesis v3 in 1998. The difference is there is no difference! The buttons are configured the same, and the hardware quality is comparable to previous Genesis, and the price is a lot cheaper. It is rumored in 8 years, Majesco will publish one of the current generation consoles, and may cost as little as 40 dollars in 2010. On Majesco.com, I found out a neat accessory for Game Boy Advance that lets you send text messages up to 3 miles away using a wireless band called the Majesco Wireless Messenger. It uses very low power of the GBA, and can actually make GBA run as much as 3 times as long as it normally would when playing a game. It's a good idea, but I rather talk through conventual's 3 mile radius walkie-talkies. I do own a pair of walkie talkies that broadcast up to 2 miles. I'm cheap, I won't even buy a weather band radio, and that's pretty bad because those start at 50 dollars.

| Bandai Wonderswan 1996 – 2001 |

There are three versions of Wonderswan. The clunky black and white one. The Wonderswan Color (it's in color what can I say?), and the Wonderswan Crystal (A Wonderswan that looks more high tech than it really is) The Wonderswan Color runs on one AA battery which is suppose to last 20 hours. The CPU is a 16-bit RISC like the Game Gear is. The most noticeable game on it is probably either Metal Slug or Final Fantasy 1 & 2. The game is identical to the Gameboy Advance versions. Remember, Wonderswan shared 2 % of the market in 2000 in the USA. More importantly, Wonderswan owners usually also owned a Gameboy Color. A lot of kids knew that Gameboy had more games out so I'm sure they knew that Wonderswan was undergoing a slow death as soon as it first came to Toys R Us.

Technical Specs:

CPU: 16-bit (3.072MHz)

RAM: 512K

Colors: 4096 (241 on screen)

Resolution: 224x144 pixels

Sound: 4-channel mono (stereo with headphones adaptor)

Screen: 2.1" LCD, reflective TFT

| Nintendo Dual Screen |

Announced in 2003, rumors were defiantly floating around months after Gameboy Advance SP was released. Nintendo Dual Screen can be considered a 64-bit Gameboy except it probably won't carry the Gameboy name. It won't have the name Nintendo Gameboy Dual Screen. The system will feature a touch-screen based color LCD screens that can do high resolution polygon displays. Most popular games on it are Super Mario 64x4, New Super Mario Bros, and Metroid Prime (FPS for a handheld). Rumors going around message boards is Super Mario 64x4 is the first of many N64 ports onto the handheld. Legend of Zelda - Ocarina of Time, Goldeneye, and Star Fox 64 may also find a 2nd home on Nintendo DS. The handheld has a d-pad (directional pad), 4 buttons (A, B, X, Y), and two triggers. It will use a lot less battery life than the Playstation Pocket will, and be priced 100 dollars less. Who wants a Playstation Pocket that sucks up tons of battery life, anyways?

Tech Specs:

- Dual Processors: ARM 9 clocked at 67 MHz and an ARM 7 clocked at 33 MHz. It will feature 4-MB of video RAM and can do about 120,000 polygons onscreen.
- Dual Screens both 256 x 192 resolution.

| Sony's Playstation Pocket |

Second 128-bit handheld on the market (if you include the Tapwave Zodiac 2). It's games will be based on mini-cd or mini-dvd, and the unit will market at 300 dollars US. It will have a 24-bit liquid crystal LCD screen and will play FMV. The Dual-CPU's is going to be 333 MHz, and the video card will be at least 16-MB. Rumored to not have very good battery life due to the graphics processing and the mini-dvd player, about half the time you get with an ordinary CD-player. The PSP is not on my list of things to buy next year.

Earlier today was much like yesterday - surfing the Internet, looking at game reviews especially the SNES ones. I find it fun reading. So around 4pm yesterday I walk into the Game Store (Toyriific, formerly known as Toys 4 Trade). Weird how the guy at the counter loves all the games I mention. He's the same guy that cuts me deals off videogames. Ironically, River Falls store does not. What store you think most budget conscience gamers go to buy new games? Almost everything I told him he said he loves. For example, I ask for Super Mario World 2 - Yoshi's Island, and he says it's his favorite game on Super Nintendo. I mean what a quiescence. So I'm thinking of owning this game, since I hear it's got good game play and Mario is in it. I hear the person who created Mario is extremely talented programmer / artist. His name is Shigeru Miyamoto. I end up buying Donkey Kong 64, Star Fox, and Yoshi's Island at the Hudson game store. I've been reading reviews on Star Fox, and it was only 10 dollars over there. I had 10 bucks in pocket change - literally. I thought about buying 1080 Snowboarding along with 1080 Avalanche, but I only had enough money for one or the other. And I use to own Donkey Kong 64 for a while. I sold it to the Hudson game store a year back, and I wanted it back. Donkey Kong 64 is RAREWARE's 3rd to last platform game for N64. I know have seven SNES games. Wow, I remember late last year when I only had two. I tested out Star Fox, Super Mario World 2, and Secret of Mana. As expected - all the games work fine. I took a pure alcohol solution and a couple of Cube picks, and cleaned the cartridges out by pressing against the insert feed. A lot of black stuff came off of the Star Fox cartridge. It's almost like owning a brand new game. I really recommend everyone to clean their game out. Your cartridges last longer and it doesn't have to cost a lot of money. Remember clean them with a pure alcohol solution and not peroxide.

New Games I will add to my VG list:

http://www.ian1984.m...gview &blog_id=152484

- Star Ocean 3 (when I get it this week)
- Super Mario World 2
- Star Fox
- Donkey Kong 64

I went to a Bittorrent protocol site called <http://suprnova.org>. Yes, it's supposed to be spelled without a 'e'. It has ISO rips of several Dreamcast, Gamecube, Playstation 2, Playstation, and Saturn games. I wish I could download some of them like the Panzer Dragoon Saga, but I don't have the bandwidth. I also found Grandia on it! It's times like these I wish I had a modded Playstation 2. Darn! All my console games are legit copies. It's that not all my computer games are original copies. Suprnova also has plenty of movies on it too. I imagine that I can download 150 MB of MP3 easily on Monday. My first Bittorrent download is the Final Fantasy 1 & 2 GBA rom. I mentioned above this is one of Wonderswan's most famous games. I downloaded Bittorrent, ABC v2.6.9 [Another Bittorrent Client], and Azureus 2.1.0.4 over the school's sever. All those programs are under 5 MB. I honestly do not think I'll be able to download them. I found out by looking at my favorite open-source webpage, <http://sourceforge.org>. It gives me some ideas about what to download at school. Strangely, no students are at school after 4:30 PM on weekdays. I think I know why. In rural areas ppl need high speed Internet by satellite, even if it's costs more than DSL, and has about the same bandwidth of it. That's what I think. Other people who don't care about satellite - I completely disagree. We need cheaper Internet out where I live.

Found information on Xbox and PS2 disc backuping (2004-09-03 14:11)

Date: 9/2/04 at 8:16PM

I found some information on disc swapping as I was surfing the Internet for details on how to backup xbox games with Alcohol 120 %. If this information is true and you can play game backups from disc. I think PS2 modding is more popular because there is no need to download the game through Ethernet connection. I learned off <http://afterdawn.com> that the Xbox version of 007: Agent of Fire and Mech Assault can actually be booted then quickly ejected so that a real backup game you made will work on Xbox. This doesn't evolve modding the Xbox or buying a special boot disc that will first boot to bypass encryption than putting a backedup videogame in there. This is nothing new too me. I swap Action Replay discs with real games on both my PS2 and Gamecube. It's nothing different than that from what I heard. I found ISOs off <http://suprnova.org>

For Playstation 2, there is MagicSwap 3.0. This works as a swap disc mechanism. I want one, but I can only own one from online stores. However, I really want a DMS3 modchip. DMS3 is the most advanced PS2 modchip in existence. More advanced means it can read more kinds of backups. I could just make my own images and remember it's not illegal if you OWN THE ORIGINAL GAME.

I got this information off TOTSE.com

-> Part A: Extract ISO image to hard-drive

1. Open CDRWin
2. Click the Extract Disc/Tracks/Sectors (Middle button on the top row) A new window will now appear. Here are the settings, shown in the picture here.
3. Extract Mode: Disc Image/Cuesheet
4. CD Reader: Select your reader
5. Image Filename: Select a directory and filename Reading Options
6. RAW, CD+G, CD-TEXT, MCN / ISRC all unchecked
7. Error Recovery: Ignore
8. Jitter Control: Disable
9. Subcode Analysis: Auto
10. Data Speed: Select your speed
11. Audio Speed: Select your speed
12. Read retry count: Anything from 2-10
13. Subcode Threshold: 300
14. Click Save Settings if you wish
15. Click Start!

-> CDRWin will now save the image to your hard-drive.

Part B: Patching Image

1. Open AddZer0 FrontEnd.
2. Browse for your input file. You just made it with CDRWin.
3. Do the same for the output file.
4. Select the type of patch to apply to your image.

Auto Mode converts the current Input Image to a 2048 ISO. The image is then patched, placing system.cnf at LBA 12231. This requires no other help from you.

Normal Mode functions just as the original version of AddZer0 did. If you select this mode, type the LBA of the closest file to LBA 12231 into the text box. (You need ISO Buster) This will move this file to 12232 and place the system.cnf at 12231.

Patcher Mode functions just like the 2SP Patcher did. It blindly takes the system.cnf file and places it at 12231. This will possibly corrupt data of the image which cause problems while playing the game. Therefore this mode is not recommended.

5. When you are happy with the settings, click Convert.
6. Wait for the process to finish (might take a while)

-> Part C: Burning image

1. Open CDRWin again.
2. Click the File Backup and Tools button.
3. Change Backup/Tool Operation to Record an ISO9660 image file.
4. Where it says Image Filename: Browse for the image you have just patched.
5. CD Recorder: Select your CD-Writer
6. Disc Type: CDROM-XA
7. Track Mode: MODE 2
8. Select your write speed.
9. Click Start.
10. Wait for CDRWin to write the image to a CD-R.

You should have successfully made a backup of your PS2 game.

(2) If you don't have a mod chip.

I suggest you use CloneCD or CDRWin to do a straight CD copy. This gives you an un-patched backup.

If you have CloneCD or CDRWin (UTFSE) here are the settings:

-> CloneCD

1. Open CloneCD.
2. Click the Copy CD Picture (3rd Picture along)
3. Read Tab
 - o Select your CD Reader.
 - o Select your read speed. I suggest you keep it low. Sorry if you have little patience.
 - o Read SubChannel Data from Data Tracks: Checked
 - o Read SubChannel Data from Audio Tracks: Checked
 - o The other boxes can be left unchecked.

4. Image File Tab

- o Browse for the directory that you want the image file to be extracted to.
- o Check the Delete After Successful Write box if you want.

5. Write Tab

- o Select your CD Writer.
- o Select your write speed. I strongly suggest you burn at a maximum of 4x.
- o Everything should be all right as it is.

6. Ignore the Global tab. It is not important.

7. Now click the Start Disc Copy button at the bottom.

8. CloneCD will then read the disc and when finished write to a blank disc.

9. Finished.

-> CDRWin

1. Open CDRWin.

2. Click the Backup Disc button (Second along)

3. Backup Mode: Copy To Image And Record

4. Image disk: Select your hard drive (Default)

5. CD Reader & CD Recorder: Set CD reader & CD recorder to the same (Always read with burner)

6. Reading Options

- o Read: Raw Sectors
- o Error Recovery: Ignore
- o Jitter Control: Disable
- o Subcode Analysis: Auto
- o Data Speed: Select Your Speed (Keep it low)
- o Audio Speed: Select Your Speed (Keep it low)
- o Read Retry Count: Select How Many Times You Want CDRWin To Retry Reading Damaged Data Before It Fails

7. Recording Options

- o Uncheck All Boxes On The Top Line
- o Number Of Discs To Backup: Select Number Of Discs
- o Number Of Copies: Select Number Of Copies You Want
- o Speed: Select Your Burning Speed (Keep it low)
- o Disc Transporter Mode: Disable If you want, select Save Settings at the side

8. Hit Start.

Choice B is much easier than using CDclone to make an ISO and CDRWIN to burn an ISO. I would use Alcohol 120 % to backup Playstation or Playstation 2 games using the Playstation or Playstation 2 option in the encryption security override mechanism. The program will patch the ISO image automatically for me. Haven't tried since I don't have a modded PS2, but I have yet to try it on EPSXE. Supposedly I hear off the EPSXE.com forums, I can play PSX backups on the PC.

To backup Xbox games, first you must have a modded xbox. Then you must download EvolutionX 1.8 off Kazaa, Emule, Limewire. Evolution X allows the gamer to download the game through Xbox's Ethernet JACK onto MS Windows through a normal FTP client or Internet Explorer (the same is done to Gamecube games). The Xbox Ethernet jack is 10 Base T so it would have a speed of 10Mbits per second maximum. Then I found this really neat Unity called Craxtion 4.0 [<http://craxtion.com>]. This unity allows someone to backup 2 Xbox ISOs or more to combine them to form a new Xbox ISO with a dual boot screen. This is useful since I don't have to waste DVDs. Once Xeon and XCBX plays commercial games off DVD-ROM on the PC, then I won't need a modded Xbox at all.. The PC will always be able to emulate a console - eventually. Currently, no one has a powerful enough PC to emulate the XBOX so modding Xbox to play backups is the only way to go. You can't say I have done anything illegal. I don't have any illegal copies of console games nor do I have any modded consoles.

Good Luck on backing up games!!!!

Can videogame consoles play PC games? Yes. (2004-09-03 14:12)

Hello, look at my videogame collection! I had some pictures on my personal webpage [<http://www.angelfire.com/blog2/renegadeviking/>] I compressed them the maximum compression without losing much quality. This means you can see the titles on the cases/ cartridges.

Here are all the links. Please click in order. Then comment how big of a videogame collection I have. Gamers - maybe one day your collection can look like mine. Please cut and paste url | I can not auto link these with modblog and have them show up, sorry.

Well today I got back from DVR, and it went well. I meet this Jason, and he's going to get me a job in the computer biz. He liked what he saw. I told him that I worked at the UofW, and his eye brows raised. He said, "Wow, I am really impressed with you Ian." And I said nothing for I would only be hurting myself! Works out well. The DVR job center is in New Richmond. First of all I thought this guy would go "the give up something and you shall receive something in return" route. He was a nice guy. I knew he was testing me on my character and attitude towards him. All I had to do is sign a few papers releasing info to my parents and school and I was one of the first ppl subscribed and got registered. With some luck - I'll have a job and be able to keep it.

Now for the main topic. I found out the 4th competitor in the console market. Known to many as Nintendo, Microsoft and Sony as the only three. I just learned about this today. It's made by VIA Technologies called the APEXTREME. Yes, this is the name. They named it after the worlds most popular DVD manufacture which so happens to be a silicon chip manufacture, APEX. Okay, I know Nintendo of Japan named it's consoles: Nintendo, Super Nintendo, Nintendo 64 - so it's nothing new. One thing is this company does not expect too sell millions of consoles - only thousands. As in it's probably a worthless piece of sh*t that guarantees to sell less than Dreamcast...except I like Dreamcast. Since it already runs on Windows, I'm sure they want to benefit on all the Windows applications that can run on it. It supposedly reads all the EXE files on CD so therefore, it may be able to install emulators like EPSXE and SNES9x. It automatically turns itself into a Playstation or Super Nintendo with a simple program. I don't know if Nintendo will get in a lawsuit against VIA being able to play special programs allowing ROMS or discs to be played on it or if the whole thing is out of their control. For some odd reason I'd pick the last one. The thing has 4 USB ports (keyboard, mouse, PC gamepad, etc. I could use my Nyko Airflow PC with it and it'll play PSone games. It'll automatically install any EXE files for you on the hard drive. So if you play them at full screen then it'll look exactly like a console. It doesn't look like the Apex extreme has the best hardware yet for home theater – and it doesn't have to have the power of a fast computer to look good on TV. Xbox looks good on TV and its processor is only 733 MHz. VIA wasn't afraid to release the official specs of the machine. With a simple TV tuner card you can hook up the SVGA output up to your TV. The official Apex extreme specs are:

- CPU: AMD Athlon XP 2000 clocked at 1.4 GHz
- Dual Channel 256 MB DDR SDRAM
- Graphics: Nvidia Geforce 4 MX V8 8-pixel pipeline engine (Direct X 9.0a graphics accelerator) Probably a 64-bit GPU
- Hard drive (40 gigabyte)
- Audio VIA ENVY Audio (Dolby Digital 5.1 Surround Sound.)
- DVD playback (more than likely the game media also) manufactured by VIA
- CN400
- Runs on Microsoft Windows R XP
- 10/100 Ethernet
- Four controller ports
- MP3 support in games
- Price $299 - $399 at launch
- Xbox is still going to have better games and a better price than VIA.
- Also plays PC games
- And it can record movies like TIVO
- Release Date Late 2004 (A console this year!!!)

The part that they don't want you to know is – they say it plays like a pc – this is because it is a PC. Make no mistake. All you're getting out of this console is a PC capable of high resolution and acts like TIVO – the digital recording console for tvs. I don't see APEX being the next Sega, but that's because Sega started out with Masters System 19 years ago and it didn't sell well.

Alienware DHS

Now, for the extreme high end. Alienware Corporation - the company known for building extremely powerful gaming PCs for customers. If it's on the bleeding edge of technology...Alienware probably has it incorporated in their PCs already. That's their motto. I, myself, almost got an Alienware PC as a Christmas present. Now, Alienware is developing a new PC console at around 2000 dollars. Again, 3rd party PC corporations try to amaze you on your medium to low definition TV. Alienware, I heard you make great PCs, why a console that plays PC games? There is no point too it. Sure, it'll play PC games in better resolution than Xbox – but console games are meant to be played with a controller. Ya, good I've straightened that truth out. You'll never catch me buying a console PC unless it can also play Playstation 2 or Xbox games. This is why you should continue reading - because it will be true for Microsoft's new Xbox 2 / PC hybrid.

The weird thing is Sega of America's former president, Peter Moore, is the CEO of Microsoft's interactive software division (controls Xbox software and PC game marketing). Moore did it for money as any greedy money grubbing person would. Microsoft is making a 'PC console' of their own that will play PC or Xbox 2 games called the XNA. It'll work by automatically installing PC games to its hard drive and also boot Xbox 2 software off DVD. This is the only PC console I agree with. I hear the console codenamed Xenon (Xbox 2) is 100 % PowerPC. How can Microsoft develop a PowerPC to play PC games? That's the million dollar question and it sounds like it'll be answered next year. They would have to port Windows XP for PowerPC!! Is this illegal? They would have to get license from Apple Corporation. Technically Xbox 2 will also run Windows XP at its core. The OS is made by Microsoft and the console is made by Microsoft. Microsoft sounds like they have best of both worlds. I would mean that Microsoft has its own brand PC! Microsoft confirmed the price point of the XNA to be about 599 dollars. If you just want to play Xbox 2 games than it'll bring it down to the industry standard of 200 dollars. Best of all it'll come with a SVGA monitor output! The Xbox 2 won't be called Xbox 2 because Microsoft Corp confirmed that they do not want to be inferior to Playstation 3.

Here are some names I thought up for MS new console code named "Xenon."

1. Excaliber
2. X-cube
3. Mach 1000

First real Playstation 3 Specs unrevealed (2004-09-05 14:12)

I joined IGN.com today and I added most of my videogames to the collection list and my collection is already worth 5,274 dollars. Just thought you want to look at it. Wisconsinite's Videogame Collection

I am really excited that Playstation 3 specs are now available. Sony is required to show a blueprint and official specs of the console. It somehow got onto the Internet. There is always a chance that these specs are not true and someone would just make them up entirely. The person who wrote this realized that the Playstation 3 was more powerful than Nintendo and Xbox. It is true the console specs are the complete opposite as they once were. The PS3 will be a little more than 4 GHz compared to the 300 MHz CPU the emotion engine had. The resolution sounds like it's going to be 1200x1024, but more powerful than my home PC which can run games at 1600x1200. I agree with 1600x1200 has some unneeded polygons and on smaller monitors like 17" 1200x1024 looks better. A lot of times the text is too small to read at 1600x1200 on a 17" monitor. Let's look at this at a realistic stand point. Playstation 3 looks like it's only going to be 500 MHz faster than Microsoft's new console according to the week old specs. The Xenon graphics will be very close to Playstation 3. The Playstation 3 will play FMV like Playstation 2 does, but with better compression. The quality will be better than PS2 partly MPEG4 can compress better at high quality per MB than the standard MPEG2 codec used for most PS2 video. Supposedly, Sony wants a BD-ROM in PS3 so when the new digital movie format comes out - PS3 owners will be a step ahead of the crowd! I wish all BD-ROM players also incorporated MPEG4 for the video.

Unofficial PS3

In 2006, when the "Xenon" is released, it'll take 1st place as Dreamcast did. When the PS3 is finally released...it'll double Xenon launch sales as PS2 did Dreamcast. Remember Dreamcast was TIME-Warner's Product-of-the-Year of 1998, and PS2 was Product-of-the-Year in 2000.

Here's the official specs off PS3 Insider :

- 8 Identical Attached Processing Unit (APU): ??? bits, Single Instruction, Multiple Data (SIMD)
- Clock Frequency: 4GHz IBM's "supercomputer on a chip" microprocessor.
- Integer Unit: 4 X Integer Units: 32 billion operations per second (32 GFLOPS).
- 4 X Floating Point Units: 32 billion floating point operations per second (32 GFLOPS)
- Multimedia extended instructions: unknown
- Register Capacity: 128 times 128 bits
- TLB: unknown
- Instruction Cache: unknown
- Data Cache: unknown
- Scratch Pad RAM: unknown
- Local Memory / Storage or (LS) per APU: 128 kilobytes SRAM
- Main Memory: Main Memory: 64-bit XDR-RAM at 6.4GHz.
- Memory Bandwidth: (dual-channel = 102.4 GB/s)
- DMA: 1 channel per APU
- Direct Memory to APU Access: 1,024 bits wide per channel. (8 Channels)
- LS to Register: 128bits
- Registers to Floating Point or Integer Units: 384 bits per channel
- Floating Point or Integer Units to Register: 128 bits per channel

More PS2 specs I heard off some other forums. It includes Microsoft's saying that "If Playstation 3 goes 256MB of RAM, we'll go 512MB. If Sony doesn't include a hard drive, neither will we" I heard some time ago.

- video memory - ATI 512-bit graphics processing unit at approximately 700 MHz
- RAM - 256-bit RDRAM at 500 MHz
- Sound - Pro Logic II supported 64 channel sound-chip manufactured by Sony
- Hard drive included in PS3 unit
- 10/100 Ethernet

Playstation 3 will have a hard drive. My guess is it'll be 15 GB to 20 GB, twice as big as the one inside Xbox. The reason why I think so is hard drives, 15 GB hard drives are only 20 dollars at Best Buy. Every console should have a hard drive attached too it.. A PS3 hard drive will do exactly what X-Box has done in this generation. More then likely it'll have a dual shock 3 - just an upgrade from dual shock 2. Playstation 3 can do 32 Gigaflops and PS2 only does 6.2 Gigaflops maximum. Surely, 32 Gigaflops is powerful enough to emulate Playstation 2. It'll cut down the costs of putting PS2 and PS hardware into the console. A new feature is it'll have a SVGA port in back so I can play on my PC monitor. It'll also have MPEG 4 for a video codec. PS3 should have the new blu-ray technology which can store 25GB of data on one BD disc. The Dual-layered BD-ROM can hold 50 GB on a single disc. Some people think it's going to be BVD-ROM because BD-ROM is missing 'video' in it. With Square-Enix, EA Sports, Take Two / Rockstar Games, Namco, Capcom on board developing games like Grand Thief Auto 5, Final Fantasy XIII, XIV, XV, Star Ocean 4, Suidoken V, Madden Football 2007, Xenosaga Episode 3, Winning Eleven Soccer 9, Gran Turismo 5, and Metal Gear Solid 4 on it - PS3 should do fine. But I think this is obvious since ever since Playstation did so well in 1997 and 1998 with Final Fantasy 7 and Metal Gear Solid - no console manufacture could faze them in PS2 sales. All my friends have Playstation 2. Only my cousin, David, I know has an X-Box and a PS2.

First PS3 Tech Demo | Internet leak

The Last Ninja (seen above) is the PS3s first tech demo. I can see a slight difference between this game and Ninja Gaiden. Anyway, that's real good. It is made by Studio 3 Studio 3's official Webpage As you can see - it's a cross between Ninja Gaiden and Onimusha.

Here is a site with a load of PS2 information gathered by the National Center for Supercomputing Applications. NCSA's PS2 Chemistry Project

Since when was PS2 considered a super-computer? The University of Iowa states that the PS2 outperforms 800 MHz Pentium 3s with a Linux terminal benchmarking program doing 'liner conventual algebra'. Studies came off of a modified v2.1.1 kernal running Red Hat Linux 7.3 on a tailor-made hard disk for PS2. The whole thing is very geekish. The point of this is the new consoles will be benchmark heaven for the NCSA, and many Universities which study 'toy' computers or commodity-off-the-toy-shelf products(AKA: COTTS). In short, whatever runs on PS2 can certainly run on PS3! University of Illinois's Toy Computer Research Project

Today, I was just on my computer the whole day. The bank isn't open on Sundays so I couldn't get Star Ocean 3, another game by Square-Enix. I know it's at Game Stop, but Wal-Mart I'm not sure about. It's suppose to be really good from what I read off PS2 reviews at IGN.com I also played Winning Eleven Soccer 7. My skills at that game dropped since I last played. So I suck at it. Tomorrow is Labor Day. I think I'll be studying CISCO at least for 5 hours tomorrow off CISCO Academy.

This is Ian Signing off.

God day readers! I get lonely with no one around to talk to and play games with, this site is a way to express my feeling toward games and choices of college. Thanks DJ Adrenaline for signing my guestbook. I like your music off Internet DJ. Come back. I finished college with a good end. Now I have the whole weekend to have fun. I finished Final Fantasy X about too days ago. I guess I really haven't thought about it, but Final Fantasy X is just better then other RPGs like .Hack. It's just one of those games that is just great. It's old now. I remember when the Internet went crazy over the game. It' true. There are a lot of Final Fantasy sites on the web. Just try typing in Final Fantasy into Google.com. You'll get 1000s of results. In my opinion, generally speaking Final Fantasy sites look better then the average site on the web. Most of them have a fan base that no other game has. You have 10 big search engines that support Final Fantasy games. Fan art is incredible, there are some really talented artists who draw anime after Final Fantasy. I know there are other great PS2 games like Devil May Cry, Grand Thief Auto 3, Twisted Metal Black, Gran Turismo 3 A Spec Metal Gear Solid 2. But I'm not getting into why they are good. I mean there are some truth about what people say in the message boards.

Oh, I'm getting into looking at message boards before I write reviews for videogames.

My opinion about message boards. They call it the Interactive part of the Internet Language. I bet you all have seen short abbreviations of works like LOL! (laugh out loud) :O) (don't take me seriously) cya (see you) It seems that the one useful up to date interactive boards of the past for people with problems on their command line (Windows Prompt / Linux Terminal) turned almost entirely to a gamers prospective. I think that people spend to much time on it. There are groups of people who team up and build a web page complete with message boards and member logins on their page. I can find the tools necessary to hold my own, but I can't contribute that much information, contributing 5 hours a day on my web page. Internet gunus respect gaming boards as they call it. The number of gaming boards on the web is simply huge! Most of it is "I am hold up in this game" or "I like this game the best" or "This game is going to be better then so or so." I stop trying, I mean when I try to talk on these gaming sites like all the Nintendo Gamecube sites you see, I get absolutely no email response.

I am thinking of making this webpage similar. But I'm not going to change this web page, I'm going to hold the same information on a different domain so that it'll load faster (this won't be any concern to you high speed internet surfers.) I have put my college web page at this link. <

> Look at the faster loading format. On this web page I'm thinking of having different, more dynamic menu frames. This page is made up of a bunch of independent tables which I can easily replace and edit.

I went out and got another PS2 game. The name is called Soul Caliber 2. I paid full price for it. Soul Caliber 2 is the sequel to the popular Dreamcast game Soul Caliber. I read that many people gave up their Dreamcasts and traded it in for a PS2. But some of them said that Soul Caliber was hard to part with. I haven't played my Dreamcast, or Soul Caliber for that matter, for 4 months. Particularly it's under my TV collecting dust. I could never part with my Dreamcast. It still has sentimental value. Plus I knew I wouldn't get half what I paid for all the games I collect. My parents know how active I was with the Dreamcast. I think they understand why I like them too. It's funny how parents can except those things! Well my parents were in their late 30s when Pac-man, Pong and Tron were cutting edge technology. I play those games sometimes through the emulator "MIME." You might guess that they were never into computers and games when they grew up.

I have yet to try out the PS2 game Thunder Strike - Operation Phoenix. It's kind of like Nuclear Strike and Chopper Attack for the Nintendo 64. It's much more like Chopper Attack then anything I've played. Thunder Strike is also better then Chopper Attack. I remember the old Genesis helicopter game, Jungle Strike. It's a classic. I played it on my cousin's Genesis when I was 11. Thunder Strike is a helicopter simulation for the PS2. It didn't get award winning graphics or gameplay. But I'll try it anyways. I like Apache helicopters. I heard of games like Jane's Attack Squadron, but the only real plane simulations I played was Air Force Delta for Dreamcast and Falcon 4.0 for PC. I wasn't great at those games. In Falcon 4.0, the pilot had to read a 300 page book on how to fly, fire and land a jet. The controls in that game were a little too realistic. I didn't have time to learn such a game. It was very buggy too, kept crashing on my PC. The graphics were okay though, the game could run at the highest resolution in high definition mode.

There is another game that I was interested in is Devil May Cry. IGN.com gave this game a 9.6/10. They said that the game is great, Capcom did a great job organizing the music in the game (punk rock/ heavy metal remixes) The gameplay was equally good. I could have bought this game a day ago for under 20 dollars at a store. But I picked the Ratchet and Clank platform game for 10 dollars more. Ratchet and Clank seems easy compared to many other platform games. The only other platform game I played this year is Super Mario Sunshine for the Nintendo Gamecube.

I'll see USA vs. Russia in 2005 if at XCEL Energy (2004-09-08 14:24)

Yesterday was the USA vs. Russia Hockey game at the XCEL Energy Center (first time the Olympics were played there). I want to see the Russians play the USA in 2005 if it's at the XCEL center. XCEL Energy Center is in St. Paul, Minnesota, 40 miles away from where we live. The XCEL center is huge with a lot of lights. It opened before the first session of the Minnesota Wild. Dad and I aren't hockey fans, but the US was playing RUSSIA, and I wanted to see the Russians play. RUSSIA is a big hockey country. 10 years ago the North Stars left Minnesota for Dallas. Many hockey fans were local to the North Stars now follow Dallas until recent years when Minnesota got a new expansion team. It's interesting the Olympics pick the XCEL Energy Center as a place to match world leagues with American All Star Team. It's exactly that, USA All-Star Team against world major league hockey. USA plays teams from foreign countries on the 10th too at the XCEL Energy Center. Not too say that other countries hockey arenas aren't impressive. The Globe Arena in Stockholm, Sweden looks very big and state-of-the-art from what I saw on the Internet today. I did a little research. It is the largest sphere-shaped dome in the world. I personally prefer the XCEL Energy dome. Unlike the Minnesota Vikings, which are my favorite team of any sport, the city of St. Paul owns and built the dome for 130 million dollars. It was built by the St. Paul Arena Company. They knocked down the old Mets Hockey Arena and replaced it with the Mall of America. The Mets Hockey Arena was where the old Minnesota North Stars hockey team used to play in. In recent years the St. Paul Civic Center has been destroyed to build the XCEL center. XCEL was funded by the city of St. Paul, and state of Minnesota to deliver a very nice hockey arena for home-sick hockey fans.

Well it's about 1 ½ months away from my birthday (November 01). I don't know what I'm getting yet, of course. I'm asking for another computer for Christmas. That leaves my birthday free for anything. Maybe I'll get allowance.

1. Soyo CK8 Dragon Plus nForce3 Skt 64 MB w/ Athlon 64 3000 310 dollar /w tax
2. Speeze / Socket 754 / AMD Athlon 64 / Ball Bearing / CPU Cooling Fan
3. Norcent DWD840 / 8x4x12x DVD+RW / 4x4x12x DVD-RW / 40x24x40x CD-RW / Sonic Software / DVD Burner (50 dollars)
4. 200 GB to 250 GB 7200 Serial ATA hard drive (200 dollars) 512MB is about half this
5. 1 GB of SDRAM (roughly 300 dollars with tax) Takes PC2000x series DDR or too ease up the cost pick 6.
6. Ultra 1024MB PC3200 DDR 400MHz Memory 130 dollars
7. Mercury TIGA Black/Silver ATX Mid Tower Case with Front USB Ports and 400 Watts power supply. (50 dollars)
8. Nvidia Geforce FX 5700 256-bit
9. 100 dollars to put everything together at "Computer Gurus"

If I get this than my processor might be an Athlon 64 3000! I think my dream machine is more powerful than my Dell Dimension XPS although it has about 1 GB less of RAM and a less powerful video card. Athlon 64s run hotter and aren't ideal for servers, but for gaming - I think high spec games will look better on the Athlon 64 vs. my XPS. Building a PC is cheaper than buying a name-brand one and I get my choice of tower style. I like the transparent one with lights inside. Plus, I can upgrade from 1024 MB SDRAM to 2048 MB SDRAM again myself. I really want another ATI Radeon 9800XT, but I need to cut 600 dollars so my parents can afford a satellite receiver for high-speed Internet. I'm guessing my speed will be 512 kbits per second on a satellite.

I bought Square-Enix's latest RPG, Star Ocean: Till the End of Time, like I said I would. It was the last copy at Target. Wal-Mart says they have it at their website - although I haven't seen the tag labeled Star Ocean on the shelf. IGN.com says this game has the best game play of any RPG out for PS2. The game really is two DVDs long. Apparently, Sony doesn't use dual layered DVDs - only the standard ones.

Oh ya! Happy Birthday Dreamcast! Sega Dreamcast turns 5 on September 9th. People say Dreamcast is dead

- it's just that mine still works. I know what you mean (a dead system no longer gets new games). Mine is still in operational status. I had little inner-conflict with myself whether or not I wanted to continue collecting games which would almost immediately be shelved or to continue on collecting - at a slower rate. I believe it's similar to smoking - got to kick the habit of buying cigarettes just as it would videogames. I have a long history of owning whatever I want - and for me - money does not grow on trees.

VPN Interests Me (2004-09-10 14:25)

Today's topic is how the heck I got 8 viruses on my computer today. I got rid of all 8 with Anti-VIR. My guess is when I leave my cable connection active - viruses come on my computer and download more viruses. I was wondering why my connection was used all the time. It's a pain in the butt to have to start Anti-VIR every two days to see how many I got. Viruses make my browser "not respond", and then my computer completely freezes. I have enough RAM to physically sort out the unnecessary CPU usage. This time I only have 1.65 GB of MP3s on my computer and from what I know no one can add a virus thread onto a MP3 file....yet.

In college today our class was learning about physical topologies. (bus, ring, star, extended star, mesh) Extended stars are the most common topology. What confuses me is Ethernet does not always need TCP/IP addresses to run. Ethernet can also run on token ring using the MAC address. The man who supposedly teaches the curriculum (whom I had last year in Micro Operating Systems) taught us about Intranet (not Internet) which is a virtual personal network (VPN). I find VPNs interesting. But I also agree more with the 'other' kind of Internet. The kind that everyone uses... Instant messengers are very much like VPNs in many respects although still apart of TCP/IP. They have a file transfer protocol, text messaging to any node in the world with an email address using the TCP/IP protocol. Well if not using a web browser, email clients such as Microsoft Outlook uses SMTP or POP3 protocols. It can be either.

I learned that satellite transmission are in fact TCP/IP signals that are, of course, sent out in space to arrive to a different host satellite so it goes back to ground. When I think of satellite....I think of Hawaii. I mean they can't all get high-speed Internet on that tiny group of islands thus they need satellites to access Internet unless an anonymous Internet user goes through 56k dialup. We also had an interesting conversation on how to define "baud" which is actually an alternate term used by networks specialist to describe bandwidth in the old days. It's really easy to figure out - 56K divided by 4 equals 14 baud. Everything is converted into bits and bytes. Storage and memory are KB, MB, GB and bandwidth and through-put speed are described as bits, kilobits, megabits, gigabits or baud. Not baud so much anymore.

I can't believe I'm agreeing with people who say anything that's point blank stupid. And some of what they say is - so I don't know why they ask such silly questions. I would rather not have this part true (where adults can shout out random comments at the teacher), but I fear I have no other choice. I can not flunk this class for the very same reason I can not just ignore everyone. It's just wrong and CISCO is very interactive in it's nature. You must interact with the teacher to stay ahead of the party in my opinion. For example, Jeff gives instructions, and those other people in class confirm what the teacher said. Why? If they would just listen....they wouldn't have had to ask in the first place. I don't think anyone there is a moron...at least I try not to say that out-loud.

Now I shall speak gratefully about my growing RPG collection. If reading this bores you - please stop reading. I went into Game Stop to look around I knew I was either going to get La La Pucelle : Tactics or Phantom Brave. Game Stop had both - apparently the publisher of Phantom Brave published a limited amount of this game for North America. I liked this game but I was 5 dollars short or I've would of owned it. A used copy of La Purée Tactics just came in and I swiped it before anyone else could. The reason why I found out about Nippon Ichi was when I bought an odd game called Disagea - Hour of Darkness at Toyriffic 6 months ago. I looked like an import and I was half right.

It's an Import translated into the wonderful language that Americans use very day, the one and only English. IGN.com said it was a great game – 9.2 out of 10. La Pucelle Tactics got a final score of 8.8 out of 10. Phantom Brave got 8.6 out of 10. All three got a 5.0 or 6.0 in the graphics although all scored above 8.5 in actual game play. I own 46 PS2 game cases now. I am sure that all three of these games are going to be very hard to find in the future. I counted today, and I have a total of thirteen RPGs for Playstation 2. I couldn't take the game and run – I would have gotten arrested. Besides, looting the game store is pretty bad. I like RPGs because I like the action time battle system and the traditional turn-based battle system equally. Star Ocean 3 is actually the first game that allows me to choose which one I prefer I hate being hustled. The game store teller asked me if he could help count my change – I had like 10 dollars in cents. Toyriffic told me that they do not wish to talk about Game Stop. Game Stop and Toyriffic are obviously in the same business. It's MY KIND of business! However, it is obvious that these stores give gamers a chance to own a game that isn't at the local Wal-Mart or Target or Shop Ko. I believe game specialty stores are paradise for old school game collectors. I happen to think I was one once, but now I'm having second thoughts on this old school collecting thing. I don't play them – they're worthless dead weight and I don't play them – right? So, therefore, I conclude to only spend money on videogames that I play for week or more.

Anyway, I tried out Star Ocean: Til the End of Time for the first time. The intro was really good, it's better than Star Trek, love the imagination that went into the metropolis. From what I heard off IGN.com the graphics were a little dated, but they looked fine to me. IT is comparable to that of Final Fantasy X and Xenosaga. I want to know if this game is another Xenosaga. Believe it or not Xenogears was developed by Squaresoft, but Xenosaga moved to Namco instead. Namco plans to make six episodes. Otherwise, Squaresoft would have had three Science-fiction RPGs. I think everyone on the face of the planet knows what the 3rd one is. I shall not comment no more.

It is actually not long ago I first owned Grandia II, technically my first RPG. I bought Legend of Zelda Ocarina of Time in 2001 which is technically my 3rd. My second is Skies of Arcadia. N64 was the last console to buy if you wanted a RPGs in your game collection (speaking for myself) unless you wanted to own a great game such as Ocarina of Time as I have. It's no secret it's a well developed RPG. It was above average on all levels where other RPGs at a time were above average on just a few levels. In 1998, I can think of only Final Fantasy 7 or Xenogears which succeed in being fully 3D. As more average RPGs are released, more of them become above average and thus we have what's called the "sleeper hits". Sleeper hits, of course, are games that achieved technical achievement (graphics, gameplay, sound, presentation, story), but never had the publicity that high profile RPGs none other than Final Fantasy X had, but in reality it's whatever make me happy, of course, which is why I take time to read multiple reviews on my new videogame strategy plan. It's buying only RPGs above 8.0. Pretty simple...I think so.

This week I almost quit writing for Modblog. The problem with Modblog is I don't know anyone, therefore, it is very hard to write to an audience which aren't into the technical side of computers. My blog certainly attracts both the technical crowd as well as gamers, but not as much as technical geeks. I like putting my opinions on a public site, not because I'm always right, but because the point of the website is to attract attention. The web address doesn't matter – it's the content on the site. For example, this blog shows on the 3rd page on MSN Search Engine if you search keywords, "Ian's Blog". If you search keywords, "Ian's Smashing Good Blog Site" with Yahoo, Google, or MSN Search, it'll show up as number one! I only start searching websites through MSN Search a month ago. It clearly has everything that Google and Yahoo has, and my site appears on it. Oddly enough, if I type keywords "Toyriffic" into Google's textbox, , this web log shows up on the second search page.

As for review sites...I'm have a little problem reading. Different gamers like different things...this is obvious. For every 8/10 and 9/10 there also has to be someone with a 4/10 or 5/10 rating. A good example of this is Gamefaqs.com. Go there and read opinionated stereotyped gamers whom write 3 pages reviewing their favorite games. If I had that time to write a review – I'd rather just read one of IGN or Game Revolution's reviews. It's hard to find a guy/gal on Gamefaqs whom really written a lot of reviews. Although Gamefaqs is a community site even more so than IGN - IGN has a very large discussion board with over a million signed up who post 1000+ comments every day. Apparently, they are the only one besides Gameshark.com or Gamespy which employees writers to work for them. Gamefaqs is known for it's game walkthroughs – best place on the Internet to get a videogame walkthrough these days. There is also Neoseeker.com. I prefer Gamefaqs which I've used since 1999.

Do Aliens use Snail Mail? Yep. (2004-09-13 14:26)

Uh-hem. I noticed about 11 months ago and 20 days ago I haven't received any FAN MAIL! I know what you're thinking – if I haven't received mail for 11 months than why would I care? To answer this question – I wonder if other Modblog users get fan mail? Only copperman sent me any fan mail and it was a modified user image by him.

Firstly, I found some interesting facts about sharing Information. Putting data on CD and shipping it is must less costly to send huge amounts of data than Internet dialup costs. And my answer to this, "Screw who ever wrote that." Think of it? Compressing data and putting it on CD and shipping it. When data is transported by trains, planes, ships and automobiles the price drops significantly. That's 800MB+ worth of compressed data on the CD. Each bit of information would be less than a cent. Now that I think about it one 7 MB of compressed data is less than a cent if the postage shipment costs only 4 dollars. Now, if I ship DVDs which are about the same weight as normal CDs, I can save a lot more data per dollar, 28 MB per cent compressed. How the heck can anyone download more than 100 MB at once over dial-up? It's impossible to download more than that in one day where I live unless you've got high-speed Internet via satellite. Yes, I live in the trees and corncobs are abundant. I have never done it. The editor of this passage is just stating the obvious. I had a good laugh after reading. I also agree with it, but it's so damn obvious, I couldn't stop myself laughing for 5 minutes nonstop. Do people remember how it was before high-speed Internet? Or did some people somehow forget? Oops. ET could - in fact – could have loads of information on his spaceship, therefore, it would physical data sent on a physical medium from his admiral ship (sometimes called his mothership) to all the smaller ships ranked below. Maybe the aliens don't want us to known about their existence? (The green little martens with antennas sticking outta their heads and flew around in saucers) They have far more technology than we do and they don't feel like sharing most likely is the reason. URL link - Does ET use Snail Mail?.

Oh yeah, I installed the official Microsoft Service Pack (SP2), and it works even worse. SP1 was better than the retail release of Windows XP, but this isn't what I had in plan when I downloaded SP2. My expectations were high, of course, because it came from Microsoft. I'm now getting viruses left and right. What's up with that? SP2 was supposed to be a security patch for Windows XP. My Dell Dimension XPS came with Windows XP Service Pack 1 with it. So far, with my next reinstallation, I won't install the Service Pack 2 onto my PC next time around. If Microsoft releases a hot fix (patching the patch) to Service Pack 2, which would be really cool. What would be even cooler is if Service Pack 3 did some theme tweaking to the desktop like Windows Blinds 4, except it would be very stable.

As for music I'm listening to some classical for a change. Mozart, Brahms, Robert Schumann, or Beethoven. All of them having genius IQ. Ya, the music is brilliant alright. It's suppose to sound good. How though? I ripped some of my classical discs to MP3 format about 2 years back. The MP3 files sounds a lot like the WAV file for the most part. Only noticeable lost in volume. I traveled to a videogame remixing site called Overclocked Remix – The Unofficial Game Music Arrangement Community . It's where various DJs do remixes on videogame music. The Mp3s are all free. I got 350 MB full of this stuff which I downloaded in 2003. The Chrono Cross / Chrono Trigger remixes are great! The Secret of Mana theme soundtrack isn't too bad either. I'll download more at school today.

I'm about 3 ½ hours into Star Ocean Till the End of Time. I appreciate the graphics and watch all the FMV the game has to offer. I knew that evacuation on that starship wouldn't be successful. The main characters were ambushed on a typical save the human race from another alien race storyline. I'm sort of afraid I'll die too easily, I'm trying to level up in at the beginning so I don't get killed. It's one of those hack 'n slash games too. The battle system is well made though. It seems to be very balanced. Unlike Star Ocean - The Second Story, all the cut scenes English voiceovers, not just the FMV. IGN.com says the voices are bad, but I think they say that because they compare the game to big budget films. I never knew videogame were supposed to have very good voice acting anyways? Their review says Metal Gear Solid 2 voice acting is exceptional and IGN.com isn't the only one that believes this. As I always say, "As long as it's in English, I'll listen to it." None of the videogames I own have horrible voice acting. I know a few years back, you were cool if you said MGS2 is the best game out for PS2! I don't know about what's the coolest now-a-days. Grand Thief Auto: San Andreas?

I tried taking the source code and opening the HTML file in Namo Webeditor 5.0 and play around with the source. I'm almost ready for my first attempt. If I am successful, I will have my first successful template. I'm going to create a large logo with some transparent images and run it off a different server.

This morning, I reinstalled my Sound Blaster Audigy 2 into my XPS. It can do 24-bit DVD quality sound whereas Sound Blaster can only do 16-bit CD audio. Most obvious, my older sound blaster does not have 5.1 Surround Sound support. It is missing the black jack for an extra set of speakers. Mp3s don't usually surpass CD quality, but in any case the SBA2 enhances the sound with an onboard chip that does equalizing giving a good sound boost. I thought something was defective on the soundcard itself....with my luck, it works now, and my MP3s sound noticeably better with headphones.

Ian's Quintessential Blog 2.0 online (2004-09-14 14:26)

I made several improvements to "Ian's Quintessential Blog" right before CISCO! It evolves a lot of premade backgrounds which wouldn't be that difficult to get anyways thanks to the Print Screen button. If my site's graphics seem overly compressed, that's because I use a modem. I must sacrifice high resolution images for loading times. With slow loading pages, (30 seconds over a modem or more) people generally stop loading altogether. This is bad. It doesn't look as good as some of my other modified templates. Still it looks better than Ian's Quintessential Blog 1.1 I think. I'm going to upgrade my photo gallery to a macromedia flash one. You know - so I can do the fancy zoom in and out effect on the browser. I'll add this later. I did this blog with Namo Webeditor.

Ian's Quintessential Blog 2.0 (works best with Internet Explorer)

Fable for Xbox game out today. Fable is made by Lionhead Studios which created Black and White and published by Microsoft. It's going to be the best looking Xbox RPG (Xbox doesn't have that many RPGs to begin with) I thought about owning this instead of Phantom Brave. It was delayed for 1 year already. TeamXBOX.com gave this game a 9.3/10. IGN.com gave it a solid 9/10. Gamespy gave it an 8.5/10. It's where you start out as a boy and every choice you make effects the game somehow later on, and changes who your allies are. There is also PvM and PVP in this game. I just bought Star Ocean 3 four days ago, do I really need it yet? Probably not.

20 Worst things to ask when you're buying a computer:

- I want the Internet loaded on my computer! (This one is actually true!)
- I want to watch movies on my computer!
- I want to have spell checker on my computer.
- Does my computer come with a keyboard?
- I want a computer that can play 3D games
- I want my computer to play high resolution games
- Does my computer come with Microsoft Word?

- I want it so I can have a PC to surf the Internet only.
- I want a computer but, I don't know how to use it – can you help me mister?
- I need this thing called the floppy drive because apparently they use it at work. It's essential that I have one.
- I went into the Gateway store to ask, "Do you sell Macintosh?"
- What's a processor?
- What's a hard drive?
- What's a DVD-ROM?
- Does my computer (PC) to come preloaded with Internet Explorer?
- What does PC stand for?
- You call Dell and ask the operator, "What's your cheapest computer?"
- I want to surf the Internet with a virus proof computer and if I don't have one than I won't get one.
- I don't want anyone to know I'm on the Internet.
- I want to send email on my computer
- Why are PCs and Macintosh/Power PC different?

If anyone asks these questions please ignore them, it is best if you leave their answers unanswered. It's a good chance, these people ask these questions to annoy the operators or anyone else they're by. The reason being – any average joe could find these questions out from word of mouth. Once, I had these very same questions, but I matured and got these answers answered rather quickly before hitting middle school WITHOUT annoying people. I listed these because I thought they were really funny because there are bad computer users in the world, but everyone should know the answer to these if they are interested in using computers (unlike my mom). If you are one of these people, refrain from asking these questions, and find your answers off your user-friendly helpful search engine.

If you can think of any other funny ones, please comment.

Greatest games in my opinion (2004-09-17 14:27)

Today I am going to list off my personal favorites I've played for each console.

Top 5 Nintendo

1. Super Mario Bros. Super Mario Bros. is comes packaged with the NES and it's reviewed by many as the best NES game on the console. While the graphics aren't comparable to that of Super Mario Bros 3, it's game play exceeds everything except maybe Final Fantasy or Metriod in sound.
2. Final Fantasy – the first RPG for any console. Final Fantasy has outdated graphics, but the graphics were above par when it came out.
3. Metroid– I played this one through Metroid Prime on Gamecube. It is made from Gameboy master-designer, Gunpei Yokoi. Metriod is said to be one of the first side-scrolling shooter. Everything about this game is cool. You play everyone's favorite intergalactic bounty hunter (please don't hate me for not saying Boba-Fett) none other than Samus Aran to save the galaxy from the mother metroid for the first time. Blaster and power suit come standard in her inventory. Graphics are about the best on the NES and the game is long and brutal. You can't play this game at a novice level unless you've cheated.
4. Tetris – Tetris has been around for over 15 years. Everyone should instantly recognize this mind game. I find it fun trying to put the blocks in order. Every console from then on after had Tetris on it. In fact, Tetris Worlds has been released on Playstation, Playstation 2, Dreamcast, N64, X-box, and Gamecube. Since when has one game been ported across 2 generations? Super Nintendo had Super Tetris. N64 also had Tetris Attack and Tetrisphere.

5. Legend of Zelda – the Game that started it all. Who could forget Legend of Zelda? It's stars Link and you save a princess named Zelda. Classic storyline.

Top 6 Super NES

1. Super Metroid – A game I almost bought at the game store today. It sells for 40 dollars. This game is recognized as Metroid 3. I do believe that Metroid 2 was on Gameboy. It has updated graphics, but does Metroid really need better game play which was so revolutionary in the first game? I played the rom and it played well. It's suppose to have many secrets

2. Legend of Zelda – Link to the Past – My first Super NES game. The 3rd installment in the series. Once again Zelda gets kidnapped and you try to save her. Graphics are good in 1992, but in 1996, they were barely above average.

3. Final Fantasy VI – Probably the 3rd RPG that I played on Playstation, and it's the best RPG for Super Nintendo. Likewise - it carries the Final Fantasy name. Extremely high profile budget. It'll be another 3 years until another installment of Final Fantasy comes out. Cut-scenes, epic music, and over 5000 textboxes come standard.

4. Chrono Trigger – another game I have for Playstation. You play Crono and save the world with a princess, a frog and another warrior. You travel through time too. Since it's a RPG, you get dramatic cut-scenes (harharhar - it's from 1995 okay, don't expect polygons), and lot and lots of text. Again, it's made from Squaresoft so expect the best quality.

5. The 5th one is really hard. I was going to say Secret of Mana, but I decided that the English translated ROM of Star Ocean is better. Theory is if you have one of those ROM backup thing-a-ma-jigs for Super Nintendo you can play it on your Super Nintendo hence it being a Super Nintendo game. Star Ocean has really, really good graphics that surpass Final Fantasy VI. And it has audio cut-scenes in it! Never seen before. Game made by Tri-Ace and published by Enix. Only released in Japan.

6. Mortal Kombat II – I personally pick Mortal Kombat II as my favorite fighting game. I don't own it but I played the ROM. My poll says Street Fighter Alpha 2 is the best SNES fighter. I haven't seen it at the game store nor played it.

Top 6 Sega Saturn games

1. Nights – probably the most addictive Saturn game in my collection. I bought a 3D analog controller just so I could play it. It's #1

2. Daytona USA – a port of the arcade game

3. Fighter's Megamix – probably the most decent 3D fighter from Sega developer AM2

4. Virua Fighter – another good game

5. Gex – a good platform game – it plays like Donkey Kong Country.

6. Panzer Dragoon Okay game. You save the world with a dragon.

Playstation (I bought PSone so I call play Square-soft games so interesting enough my top 5 are all RPGs)

1. Final Fantasy 8 – My first RPG I've played so likewise it's my favorite Final Fantasy game for Playstation. Spans 4 CDs. Over 40 hours long.

2. Legend of Dragoon - I know this game didn't receive that good reviews, but I like the backgrounds and it's the 2nd favorite RPG I own. Also spans 4 CDs and roughly 40 hours long. This game is developed by Sony Computer Entertainment and was the single most costly project for it. Cost Sony as much as Squaresoft to finance development of Final Fantasy 7.

3. Final Fantasy 7 – Now a classic Playstation game, but easily found at any game store that's because there are so many copies around. Remember this game sold over 3 million in the United States. It's still the 3rd best Playstation RPG to own. It's not as much as a romance as FF8 was, but it does have music and the graphics were state-of-the-art at the time. Read a review or something. Thing game doesn't need an introduction because most readers own this game I would think. It's the first time a RPG had FMV and spoken words.

4. Chrono Cross – Sequel to Chrono Trigger. It's about half as long as Final Fantasy, but still pushed the Playstation to it's theoretical limits. Sources say the graphics engine runs at 60 frames per second.
5. Xenogears – another Squaresoft RPG. It's also a space RPG spanning across 2 discs.

Nintendo 64

1. Legend of Zelda Ocarina of Time – Probably my single most favorite game for N64. At first I never bought this game because I heard it was too good. It's the best selling videogame at Game Stop and Toyriific. I bought my copy in 2002, which one of my recent N64 games.
2. Goldeneye – Best first person shooter for N64. Game developed by Rare. Uses full 007 James Bond license. Graphics were cool in 1997. Nothing else compared to it. I beat it on 00 Agent
3. Conker's Bad Fur Day – Weird how this game got on the list. I bought it only a few months ago. Game also made by Rare. Played the Rom today actually. This game confuses the emulator I think – it crashed. After the opening sequence.
4. Super Mario 64 – It's a classic and the first N64 game out. Still it's like Super Mario Bros 3D. An above average technical demo in 1995 from what I heard. I completed it three times from what I remember. Fun game. Played it through many times.
5. Perfect Dark – 2nd First person shooter from RARE. Came out in 2000, and I bought it at that time. Since it had the memory expansion pack – it looked better than any other N64 game. I play the rom every once in a while.

Dreamcast

1. Crazy Taxi – I liked sending passengers to their destination. The graphics looked like Playstation 2 games and the game itself played well. I believe it had Slipknot on it
2. Rayman 2 – the best platform game for the Dreamcast
3. Skies of Arcadia – my favorite RPG for Dreamcast. Had graphics of early PS2 games. Very long - spanned 50 hours. Decent story. Random battles too
4. Grandia 2 – ever since I bought this game – I tired getting my hands on the original Grandia. This game brought the series to 3D (polygons) The DC version look better than the PS2 version. Played well. Got hard in the middle. Keep dieing. Came with an audio CD with Grandia 2 music on it. I rather Game-Arts included Grandia with Grandia 2.
5. Soul Caliber – probably the best 3D fighting game for Dreamcast. IGN.com gave it a perfect score.

Playstation 2

1. Star Ocean - Till the End of Time – probably the longest console RPG the world's ever own. (not counting RPGs like Neverwinter Nights or Morrowind Game of the Year) Spans across two DVDs. That's equivalent to 14 CDs! Since this game is the Director's Cut and took 1 ½ years to hit North America, the graphics are a bit outdated. This is also my favorite since I'm playing it now. Star Ocean is set in 738 SD and has it's own story loosely based on Star Ocean The Second Story.
2. Final Fantasy X – first Final Fantasy to be fully cut-scene driven. Gameplay is 40 to 60 hours if you play all the quests. Has this thing called Overdrive. You press the X button at the precise moment and you do up to 200 % more damage. Also has this sphere grid where you level up and get to choice how to build your character.
3. Grand Thief Auto Vice City – Known to many as the best PS2 game ever created.
4. Xenosaga – Episode 1 – It's a space RPG. In the game your attacked by an alien spices called the Gnosis who are form themselves to anything and deplete human's vital signs for energy. They can also become cyborg if they have the necessary resources. The Federation develops a super weapon prototype called KOS-MOS which can destroy Gnosis where no ordinary human being can. The androids look like anime. Fine. 60 hour RPG – I o n g !
5. Jak and Dexter – the Precursor Legacy. – First game of the trilogy. In my opinion the best. I own two and the final installment is coming out this year. This game was developed by Naughty Dog which developed the Crash Bandicoot games for Playstation.

Gamecube

1. Metroid Prime – good Action RPG. Looks like a first person shooter with a gun. You're the best own heroin bounty hunter in the videogame world, Samus Aran. It's a first / third person adventure shooter hybrid game. One of Nintendo's highest priority Gamecube games next to the Legend of Zelda franchise. Game developed by Retro Studios in 2002. Comes with Metroid as a freebee. Graphics are only surpassed by Legend of Zelda Wind Waker. It's also a prequel to Metroid.
2. Metal Gear Solid Twin Snakes – Get it Twin snakes as two games in one. Improved graphics over the PS2 version and a little worst then Xbox version. Game is two mini-discs long. I wonder if Nintendo will get MGS: Snake Eater in 2006? Silicon Knights which helped port the game over two Gamecube is no longer a 2nd party of Nintendo which means Konami will have to port the whole game themselves, which more than likely will not happen. What a shame. And this is the very reason Playstation 2 had sales over Nintendo Gamecube.
3. Resident Evil – You can't own a Gamecube without owning "Resident Evil: Revisited".
4. Legend of Zelda - Wind Waker – This game had to make the top 5. It's a good 40 hour RPG. Nintendo's best.
5. Legend of Zelda Promotional Disc– 4 Zeldas on one disc (2 NES / 2 N64).

Xbox (Xbox is by far the hardest)

1. Colin Mcrae Rally 04 – My favorite racing game
2. Rallisport Challenge 2 – another rally game
3. Fable – just got this game today (more below)
4. Project Gotham 2 - Bizarre Creations best game to date
5. Halo – the high profile first person shooter by Bungie for Xbox and PC.

Windows PC

1. Unreal Tournament 2004 – my personal favorite
2. Diablo 2 Lord of Destruction
3. Neverwinter Nights
4. Star Wars Knights of the Old Republic
5. Call of Duty

Yesterday I went to Toyriffic and looked around. I didn't see anything I liked so I wanted to look to see if the store had Super Metroid. Super Metroid is a rare game, and I blew the extra money on Fable. So I could have bought Super Metroid, but didn't due to the money. At Gamefaqs.com, I saw that this game has a bunch of 9s and 10s in the reader review section so I thought "Wow, people really liked this game!" I ended up buying Donkey Kong Country 3 and Wipeout Fusion. I regret what I bought now. I should have spent the 40 dollars on Super Metroid. Humph.

I went straight from Toyriffic to WITC for my class. I was about 30 minutes early. It was really good at first, but then for some strange reason I couldn't figure out why I couldn't explain the facial expressions on people. I know it's all small talk – but then it got into a pretty good argument about the Navy. I know nothing about the Navy, and it creeped my out how they knew everything about the Navy. How brutal the navy actually is. I stayed around a while. Didn't feel right myself and eventually left 1 hour into class. Felt I couldn't agree with anyone - felt tense so I had to leave. I knew that walking out was the last thing everybody was expecting. Joyce followed me outside and asked me what's wrong. I didn't answer, and walked outside. She wanted to see if I had anything against the class I'm coming back anyways on Monday – what's the point of talking to someone if it'll reveal that I got frustrated at one point, and creeped out from the ignorance feeling in my mind.

My friend Bob couldn't come over this week or the last few weeks? He hasn't called me for over a month for one reason or another. He says last week he was on vacation (don't know where) and couldn't come over to visit. I planned a Doom 3 LAN and I have it all set up. Everything is installed and works. I tested it so it really does work – guaranteed. Tomorrows Saturday and I bet he's doing something again. We live about 14 miles from each other. I could go to his house any time of the day. Bob loves rock. He owns a Genesis and I wondered if I could play that so I could think about getting one myself. I own Dreamcast and Saturn, but not Genesis or Master's System. Master's System was junk in my opinion, but Genesis actually was more popular than Super Nintendo according to many sites – which is hard to confirm with most Nintendophilies ya know? They usually like everything Nintendo. I like being nonjudgmental when it comes to game platform so it's easier if I buy all of them. Usually a used console is less than one game, therefore, owning another console would set me back one game. In fact I think I'll just set the facts.

Toyriffic sells all their used consoles if only cleaned and play tested first. All of them come with a 1st party controller, power cable, R/F output or audio in

Microsoft XNA Impressions (2004-09-18 14:28)Microsoft Longhorn Latest Build

The Microsoft XNA – the PC / Xbox 2 hybrid console that can either be played on TV or with a standard SVGA monitor. I know I'm a little late about this subject since information on the XNA has been out last year. Whoa! A year already! Just imagine your Xbox 2 thinner (much like that of PC) hence the PC tower concept similar to the Playstation 2. The Xbox 2 will also have a SVGA port, but the XNA is meant to be played on a high resolution monitor and act like a PC. Microsoft confirmed this part last year. It will look like a thin box much like Playstation 2 with curved edges and have 4 controller ports in the front as well as at least two USB (universal serial bus) ports in front for normal pc peripherals (keyboard, mouse, analog game pad, digital camera, printer, 802.11B hub, external hard drive, MP3 player). It will also come with pc speaker output (remember the green and black jacks on your PC? They will be on the XNA as well.)

Since the Xbox 2 will have a 3.5 GHz IBM CPU on it, it'll probably use it to play both Xbox and PC games. Interesting enough, Xbox 2 uses PowerPC architecture to power it's software because it's cheaper than using a X86 platform. Xbox 2 is stated to have a 256-bit ATI GPU in it too. Here are the known possibilities:

1. The XNA will have a motherboard for two processors. One is the IBM Xbox2 CPU and the other is an IBM PC CPU. A CPU is more or less a microchip. Both will use the same memory and same GPU. Windows will recognize the GPU as a Radeon series and use an ATI Catalyst driver or more likely, Microsoft will give buyers a video card driver on CD with the package. This version will definitely have a hard drive. The system more than likely will have a eject button where you can stick a Xbox 2 DVD in it and it'll play Xbox 2 games like a normal Xbox 2 console would. The Xbox 2 BIOS screen will have an extra option to boot Windows XP or Windows Longhorn instead or by default it'll have an Xbox 2 BIOS screen.
2. The XNA will have a Xbox 2 CPU, motherboard, RAM, and video memory installed one on half, and have a X86 IBM motherboard, either a Intel or AMD processor, 256MB SDRAM on the other half. This is a possibility since to my knowledge you can't operate a game machine that runs PowerPC components and a PC on the same hardware. In other words – can a G5 run Windows XP? Answer: it's possible through commercial emulation via Microsoft's Virtual PC for OS10. Saw it with my own eyes on TechTV's The Screen Savers.
3. The XNA will have an Xbox 2 power pc motherboard, IBM Power PC CPU, RAM and memory. The console's BIOS will recognize a Windows NTFS partition on it. In other words - the BIOS will boot the Xbox 2 information screen first and than boot NTFS or if Longhorn comes along the new WINFS file system which will act as a normal computer. The BIOS will have to be pretty advanced to recognize Windows OS and play Xbox 2 games. This is where you can reformat the hard drive in NTFS or WINFS while still keeping the Xbox 2 operating system intact. If this is the case and it very well may be – the owner may dual boot Linux with Windows by inserting a Linux installation CD. The XNA would than be a favorite for hobbyist who likes to run benchmark tests on other things besides PCs. It will either emulate the X86 BIOS so that the BIOS can format a NTFS partition on the hard drive of the XMA or MS will actually have a Windows XP installation disc especially for XNA.
4. The XNA could have one master BIOS to boot the Xbox 2 bios or X86 bios. The Xbox Bios would of course boot the Xbox hardware as it would in Option 3. Then the Windows BIOS would take control and boot the X86 partition(s). It would have to be X86 hardware since PC games need PC hardware to run. The difference between #3 and #4 is that there is one master BIOS on control and two extra BIOS to control separate operations of two very different types of software. It will either emulate the X86 BIOS so that the BIOS can format a NTFS partition on the hard drive of the XMA or MS will actually have a Windows XP installation disc especially for XMA.

The easier question to answer is why would I buy it? For people who hate to switch from their Windows PC to their Xbox. In time a PC will be more powerful and less costly than the Xbox 2. A few years after Xbox 2 is released – you won't have state-of-the-art console to play your PC games on. This is a question that people will ask themselves when they buy a XNA for 700 or 800 dollars. If I had an expert opinion on how the XNA is actually built - #3 would be my best guess. It makes sense to have one BIOS and one agriculture amongst the Apple line than a dual agriculture (Apple and X86). All Microsoft needs is a great X86 emulator that hardly sacrifices speed for performance. It's great to run applications, but can it run games as well? Microsoft needs to find a way to refine "Virtual PC" to near perfection if they want to be successful in selling XNA. I think this is possible since hobbyist have Xbox emulators already running Xbox games on PC. Why can't it do vice versa? Just because it wasn't attempted before doesn't mean future products will not benefit from both.

Microsoft knows that 40 % of American's play videogames of any sort. About 4 out of 10 Americans are below the age of 16 so this would make a lot of sense. I take it about one half of those teenagers are like me and enjoy playing videogames once in a while. The other half would be adults who grew up with the Genesis or Playstation, and haven't stopped playing. I hear RPGs are selling at an all time high presently. That could be one reason. My reason is being born without anyone else so I don't get out much with other people. Although I'm on the computer more than playing games. I like to talk about them and look up reviews or writing miscellaneous ideas. I spend more time looking at videogame reviews than playing. I play the most on weekends.

I plan on getting the new Nintendo console so I'm not going to get Xbox 2. I have other things to do besides playing games, not to mention I already have 320 videogames. Without PC games - I have approximately 250 videogames across 10 platforms. (NES, SNES, N64, GCN, Xbox, PS, PS2, Dreamcast, Saturn, Gameboy Advance).

There is another question – I am missing the concept of using high-end videocards like the Quadro FX that cost 1500 dollars online. All it is – is a PCI card that can probably do graphics better than a Radeon 9800 XT. A Radeon 9800XT or Geforce 4 Ti 6700 is great for gigaflop performance. You can max out your graphics setting with such high spec games like Far Cry, Unreal Tournament 2004 or Doom 3 with those GPUs. These cards can handle very high resolution graphics than Radeon 9800 XT, but for a 21" monitor – there is no need for it. The smaller Radeons have ¼ the memory bandwidth as the big ones.

Normal Memory Bandwidth (can do resolutions up to 2048x 1536, 1600x1200 in most pc games):

ATI Radeon 9800 XT (256-bit) = 24 GB / sec (this is mine)
Cost $399 online

ATI Radeon 9800 Pro (128-bit) = 8.8 GB / sec

PNY Geforce 5700 (256-bit) = 6.4 GB / sec
Cost $120 online

Workstation cards Memory Bandwidth (can do resolutions up to 2048 x 1536:

PNY Quadro FX 2000 (128-bit) = 12.8 GB / sec
 Cost $1248 online

This message is for Bob:

Oh yeah, Bob if your reading this – why don't you come over! You never answer your phone. Don't you like me anymore? I know you have Angie and girlfriends need more affection than I. I know you like Angie more than I or Randy. Randy sees you more often than I do. I don't really play videogames all that much – Bob. However, it would be fun if we go see a movie. To be honest, I would lie and say I am a big hotshot at school Do you believe I have 20 friends? Knowing you – you probably see through that as well. You being so clever – you would find out. So it's no good lying to you – it doesn't work – you know me too well. You can even live on your own and never get homesick. Fine - if we don't see each other in 4 more months – I'll just forget all about you okay! How does that sound? No more Ian to hang around with. Ya! I'm my own person now! Don't need Bob to make me feel good – but you're still welcome to be my friend. I'm giving you 4 more months - that's January. Friendships sometime come to an end eventually. We've been friends for 8 years now.

This is Ian signing off.

PStwo, Quake 4, Elder Scrolls IV screenshots (2004-09-22 14:30)

I got awesome news I'm going to an Xbox party at school. That's going to be something. I think their going to play Halo. I wonder if I'm going to be any good at it. I haven't played my copy for so long. I've been more into those rally games. In my opinion - they are much more fun since you play all those cars over rough terrain. It's harder than you think. But I'm almost mastered it already. I've placed 1st or 2nd in almost all the races.

Sony announces the PStwo and it's about 1/3 the size of the PS2 height wise but it's black like PS2. Its logo is going to be the PS2's font and color, but spelled "PStwo." It can obviously be set on its side like a PS2. Only thing bad about it is the fact I couldn't hook a hard drive up to it to play SOCOM II or Final Fantasy XI. I'm guessing it'll cost 99 dollars as a final price.

Game Informer Magazine showed a copy of Elder Scrolls IV - Oblivion. Elder Scrolls III was the first to go high-resolution. Although it has a state-of-the-art graphics engine, it fails to impress me who thought Elder Scrolls 3 had a very good graphics engine - it succeeded in being Xbox's most beautiful games. I'm seeing round faces this time! There's an improvement! Another improvement is improved candle lighting. Candle shadows that haven't been done before. It's been done with a blur but not actual candle flickering. Other than that I don't see much difference between Elder Scrolls 4 and Elder Scrolls 3. Websites are getting too hyped about higher high resolution images. I'm not that hyped about it. I think I'll buy it - if that's what you're asking? Is it just me or is the competition fierce. Ever since Final Fantasy 7 was a blockbuster hit - there has been at least 3 or 4 good RPGs out for PC or PS2. I mean not just good - but the ones you want to play this year.

PC

1. Dungeon Siege 2
2. Dungeons and Dragons Online
3. Everquest II (I'm not getting this one)
4. Final Fantasy XI new expansion

PS2

1. Kingdom Hearts II
2. Phantasy Star Collection
3. Phantom Brave
4. Star Ocean 3 – Till the Ends of Time

Anyway, to get back to Elder Scrolls IV Oblivion – this game will use hyper threading and I bet my computer can anti-analyze it at a 1200x960 resolution. The game looks very shiny! It seems that the water is actually shining off the walls – never done before. When all said and done – this game looks photo-realistic. Did I mention it looks kinda like Doom 3 which has twice as much polygons compared to Elder Scrolls 3 – Morrowind. The grass – especially doesn't look painted onto the ground like it was in Morrowind. It's a little hard to imagine, but Bethesda is aiming for a larger game than Morrowind. Morrowind has more out doors than any other game around. Just think in 6 years if some developer is working on a MMORPG so vast that it'll be the size of a 4 Morrowinds, 4 Tribunals and 4 Bloodmoons put together! I expect Oblivion (word fixed - hate to confuse readers) to be the size of two Morrowinds. I'm afraid Morrowind was a great of difference between it and Daggerfall. Oblivion shares Morrowind's game play with improved graphics. This is definitely on my highly anticipated wish list this year even though this game is coming out next year .

Quake IV looks so much like Doom 3. I think they both are using the same engine. Quake IV is being made by Raven Software – developers of blockbuster games, Star Wars Jedi Academy and Soldier of Fortune. Both take place in the future and both look darker than most games – I try not to say the “H” word on here to often. It gives a bad example. I think it'll play like Doom except it'll play exactly like Quake 3 Arena. And that's nothing to complain about either.

Getting Sims 2 today I hope (2004-09-25 14:31)

Howdy. Wasn't sure what to put so I wrote a bunch of stuff like school – seems that couldn't be helped so I deleted that post and started over with hopefully a better post.

Today is Saturday. I've been waiting all week for it to be Friday. Friday is always my slack off day. Yesterday I was playing Star Ocean 3 (go figure) and am about 5 hours in it. Haven't had a "Game Over" yet on normal so I guess I have what it takes. Key to success - like in all games - is to keep the HP higher than 75 %. And obviously, the point of playing the game is to avoid getting hit. If it is low then that's when I worry. I've never gotten myself in that bind – if I were, I'd skip all my battles and find a HP replenishing circles fast. I'm on the 2nd underdeveloped planet interesting enough they want the technology of that little crashed space craft that I've made in town. Woops. There goes that popular 'world is flat' analogy.

I know there is more in this game's story, but most civilizations I would think – if they saw something fall out of the sky – wouldn't people who live on it think that their planet has been invaded? I know if I saw a strange spaceship coming out of the sky I would be terrified. Then there is always the select few who themselves want to be taken on a journey or the like. Nah. It's not like that. Everyone I known on any planet in this game didn't come along. In this planet it's not the case. Maybe if I'm lucky I'll run into a "20th century underdeveloped planet?" Maybe then I will get "the alien welcome". You know – we want your technology deal. Why is every planet inhabited by humans? And if humans did inhabitant other planets why is there civilizations that don't have space technology. Yes, there are all kinds of aliens in this game. Blue-Dophins, fox tails, etc. In Star Ocean 3, Earth has joined an allegiance with some other planets. All planets have enemies. Except in Star Ocean 3 at least 1 enemy has changed over to the good side and you met the former enemy early in the game. There (we have two it seems) is 1 human enemy and one alien enemy. Therefore, that leaves me with two enemy forces to worry about. I won't have to worry about it in a sense because I get very few choices as in the story are the same regardless of what I do. Anyway, as the story begins - the planet that I was vacationing on was invaded than destroyed to nothing more than a waste land. Then we run into a couple enemy ships, escape to an underdeveloped planet with 14th century technology. Get saved by that former enemy that switched sides. I've got into another fight with an enemy battle cruiser, astonishing escape again with 'warp speed' to another underdeveloped planet. This one is set in the time of King Arthur and his Knights of the Round Table time period. (Not really himself). The main characters have been brutally wiped than they've been thrown into a prison where they get saved from the other side? This side is using runes for magic. Magic is good for those physical immune enemies on the planet. The locals call it runology (rune technology). Star Ocean gets stranger and stranger.

I finally tried out Power Archiver 9.02. I remember way back when Power Archiver was freeware. It supported many formats and was very stable. Then by 8.0 it has become shareware. I've been using WinRAR meanwhile. It'll compress docs 75 % in RAR format. That's good enough for me. Power Archiver 9 has this new 7zip format. It's supposed to have better compression ratio than RAR. I always thought RAR was the best. The difference is of an 887KB text file would be 294KB in RAR and 276KB in 7ZIP. Its difference is less than 20 kilobytes. Is it worth that much? However, WinRAR will read any 7ZIP file. Power Archiver 9 is great because it doesn't freeze up or take that much resources as 8.0 did. They fixed the system resources leak plaguing Power Archiver 7x. Yeah!

I started to play some Bookworm Deluxe from Popcap Games. The game is basically a word game. You try to compete for a high score by creating as long words I can. If I happen to spell something to short one of the letter boxes starts on fire – and I must use that box in a hurry. My score was about 71,000 something. I got to the Senior Librarian Assistant level. Actually, it was mom whom made me download it so she could bring it too work next week. She works at a Minnesota hospital and well – the county hospital a few years ago was taken over by corporate sponsors and now is taking away her Internet – so she comes to be and asks me to put this software on CD. You must try this software. It may not be as addicting as a lot of commercial PC games these days – it's supposed to enhance my vocabulary. I couldn't image anything more horrible than no Internet privileges – Not!

Oh yeah I found out that The Sims 2 has been available for 10 days already. I may get this game either today or tomorrow so I can see what all the fuss is about. Sims? Sequel to best selling videogame of all time? Huh? Boy, it seems like people sure like to play with their virtual Sim's minds. Is Will Wright (founder of Maxis and creator of Simcity, Simtown, Simfarm, SimTower, The Sims) a genius for knowing this? Yeah, well, IGN.com already gave it 9.5 out of 10. I imagine Maxis's next Sims game will combine Simcity with The Sims. In fact, it is already in a way. I can import your personal character data from Simcity 4 into The Sims 2. Simcity 4 let anyone to create a family and the family would give you feedback from their area in the city. Crime reports, tax rate, the family's needs, etc. Problem is I don't have Simcity 4 installed. Gamerankings rates this game an 8.9 out of 10 over all. Graphics are in full 3D and a lot of polygons unlike The Sims. I know what I'm going to do – when I get the game, I'm going to go find some cheat codes for the game, buy the biggest house with my infinite money cheat and spoil my guy. Maybe I'll get married and have children who want things.

[On Sunday] I've been playing with the Sims 2. I bought the DVD Special Edition version today. I was asked if I really want this game since it's on DVD format. I said no problem. I can't believe people who buy this game didn't see DVD Special Edition logo in large font. I've been playing the Dreamers Family in Pleasantville. It's made up of two people to be precise. The teenager gets good grades in school, but he has this girlfriend which he absolutely goes nuts over, and for some reason he likes a white girl. The kid's black. I'm a little surprised. It seems that the game does everything right so far. The Sims are much smarter this time around, and don't do as dumb of things as last game. My Sim in this game don't miss work and doesn't sleep in. Unlike in the original Sims, Sims don't get as depressed in 30 minutes – not to mention it's a heck of a lot easier to control my Sims in this game. The game looks much more realistic graphics wise, the furniture has 10 times the polygons as the original. It makes the game more fun I think now that it's in full 3D. I don't see how people can spend night and day on this game. It's nothing to loose sleep over.

Later today (right before I wrote this) I was stacking wood and hopefully I get paid. All I need is 53 dollars to buy this game. Yes, another game, but a computer game none-the-less. Impressions maybe next time.

This is Ian signing off.

Making RJ-11 and RJ-45 cable (2004-09-28 14:32)

Name: Ian

Lab: Report 3

Instructor : Joyce Quist

Date: September 28, 2004

Rev. 1.4 (fixed error with RJ-45 stating it was a crossover cable)

Report

RJ-45 - the straight-through cable

On Tuesday, Joyce assigned a lab report on cables. Each of us did cables individually. One cable was the straight-through cable which is a RJ-45 patch cable in discus. First, I must have a clamping tool to came the proper terminate jacks from the EIA/TIA/ANSI 568-B standard. I need to make sure my cable is no shorter than 10 feet so I took my finger, and hand and measured out approximately 10 feet.

For crossover cable I had to take the jacket stripper, and take the correct amount of jacket off so I could untwist the twisted pair wires. I did some extra clipping to make sure the wires were straight thus they would fit in the termination jack equally. What I used as follows from left to right before I insert them into the termination jack (sometimes called a plug) facing down when I clamp it down a few times. I sure hate for it to come off and have to redo it.

[Sequence for straight-through cable]

Orange white

Orange

Green white

Blue

Blue white

Green

Brown white

Brown

Since the opposite end of the cable should have orange white on the left side also and it doesn't matter if the cable is twisted since the wires are going to end up in the same configuration on each end according to EIA/TIA/ANSI 568-B.

RJ-11 (British Naval Connector)

For the white flat cable, untwisted pair (UTP) I believe, this is very easily. I could easily strip the wire off because all I had to do is make a cut in the cable. Afterwards, I took my finger nails, and peel the ripper off on both sides. If my wires weren't lengthy enough than all I had to do is make another cut and peel more rubber jacket off without harming the twisted pair wires. I made sure the cable was flat with Orange White wire on the left side and lined up like above, and paid attention to detail so all the wires would fit firmly into the termination jack and clamp it down with the special CISCO clamping tool. The RJ-11 can use the RJ-45 crossover terminator jack. As for the opposite end, I made sure the end of the cable was not twisted, and once I have all the wires in the order I want them, then I simply put another termination jack/plug onto other end so it would mirror my first end exactly. For flat cable, there is no reason to know the color order of the cable since it's already in color order when it was made.

X

The last part (which I didn't have a chance to do) is connecting both ends to the wire tester and run the Map-test test option on the wire. This should discover if the wire has any open wires (which aren't connected to the tip of the termination jack), loss of signal (means that there is more attenuation in the wire than there should be), maximum bandwidth (peak Mbit or Gbit transfer rate), if all the wires are open (the cable is no good now). This concludes my lab report.

If the Map test showed no errors than this cable should pass.

6.10 October

Random thoughts (2004-10-02 12:10)

To begin my Friday, I had a lab project to do with a group and I showed up at WITC at 12:30 like I was supposed too, but I drove in a frickin rain storm which probably has everything to do with why no one showed up to complete the lab project due Tuesday. So the night before I did my own project, it wasn't very difficult. Like most storms, the wind shield fogs up and I need to put on some heat to prevent this. I was going to go to the Gamestore at around 4PM, but I wanted to be sure what I was going to spend my money on. Later today, I might invest money into a Genesis version 3. I don't know but I might get Shinobi II Revenge of Shinobi. Genesis is 40 bucks anyways. I already have copies of that popular hedgehog trilogy for Gamecube. Sonic on Nintendo – this isn't right – did Sega finally sell out? Ya, it may have been a bit of a culture shock when he first appeared on Gamecube though. At least I know I had to stare at the box for 10 minutes first time I saw it. I guess I could also buy Contra Hard Corps or Alien Soldier at Toyriific. Still have to decide whether or not I want to support a 12th platform or not. I was thinking of owning that "other" 16-bit platform even before I bought SNES earlier this year – but because I favored Mario over Sonic, it sorta reversed my final decision. Why do I pick Genesis after all these years you ask? Different games and Sega published games for that matter. I could just as easily spend money on the other 11 platforms I have. In fact, I doubt I'll go forth with owning a 12th platform this month.

I thought this would be a great topic for today. The topic is can anyone imagine a videogame console without Japanese animation? Even Xbox has it. Today, I had a discussion with my cousin via MSN Messenger. He normally doesn't like to run the discussion so I have too or there would be no discussion. David is in the Navy and he's in Japan (14 hours ahead of me) I asked him "Why does Japanese imports always have anime or hendrai" in them?" He wouldn't ask that. I say anime look bad. Okay? Metal Gear Solid is based on Solid Snake, a commando anime character with attitude. So the plot is why are these Japanese culture-related "R" films or "M" games have animation that look similar to Pokemon or Sailor Moon? I do understand that it all started with Astro Boy in the 1960s until the mid-80s when it exploded. In Game Informer Magazine, half the page contents are focused on anime or hendrai themed games of some sort. America should be against this. To most people it's just another form of animation. To me it's the Japanese imposters trying to over-throw the American game industry and who knows what else. They are – seriously! They want all of the game industry to belong to them! We must boycott Japanese imports. It's bad enough we have G4-TECHTV showing their Anime Unleashed block 4 hours every day (I was a fan of TechTV, not G4-TechTV), but then why is Metal Gear Solid 2 so popular then? I don't completely know why computer geeks like anime? MGS2's game play is better than 95 % of games out there on PS2, and it's voice acting is unmatched from what I read off IGN. Solid Snake sounds very professional. It does sound like a Hollywood film. I can say this because I own the game too. My cousin got me because I told him to download Cowboy Bebop episodes off Kazaa. The truth is I haven't seen that on Cartoon Network for months and forgot all about it. Really - I did! I know many of you could care less about which I should do, but I either support Japanese animation or am I totally against the whole thing? I want to say I'm against it, but I would loose all my RPGs that I play off and on. I'm an anime hater RPG fan that plays Japanese imports anyway. See, I'm not afraid to admit it. For some strange reason I like Dead or Alive Extreme Beach Volleyball. In this case "graphics" has double meaning. The game is technically advance over 90 % of console games out there, and there are virtual babes on the scene, but nothing to wet my pants over. I would only wet my pants when Half-life 2 comes out – oh yeah - I almost did when I first ran Doom 3 on my home PC. Agree with the extreme polygon ratios – damn, it's like 300 % that of any PS2 game. Yes, it's true if I set it too near MAX everything. But still though – no one can deny Doom 3 is currently state-of-the-art in graphics and a step ahead of 9 out of 10 games out for PC today.

I'm trying to imagine PS2 without anime or hendrai would be like:

Erasing all RPGS off the system including Final Fantasy, Star Ocean, Grandia, Nippin Inchi titles, Suideoken games, Kingdom Hearts, Dark Cloud, Tales of Destiny, .Hack, Xenosaga, Shin Megami Tensei games, Shadow Hearts

No Devil May Cry

No Castlevania

No Dead or Alive 2

No Soul Caliber 2

No Resident Evil games

No Zone of the Enders

No Front Mission

No Fatal Frame franchise

No Virtua Fighter

No Shinobi

No Nightshade

No ridge racer

No Tekken

And then trying to imagine Xbox without anime or hendrai would be like:

Erasing all the 3D fighting games

No Panzer Dragoon games

No beach volleyball games from Tecmo

No Japanese games whatsoever and there aren't that many to begin with My second discussion about this was when David and I use to play Sonic 2 and Jungle Strike on Sega Genesis. I bought him Sonic 3D Blast for his birthday which means we played within a year of the next generation consoles' debut. I know now that Sonic 3D Blast was the worst Sonic game ever name. Oops. I was a little confused because I saw Genesis version 3 on the shelf so as a kid I didn't realize that Saturn, N64, or Playstation were out. I know Genesis has been died for 8 years – some say 10 years ever since Sega brought Saturn to stores. This was before I owned any electronic game console of my own. This is SEGA though. I told him that if SEGA made a Dreamcast 2, I would buy it. That's the climax. Now SEGA games are scattered across 5 platforms (PS2, Gamecube, Xbox, Gameboy Advance, Nokia N-gage) In 1999 and 2000, he and I played Dreamcast like most would normally play Playstation 2. I was shocked that Dreamcast would be short lived. In fact, I was going to buy the successor to Dreamcast if there ever was one.

I found out some interesting polls on which console is better:

PC Engine place 1st

Xbox place 2nd

PS2 place 3rd

Gamecube place 4th

For Xbox, the best thing that it has a hard drive to store game saves and the worst is the bulky controller. 75 % of the poll suggests that the Xbox controller is too big to play on and the Gamecube controller is very oddly configured. The real answer here is how to make a controller as close as the PS2 controller (Dual Shock 2) without getting into a law suit with Sony. The biggest disadvantage of PS2 is that it's graphical GIGA-FLOP power, but the best advantage is the variety of good games out for it. To give you an idea of how much 1 gigaflop is – the Dreamcast could do a maximum of 1.2 Gigaflops like in games Quake III Arena, Sonic Adventure 2, Grandia 2 or Skies of Arcadia that really show the consoles abilities. The PS2 can do about 6 gigaflops. Gamecube's advantage is often seen that it comes out with the best 1st party titles of the 3 competitors. The worst part is that it can not play movies which are totally out of whack since the Panasonic Q DOES exist, and this wouldn't be the case if the most wasn't referring to the norm. PC Engine is preferred to the best because it has the most games (which is kind of unfair in this sense) I would think that this answer is illegal although it is true according to a few polls on the net.

The way I see it is I'm never buying new again. Used Xboxes are not only less expensive, they come with the previous user's game saves most of the time. The only time I should buy new is if I collect them and want an unopened Xbox to show off when it is antique. I buy to play it – not for showcase. Therefore, buying used doesn't bother me.

This is Ian signing off.

Bought a Genesis today at Toyriffic (2004-10-03 14:34)

I bought a Sega Genesis today. Added more old school to my collection. This so happens to be today's topic. Let's see, I asked a Toyriffic personnel and Super Nintendo was bigger than Genesis. Genesis also had a bigger life by 1 ½ years as many people know. Sega's main mascot was Alex the Kidd before Sonic was became their big mascot. Yes, according to him, Super Nintendo was THE top competitor in the 16-bit era. Sega was 2nd best until 1993 when Sega pulled ahead for a bit, probably because they released Sonic 3 and Shinobi 3. For 100 dollars I got a Sega Genesis version 3 in good condition, Contra Hard Corps, Contra III, and Sonic 3. For 10 more dollars, I could have gotten a 2nd X-Box. The thought passed my mind at home and than again when I'd got back home. Toyriffic didn't have Shinobi I, II, or III. O-well. All I wanted was Contra Hard Corps. I knew what I was getting because luckily I had the ROM. It's pretty good game I think. For some reason I got farther on CHC on the emulator then playing with a Genesis controller. I hope I got a Genesis for the right reasons and not just to add more games to my collection. Yes, I was playing Contra Hard Corps for 3 hours after I got home. The sad part is there is no one I can share my opinions on any of my games. I feel really bad about it.

Here are the conditions of the Sega Genesis and software:

1. Genesis – condition 8 out of 10 – no problems playing the games although the RF input has to be tight against the console for anything to show for some reason. Some scratches too.
2. Sonic 3 – condition 7/10 – This has been a rental game, but it was free with purchase, game works great though, but looks like it's been played a lot.
3. Contra Hard Corps – condition 7.5/10 – also a rental game when I bought it. Plays well. It looks like for Hard Corps – the publisher Konami, manufactured the game as well. Cost 16 dollars
4. Contra 3 – condition 9.0 – looks very nice – no visible scratches on the cartridge, but the sticker looks slightly worn around the edges. 25 dollars.

I learned that the prequel to Contra 3 wasn't Hard Corps, but called C2 – Contra for Super NES. The original was published for NES. The later games for Playstation and PS2 aren't very good, but the originals are a lot better. I don't hate my decision though.

Games I want for Genesis are:

1. Gunstar Heroes (side shooter made by Treasure which makes one of the top 5 games out for Saturn, Radiant Silvergun, a very hard game to find)
2. Alien Soldier (side shooter made by Treasure after Gunstar Heroes was released)

I saw Shadow Hearts Covenant at the Toyriific. I really wanted it, but decided to go forth with my Genesis purchase. For some reason, it wasn't at Target or could have been sold out. I might buy this next time because I'm into RPGs. I read the reviews and I usually trust IGN or Gamefaqs and learned that this game is a dramatic improvement over Shadow Hearts. The RPG takes place in an alternate 1911 at the beginning of World War I. It's based on anime (which I don't think I support – but it's got an awesome weapon system from what I hear). I don't know much about it except some people say that it's one of the best RPGs out for PS2. This is hard to except because I haven't heard about this game coming out until it was out.

There is another game called Sly 2 I want but it's not as important as SHC. I'm getting a little old for platform games although this one is truly as good as the best which is Ratchet and Clank. I got far in Ratchet 1, haven't played Ratchet 2 though which is too bad. The first game was very fun until I got stuck - it probably was very simple too. I deleted the game save so it may be too much trouble to start over.

Will the top game for PS2 always be Final Fantasy X or Madden Football 2005 long after PS2 is dead? Square-soft always comes out with a better Final Fantasy every year with better visuals, better game play, iffy music (review sites say it's better when in fact SNES had some of the best tunes), but to make up for it - breathtaking FMV and fully voiced in-game cutscenes. I only completed Final Fantasy X one time through and played half time through 2 times. It was really good, and the ending was alright for anime, but I don't think I will play it again for another year. We might see Final Fantasy XIII on Microsoft Xenon as well as Playstation 3, but it's only a rumor ever since Square-Enix announced a game in development for Project Xenon. There has been new news according to Gameindustry.biz the Xbox technology team is developing a heavily modified Virtual PC X86 emulator so that it would emulate XBOX games and is great news for future Xbox 2 owners. If Xbox 2 becomes a hit (MS states that their in this for long term), the development team labor and research will more than pay for itself.

MRAM to replace dynamic RAM in 7 years! (2004-10-05 14:34)

We know how that computer technology is advancing rapidly. In fact, it was nearly a year ago I got almost the fastest computer out with a monster GPU along with it. Now there is two ways I can go with this – the super computer route or the consumer route. I decided to go the consumer route partly because I already wrote an entry on Super Computers. It's not how fast computers are getting as much as how small you can get them. The most obvious thing is lap tops – a miniature desktop computer. I mean I've seen this neck and neck. Laptops now come with a Pentium 4 at 3GHz and 1 GB of RAM which was pretty much how fast my XPS was a year ago. Computers soon are used in videogame consoles. In 2000, a PS2 essentially had to raw data processing power of a 800 MHz Intel Pentium 3 CPU. The Xbox actually uses a modified Pentium 3 at 733 MHz, 64 MB of SDRAM, and a 128-bit Geforce 3 to power its graphics. The Xbox costs less than the less technically superior Playstation 2 (it was 3 before LOL!). I don't think a shelved Geforce 3 had a 128-bit cache in it besides the Xbox version. PC graphics surpassed Xbox graphics in summer 2002.

- Best New Technology of 2004 -

MRAM (Magnetic Random Access Memory) This one I find the most interesting. This RAM uses magnets to store large amounts of data in its memory banks temporary which of course is good for graphics applications. This will soon make electronic pulse SDRAM and RDRAM obsolete. It also has better power usage making this RAM more efficient than SDRAM or RDRAM. I don't know if MRAM is made for Super computers now-a-days or what's the case. Super Computers would benefit for this new RAM and be able to do a lot more in less time. Wikipedia states that MRAM will start appearing in home PCs in 2005. Remember this is only the first generation. Two months away – I remember when it was mid 2003 and I got out of high school. Maybe my next PC should have 1 GB of MRAM in it?

Basic Advantages:

1. Boot up computers without BIOS boot-up processes (which isn't that big of deal)
2. Because it's very cheaply made, MRAM will be so small current technology in PCs will not be able to compete very well from what the net says
3. In the works for 30 years
4. First successful MRAM chip built in 1998
5. Major leap from Dynamic RAM
6. Random Access Memory based on the same technology used of DVDs and CDs only they are ROM or read only memory.
7. First Generation can store 128 GB/sec and 40 MB per/second
8. Beats the crap out of SDRAM technology so badly it's not even funny anymore.
9. Probably will be 1 to 2 years before products start using magnetic technology
- 10.) First Generation will use .18 micron technology.

Just think about Magnetic memory – think in the future you can burn data to a magnetic circular media more advanced than DVD (like a hard drive) only saved concretely. Okay for the average person – it would like a 10,000x DVD-RW drive. Pretty cool huh? That would make your portable DVD player have twice the battery life. Some people disagree with it. MRAM seems very cool and all but it takes 6 seconds to boot up my computer if you count at a normal pace and not really fast. Much like the issue with Playstation 3 I think the only reason I'll need CDs in 3 years is if I want to play older games. Unreal Tournament 2004, Doom3, The Sims 2 come on DVD now and there is hardly any slow down playing DVDs on DVD-ROM vs. playing CDs on DVD-ROM. By the time that most games are on DVD format, everyone will have DVD-ROM faster than 8x reading speed which is the minimum anyone would want to read game discs.

One thing I don't understand about MRAM is that every computer today needs a BIOS to recognize optimal drives, hard drives and operating systems, PS2 ports, video card.

In an MRAM chip, only a small amount of electricity is needed to store bits of data. This small amount of electricity switches the polarity of each memory cell on the chip. A memory cell is created when wordlines (rows) and bitlines (columns) on a chip intersect. Each one of these cells stores a 1 or a 0, representing a piece of data. MRAM promises to combine the high speed of static RAM (SRAM), the storage capacity of DRAM and the non-volatility of Flash memory.

- 2nd best computer technology of 2004 -

BD disc (Blu-Ray) – This new media can store up to 25 GB on one side. However, if it's dual layered than it can store 50 GB. This new technology is developed by Sony and Panasonic and a 1x BDRW can burn 36 MB / second. First customer device with this new technology probably will be Playstation 3. The discs can be made cheaper than DVDs and the drives can read data 10 times as fast. Single layer "BDs" will come in 23.3GB, 25 GB and 27 GB storages. It looks like 23.3 GB disc will be the most common amongst PC drives to prevent piracy of 25 GB and 27 GB BDs. Besides compression wise - I bet anyone could fit 25 GBs worth of data on a single 23.3 GB BD. The PS3 will use a Blu-ray drive to run it's software. This doesn't mean that all games have to be on BD and can continue to support DVDs like Xbox and PS2 have done for 4 years. These high priced BDs are already out.

X

I found interesting news also on BD movie's video-codec. Since BD-ROM players will be unique might as well support a new video codec as well. This new codec is called VC-1 and it's developed by Microsoft. It's suppose to be as compressed as DIVX or XVID except all quality will be very high resolution. It will do a better job at compressing high def video than MPEG 4 probably can. BDs can be made less expensively than DVDs are, but knowing that techicially they hold much more than DVDs - BDs will sell twice as much at Best Buy or CompUSA whereas online stores can sell them a bit cheaper. BDs are coming out next year to the masses! Yay!

One thing I did do is update I.Q.B. to version 2.0.6 which I worked on October 08th. As usual I like to search Google for Xbox 2 specs impressions. I already know the real specs were leaked onto the Internet since June. One thing is true – Microsoft likes to loose money on CPUs because a 3.5 GHz CPU will cost them a lot of money. My point is I've bought 25 games for my Xbox and even though 2/3 of them were pre-owned, I probably paid Microsoft their debt to make my Xbox with new games. I bought Fable, Rallisport Challenge 2, and Tony Hawk Underground totaling 120 dollars when I bought them new.

Well here are some Photoshop concept art of Xbox 2 and Nintendo Revolution I found off various places so I shrunk them into a much smaller size and posted them on my server.

Is Nintendo Nitro the official name for Project Revolution? It's only a rumor, but it's funny because I mentioned "Nitro" as a possible Xbox 2 name in my "Will Videogames play PC games?" post about a month ago. It originally was supposed to be the 'real' name for Nintendo Dual Screen. Strangely, I've gotten 145 hits within a month on that entry. Not to common for me. Something about that post must interest people. I'm guessing they all want to see my 'real' videogame collection images, but I'm not sure since the title was about pc games playing on videogame consoles. I posted something 5 months ago listing every videogame I have and it since then became the most popular post on my blog.

Share your comments on this MRAM deal or comment how realistic the Xbox 2 photoshop art is. I think the concept is really cool. I like the second picture.

Hi just wanted to give you a brief heads up and let you know a few of the pictures aren't loading correctly. I'm not sure why but I think its a linking issue. I've tried it in two different browsers and both show the same outcome.

Day at Randy's (2004-10-09 14:35)

Howdy! I'm back with more small chatter. This articles main topic is how fun it was at Randy's house. First of all I wanted to burn him a Sims 2 DVD. I thought well I enjoyed it why not let him enjoy it as well. Graphics were really good. You can make out the character's faces. Textures are nice. I had the burn speed on 1x which was a little bummer for me. Didn't notice it until the DVD was 60 % done. Burn process took almost an hour to do. It soon was dark out because we live in the upper atmosphere of the world when it almost snows. Right now it's too warm to snow - but give it 2 or 3 weeks and it will. Nights get down to around 60 degrees. Randy had his girlfriend over. He asked me when I was getting one. I answered, "I really didn't need one." I was going to say my girlfriend is my computer, man. Sometime crazy like that, but I didn't. His girlfriend asked something stupid (she didn't think so) "So are you going to play football or NFL?" she asks. She was talking about Soccer because she knew I was brought soccer over.) She calls soccer - football and football - NFL. And I answered, "This is the US we call football soccer" Then she said, "No it's football." My point is I called her stupid. She's only a high school student. Who ever doesn't know what soccer is must be stupid. She got confused and I felt guilty so I apologized calling her stupid. Anyways, we played ESPN Football 2K5. Randy agreed with me that ESPN Football 2K5 had better graphics, better music selection, and tighter controls than Madden 2005. He even likes the cheer leaders in my game than in Madden 2004. The cheerleaders were a bit more detailed and all of them were wearing mini-skirts which gave them the "edge". There is nothing like low-poly cheerleaders in a football game to make you pissed off. They also, to my surprise, do a lot of movement with their cheerleader dance—thing they do. Score one for Sega for even caring! The control is really good although my friend doesn't think so.

After ESPN, I put in Winning Eleven Soccer 7 for PS2. It's supposed to be the best soccer game in existence. EA Sports franchise may have gotten into the Guinness's Book of World Records as most realistic 3D soccer simulation, but I have to disagree on this footnote. WES7 is pretty much makes FIFA (EA Sports) look small compared to it's superior graphics. Xbox owners never fear - Winning Eleven 8 International is coming to Xbox as well as PS2. The Xbox controllers have less buttons than the Dual Shock controller which might be a problem. WES is made by Konami and published by Konami. I played him and the first game was really cool. He scored a goal in the first half (Argentina) against me (England) and I scored on his goalie in the 2nd half in which we didn't score in the first or second overtimes. He's mastered the goalie shootout and beat me more times. Interesting enough mine kept hitting the goal post in which it should of when it...meh. But all is good! The game did this on purpose because I had the joystick all the way right for this too happen. Never happened to Randy. After Soccer, we watched Final Fantasy: The Spirits Within. Randy never seen this movie. He doesn't even like RPGs. He thought the movie was good though. Only cost me 10 bucks at the Toyriific. I told him that it's like Final Fantasy 10 FMV for 1.5 hours. Didn't answer. There is a lot of razzle dazzle in the game! Like the Japs say it razzal dazzle. I read some reviews and the reviews all basically say that the movie comes from a game and has no real story. The animation is meant to look real – which if it was that case they would use real actors right? Wrong! This is a technical achievement – would have one Academy Award for special effects if most movie critics hated it. They didn't see it was way ahead of it's time – just like 2001: A Space Odyssey. Instead they gave the awards to Shrek, a kid's movie. Three years after the film was made, Shrek and Shrek II come close but not beyond The Spirits Within. Yet I can see that it's not a brilliant movie and has it's flaws – it's a fantasy movie like the name applies. Maybe Final Fantasy means (fantasy adventure) at the end of phantom's existence. Squaresoft actually used Maya (which is a modeling program), and applied the highest resolution models to this movie. The movie was staffed by 100s of character design talent, background artists, movie script people, etc. At least Square didn't have to pay the actors as much to voice act the whole movie. The voice acting was done in a studio like any cartoon. (watch the screen and speak at the same time – really this is how it's done) The graphics engine if you will is Square Picture's graphics engine is called "Scooby" (like Scooby-Doo) or "SQuare Batch Processing." Most character's averaged out about 300,000 polygons. And most interesting to me is probably the most obvious is the programmers used American (white and black people) instead of Asian. The game takes place in post World War III in year 2065. World War III wasn't a fight against man or territory, but instead the existence of man as a species.

If you techies find this interesting I found this off Arstchnica which had an exclusive technical discussion about the film in general.

The movie technical specs :

- Number of Sequences = 36
- Number of Shots = 1,336
- Number of Layers = 24,606
- Number of Final Renders (Assuming that > everything was rendered once) = 2,989,318
- Number of Frames in the Movie = 149,246
- o Average number of shots per sequence = 37.11
- o Average number of rendered layers per shot = 18.42
- o Average number of frames per shot = 111.71
- o Estimated average number of render revisions = 5
- o Estimated average render time per frame = 90 min
- Shot with the most layers = (498 layers)
- Shot with the most frames = (1899 frames)
- Shot with the most renders [layers * frames] = (60160 renders)
- Sequence with the most shots = (162 shots)
- Sequence with the most layers = AIR (4353 layers)
- Sequence with the most frames = (13576 frames)

"Using the raw data (not the averages) it all adds up to 934,162 days of render time on one processor. Keep in mind that we had a render farm with approximately 1,200 procs."

Another Interesting note in the movie making is to turn off all the hot pixels, the whole film went through a "smoothing process" eliminating artifacts (what ever they are) from the film. Pixar (which created Toy Story, Finding Nemo, Monster's Inc for Walt Disney) has it's part in this movie as well. Pixar actually let Square use their software,

"Renderman", to help render the movie. I couldn't imagine how powerful the processing movie they needed to render the movie.

Anyway, I read Randy like a book. He wanted to beat me in all those games and say that he was better than I. I, of course, attempted to prove him wrong. Hey, I wonder since it's a CGI movie that it'll automatically look better when it's released on HD-DVD, which is going to start appearing in 2005. What's stunning about Final Fantasy - The Spirits Within is Square-soft broke even on production at Home Box Office and DVD/ VHS sales. They didn't make as much money as they would-have hoped, but a profit none-the-less! Finally, what I agree with the film is the film isn't realistic. You're talking about computer animation not real life. It's a cartoon really. Cartoons move and talk like humans too. This is just a very high resolution life-like computer animated movie that acts and feels like Earth AD 2065! Ever watch Titan AE? AE stands for "After Earth." That was an animated film also based on futuristic Earth although the movie was animated (I call it American Anime or Western Anime), it did have computer generated background effects with it.

His computer was down - it was in a sense, a worthless piece of crap. The OS had boot-up errors. He wants his OS up and running and it has the blue screen of death on after the Windows boot logo. AKA someone's been deleted System files O _o. Randy won't admit it though. Randy's computer data is screwed - but he thinks there is a way out. I told him there is a way He won't tell me what happened. I told him I could get it too work for him. He's a stubborn little fella. I wanted to help get his data back. Secret...KNOPPIX :)

Xenon first screenshots revealed! (2004-10-11 14:36)

Hey, everybody! Today is October and the leaves are changing color - yet, I do not see neighbors very well, therefore, it must not be Fall yet. I believe fall is when all of the leaves start turning color. That means we all have to add 1 hour to your clocks. Anyways, the first Xenon images are leaked! It seems that Microsoft will hold their unrevealing of "Code: Xenon" to the world at the Game Developer's Conference 2K5. As you can see, the new first batch of Xbox 2 titles look very similar to movies - like mine almost, but has great cost. My computer cost $2300 and Microsoft will sell Xbox 2 at approximately $300. My point is for playing games - you get a great deal on technology here. It's true everyone. Either spend money on a high end processor, 512 MB of dual channel RAM and a 256-bit Radeon 9800 XT or Geforce 5900 FX (your pick) or buy the simple "insert disc in console and play" Xbox 2. Most people like consoles for this reason. I am unique in that I own all the consoles and a nice PC. The gamer who likes to spend all his money in one place may like to choose one console every generation. The average gamer has about 10 games for his gaming platform. Serious gamers may have twice to three times that much. Most people would be buying every new Playstation on the market every 5 years. Let me tell you a story:

The year was 1999 and N64 is nearing the end of it's life. Much hype talk about owning a Playstation 2 is about both in cyber space and the real world. Then Sega announces the Dreamcast which is coming out in 3 months to be precise 9/9/99. It has four worthy launch titles, Sonic Adventure, Soul Caliber and Sega Rally Championship 2, and NFL 2K. Of course, the Dreamcast came out in December 98 in Japan. So knowing that it'll have 3D Sonic the Hedgehog in high-res (at the time looked pretty spectacular) – I go out and buy a Dreamcast for 199 dollars at Toys R US with a copy of Sonic Adventure. Back when our computer was a Pentium-133 piece of crap, I was aching for some high resolution games – and Christmas was coming up fast. I said to myself, "I know what I want – maybe I can buy a Dreamcast for myself than ask for a PC for Christmas." If I remember correctly, in September 1999, AMD just came out with their 'powerful' Athlon Thunderbird Processor that could do high-res with the 16-bit video card and 128-MB SDRAM.

Micron P-133

Windows 95

16 MB of SDRAM

Pentium Classic @ 133 MHz

5 GB hard drive

Compaq Presario 5900z (state-of-the-art at the time)

Windows 98SE

128 MB of SDRAM

Athlon Thunderbird @ 650 MHz

20 GB hard drive

Nvidia Geforce 256 16-MB GPU

At the time, I couldn't imagine how I was going to fill up 20 Gigs of space (every game back then was only on 1 CD). I soon got everything I wanted on it with space left over. To my surprise, Unreal Tournament ran in high resolution. It didn't look quite as good as Dreamcast, but was quite close. Then 2 years later right before I got an updated Compaq Presario with better hardware, I bought myself a Gamecube. The only reason why I got a Gamecube was a found out that Dreamcast was dead around that time.

Second discussion is how fun videogames are to buy – but it's even better if I buy it a year after they come out. I save 65 % most of the time on those games. That might force most budget conscience people to get 1 console and 5 games at the most for it. Playing games is just to pass the time...and the game doesn't even need to be the best of the best to be fun. Then there are those "Oh my God! I have to have this game" customers whom buy several times a month to get the next best game everyone else is playing. This month it's Fable for Xbox owners. Fable was supposed to be that Revolutionary Xbox RPG 4 years in the making that's suppose to be the #1 RPG for Xbox. Even though it's #1, Fable hasn't quite met that revolutionary status given too it by many magazines and websites 2 years back.

I believe those people who want "the next best game" finally realize that those games can be easily attainable 8 months later at a Game Stop for only $20 or less. There is me, whom is more apart of the online community who only buys the best games available (by review score) so that he/she can discuss the game online with friends on message boards or Gamefaqs.com. At least that is the way I see it. The bad turnout is those people are usually run out of spending money really fast.

I'd finally had a chance to play Super Mario RPG. Okay, it's not the first time. The graphics are really good though. No complaint there. It seems simple compared to RPGs of today (Final Fantasy X, Xenosaga, Grandia, Tales of Symphonia). I hear that most of the game's most talented artists keep everything simple such as it was with Super Mario RPG. Being simple can sometimes outweigh the complicated which is why retro gaming is making a come back and is which why I bought a NES, SNES and Genesis within the last year. I thought I would have loads of fun playing the games in their original form. I was sorta right. It was fun for a while – but it didn't last like I thought it would. I still have this image in my head that newer is always better which in most cases is true – new is better!

I am going to continue with my third discussion. I was reading a little on FIFA and it stands for Federation International Football Association. It has "football" in the name. As I spoken in my last entry there are several footballs, Chinese football, our football, soccer, and probably another one. Okay, let's take the obvious two, football and soccer. FIFA Game Rule History

The NFL rules have never changed since the early 1980s when football didn't have salary caps and the rule that football players had to have more protection. This is killing me to announce this, but the perception of football is contact sport. In elementary school all kids wore those stupid belts with plastic strips to pull off. This was also used in capture the flag, but it basically took the contact out of football. I don't know if schools keep doing it – but it would ensure no injury amongst students. Recess could be played with a standard football, knowing the rules weren't as necessary as knowing which way to run. Score a touchdown was always the focus. I never played the game during recess.

Here is Wikipedia's definition of American Football:

"American football, known in the United States as simply football, is a competitive team sport that rewards players' speed, agility, tactics, and brute strength as they push, block, tackle, chase, and outrun each other, trying to force a ball further into their opponent's territory for one hour of game time, which translates into three to four hours of real time."

For people who aren't in the USA here are the top organizations: NFL (professional football), NCAA Football (college football), NFL-Europe (pro football in Europe)

Here is Wikipedia's definition of soccer or football (whichever you prefer):

"Football is a ball game played between two teams of 11 players, each attempting to win by scoring more goals than their opponent. A goal results when the ball passes over the goal line between the goalposts and under the crossbar. Football is played predominantly with the feet, but players may use any part of their body except their hands and arms to propel the ball. The goalkeeper is the only member of the team allowed to handle the ball in the field of play."

Yeah, I know - there is no need for examples but here they are anyways for good posture: MLS (American Pro Soccer/football), FIFA (international football), Canadian Soccer Association and 50 more.

Finally, my fourth discussion - about the new axis of evil. I haven't visited a Russian news site for a long while so I just thought I check out their national issues. They are the largest country in the world. 900 years of conquering territory must have its positive turn-outs – but sooner or later they got what was coming to them (a revolution, a civil war against Georgia, and a lot of confused citizens all in a 14 year period). Pravda.ru states "USA declares Russia, Iran, and North Korea as the new axis of evil." I would think that the site is not happy with that. See in Russia - there is a Communist party and Democratic/Republican party running for president each election. If the communist party gains the President of Russia title, the country will turn into the USSR for 5 years, but if the democratic/republican party win the title - all is good. That's one of Russia's key problems. Russia is known as an Industrial Federation Republic. It was once an Industrial Socialist Republic. Ya, I don't think Russia could go through with it – they enjoy all the “free trade with other countries” benefits too much to go back to their old ways. If the communist party won the next presidential election, the first thing to go would be everyone’s Internet privileges. Russia’s also troubled by US’s interests in “securing” nuclear ballistic missiles left over from the USSR. They don’t agree nor disagree with the friendly proposal. If you haven’t heard about it on the news this week, our government key worries is to disarm every nuclear ballistic missile on Earth that’s outside the USA. Doing our part would be to disarm half of existing nuclear ballistic missiles in our country. This would be simple if not for the fact that we have 10 times as many as the Russians do. All these missiles are underground surrounded by 20 inch thick reinforce concrete. Radiation wouldn’t get very far and worst case scenario could result in contaminated water and soil within 50 miles radius. The missiles transported by truck receive full military escort and are tracked by global positioning.

FFVII Dirge of Ceberus | Square’s new PC MMORPG (2004-10-17 14:37)

One of the reasons I haven’t posted in 5 days was study time at home. I have 3 tests to study for – 2 are retakes so I can either not do well or do well. Friday I was playing Star Ocean 3 all day. It’s Square-Enix’s newest game. I’m at the beginning of the 3rd chapter. I have a review up at IQB. I find it interesting to see Square-Enix developing another RPG for PC and it’s called Final Earth. Final Earth looks like a space saga that’s online and is going to be another Freelancer. The only question about it is if I have to pay to play. Even then, I’ll buy it because than I can say I have it. They are also making a PC game called Junk Metal.

Speaking on Square-Enix, they are apparently developing a Final Fantasy 7 action game. You mix Devil May Cry and Final Fantasy 7 to get a game called Dirge of Cerberus: Final Fantasy VII. Officially the first Final Fantasy to not be a RPG is amazing in itself. Does Square-Enix even know how to make a good action game? Maybe, but it’ll require additional help. What would be cool is if Dante guest-starred in it. It’s just that Final Fantasy characters starred in Kingdom Hearts. I admit it was cool, but Cloud Strife as nothing to do with Squall Lionheart much less Disney characters. It’s propaganda at it’s best. And why was Cloud Strife working for the lord of the underworld, Hades? What’s next? Mario an unlockable character in the next installment of Metal Gear Solid? I got something totally wacky which might be true someday: Sonic the Hedgehog, Knuckles, Tails, Mario, Luigi, Browser and Dr. Robotnic in the same game! Perhaps Super Smash Bros 3 - The ultimate SEGA/Nintendo videogame!!! Wait, I got another one.... Capcom vs. Nintendo exclusive for Gamecube. If you don’t know what I’m talking about – think “Marvel vs. Capcom” and you’ll see what I mean.

Okay, impressions of Dirge of Cerberus. Where to start? The character animation is a rip off of Devil May Cry for one thing. I can’t remember but I think the main character was a bad guy in Final Fantasy VII. This spin off is going to be a disaster - I just know it. They have the ability to push out maximum polygons rates out of the PS2, but they don’t have experience making any kind of action/shooting games.

I found out the Half-life 2 release date is on my birthday! Half-life 2 is coming in a special DVD edition. Half-life 2 is such a highly anticipated game that everyone is getting this game (It’ll be the next best selling computer game of all time) Only 13 more days!

Concerning my writing style for those who view this as making little sense. I write 90 percent of the time according to what I view off the web browser in chronological order. So since I read a lot of material off game message boards (not writing in them) on Fridays, Saturdays, and Sundays, I usually have a discussion on videogames because there is no other way to express how I sit in front of a computer monitor all day except just that – sit in a chair and read material. I don't care what other people think – but this is fun too me. I am finding it difficult to talk about games to people. See, where I live, people I know are PC gamers and I'm a console gamer primarily who so happens to have a pretty awesome PC too. A good example of this is Thursday at WITC. The class was going on a field trip 20 miles away in Osceola, Wisconsin. The field trip was going to be pretty cool, but I didn't make it. It so happens that there was a guy playing Unreal Tournament. Someone else asked what this game is, and I say, "It's Unreal Tournament!" This wouldn't be so out of case other than I was absolutely right. Apparently the person playing I was undecided if I liked or not. I couldn't keep my eyes away from the monitor. I don't know his name, but he was playing the hardest setting on UT. This plain and simple states he out-performs me in his ability to kill bots. I tried not to ask to play. I knew what the answer was from the expression on his face, "NO!" Plus, I could always play UT2004 when I got home plain and simple. UT2004 is an awesome game you can quote me on that. So the words that came out of my mouth is, "I have this game at home" This states two things: I know exactly how the game is played because I obviously played it myself and #2 I know exactly what he meant by the "graphics are beautiful" because they were beautiful in 1999. Both those things are true. I always wanted to be in a local area network party like the Xbox LAN party I went to 2 weeks ago. Did you know that Xbox can interface with one cross-over cable with another Xbox or bus topology? It's a lot faster than using a 10/100 Base T hub. I didn't know that. Going there was a bummer. I knew no one there and yes, they were playing Halo with 2 networked Xboxes on two TVs. I managed to kill someone twice, but then the game was over and they didn't want me to play again. I was also scared away from the fact that I wasn't any good at the game. I shall not get into this.

On too real life stuff - Yesterday, I was really happy that I didn't throw away my 120 dollar sound card away when the sound stopped working. Windows did something to the sound driver last installation. Now it works no problem. The sound card is a Creative Labs Sound Blaster Audigy 2 Pro. It has 24 channels of digital audio. I can hear an instant sound boost over my last sound card.

Bob and I haven't seen each other for a while. Bob is one of my closest friends. He likes heavy metal. Last time Bob and I met, I went over to his apartment and played a lot of games. The gang was playing Madden Football 2001. I watched and when I played, I was easily overmatched. He said he got a new AMD Seperion 2.0 GHz Processor with motherboard and RAM. It's faster than his old Athlon that gave him problems. I feel bad about the fact that he won't invest into a new hard drive. 20GBs isn't enough to store half of everything he wants. It's just enough for his OS and MP3 collection with a little left over for miscellaneous. He still will not answer his phone.

Why the f don't people come to my page? (2004-10-20 14:38)

It's been difficult to come up with something lately. And why the fuck doesn't anyone come here anymore. I waste all this time trying to gather information in my brain and no one comes! I promoted a good amount of time on this page. And I can't be because I'm average because I already know that. I can list many things that make my life boring. First, all my friends are doing different things. Another is there is nothing new to do except a few new videogames which I don't have enough time to play. It's a lot of studying for tests and stuff. Show your symphony because I know none of you care. All you bloggers care about is facts....Internet news...and political events....not personal life. This must be the reason I do not have hits here anymore. Okay, the technical tidbits you liked a lot, but my personal life no one cares. I was even thinking about just forgetting Modblog all together. Then I realized Modblog isn't the one to blame, they are just a server. My writing is to blame. Well, fuckin' Jesus Christ this makes me real mad.

I tried out this new program 1Click DVD to Divx Avi, and it's the best DVD to MPEG 4 tool I have ever used. There is also 1click DVD Ripper which has more options on it. I don't like to encode video in MPEG2 since video compresses so much better with DivX 5.2.1. Obviously, if you compress video to go through the Internet you may want the compression at the slowest to allow the best compression for your video. I have my settings at 730x440 at 1034 KBPS and LAME audio compression at 192 KBPS. All films are released on a 9.4 GB DVD and I can put 1 hour 8 parts on a single layer DVD plus my DVD burner will only allow me to burn 4.4 GB of data total. I have a little left over so I could up the video to 1213 KBPS to make full the excess 500 MB I had on my last DVD. Every hour averages 680 MB. That's pretty good considering the picture quality is good.

The Red Sox have won against the Yankees and are going to the World Series. It is the only time in professional baseball history that a team have come back in 3 games to be 3 -3. The MN Twins lost against NY Yankees on game 4 about 2 weeks ago in the first playoff series. The Twins lead in the central division and clenched their division title. I may have missed the greatest games ever in whole season play. St Louis Cardinals may beat Houston in the American League thus well have Red Sox vs. Cardinals. Cardinals will win tomorrow!

I missed Homecoming again. Truth about it is its high school and it's in the past - two very good reasons not to go. I haven't been to home coming for 4 years now. I saw it in the newspaper. Too bad though.

Oh and another thing I found this girl who lives by me on the Internet. I was really, really surprised. Here is her personal page. Weblink to Anne's Track and Field Webpage. She hasn't changed too much. What's so important about her? Well, she thought I had crush on her in high school. It's not that way anymore. I'm a technician. She's something else. I haven't seen her in 5 years. I found out in 1997, she went through the Teen University program at the UofW. It looks like she's still in track and field. She started the last year I was at St. Croix Central.

I got some bad news for people wanting to buy a Pentium 4 at a monstrous 4 GHz because that's not going to happen this year. P4s have been out since 2001 and it's nearing 2005 so Intel will start Pentium 5s at 4 GHz. I Think Pentium 4s have been out longer than Pentium 3s or Pentium 2s. The highest MHz you can buy is 3.8 GHz. Intel feels that it can not have a market for 4 GHz and they are right, of course. I only have 3.2 GHz in my computer. It's still great and very reliable although it's a Dell PC. Dells suck, I know, but it was free so I had to take it. Actually, the motherboard, keyboard are made by Dell, everything else is made from 3rd party including ATI (video card), Western Digital (hd) , Creative Labs (soundcard) , Artic (DVD-RW), Samsung (DVD/RW). The mouse is from Logitech. I seriously doubt my keyboard will stop working tomorrow or a year from now.

I'm thinking that Pentium 5 will be 64-bit with a much higher clock speed than Athlon 64. Athlon 64 currently can outperform Pentium 4 in operation cycles. Intel says that it's developing dual cores on a single dye with state-of-the-art technology making manufacturing costs of the "Pentium 5" less costly. Come on everyone - even though it's not officially announced - there will be a Pentium 5 announcement soon.

Okay now for the interesting part that hurts us all. Intel has technology that stays secret like magnetic ram which are more technically advance than Pentium 4s and 64-bit Xeon CPUs. Intel is developing stuff in their labs that will come out in 2015 as quote "state-of-the-art" in consumer terms. I know - it's scaring me too. The point is...they are using our money on their cheap technology. Instead of releasing a 10 GHz Xeon processor that will surely blow everything on the market, Intel decides to release 100 MHz every month which is pitiful. The silly part is about it is we pay big bucks for their fast processor and they know I can't do anything about their strategy waiting until 2008 until they release a 10 GHz processor. They have a 64-bit 10 GHz processor prototype in the final stages and will not mass produce it. It's not crazy - it's the truth. That ensures the company will continue to grow. Doesn't that make you sick? It makes me sick!

I was talking to a former British citizen at Toyriffic. He looks about my age and he's married - which was a little odd. I came there with the agenda of buying either King of Fighters or Marvel vs. Capcom 2. MvC2 is 50 bucks! Last time I was there it was only $20. The King of Fighters '99 Evolution for Dreamcast was $70! So I ended up buying the Playstation version which was only 11 dollars. I believe the difference between the two is the Playstation version ran at 30 fps, and the Dreamcast version ran at 60 fps. So when I got home, I put it in the tray and play. It comes with 32 players to play and the music was 80s rock. I have Fatal Fury - Dance of the Wolves for DC, and that was a prequel to the King of Fighters. It plays a lot like King of Fighters '99 Evolution I can now see. King of Fighters still has that old-school look too it. (mostly a art style done in the mid-90s still used in the 2000s)

X

I spend Thursday night reading The King of Fighters history after I learned that the Neo Geo CD by SNK was the first CD-format console running at 1x. Playstation had a 4x cd-rom in it - a major improvement. What Neo Geo had that Playstation didn't in the early days was Metal Slug and all the King of Fighter games from '94 up to 2001 plus all the Fatal Fury games. All three games made their way to Playstation largely to do to it's the most popular console ever in the history of man kind. For some strange reason, Neo Geo CD is more popular now state-side than it ever was in 1994. One day SNK will release a full anthology of all King of Fighters. Expect SNK will soon re-release all the King of Fighters in the states before the PS3 comes out. They've already did KOF'94 and KOF 2000/2001 two years ago. If you count Dreamcast's KOF '99, that makes 4 games that made it state-side. According to the British retailer back at Toyriffic, KOF '97 was the best of the series because it featured the best game play and graphics. The graphics supported the engine of the KOF '94.

The only other 2D fighters are Viewtiful Joe, Guilty Gear, King of Fighters and the occasional Street Fighter.

New games to add to vg list:

- 1.) King of Fighters '99 Evolution
- 2.) Sly
- 3.) Gradius V

After the game store I spent time playing UT2004. I got at the masterful skill level without ranking at the bottom of the chart. It wasn't pitiful to say the least. The game still has its really high points. If you've been to my IGN page, you've would have seen that I rated UT2004 a 9.9/10 because it's perfect on nearly all levels, and the only thing not perfect is the pc specs it needs to run the game. I have 3 computers that can run it though. Shooting is good way to get the stress off me.

I am going either tomorrow or next week to pick up copies of Guilty Gear X or Guilty Gear X2. I know I can get Guilty Gear Isuka at Shopko, but 50 dollars is a steep price to pay for a 2D fighter even though it looks excellent for a 2D fighter. The guy at the game store said the newest one in the series is a pretty fun game. Sammy makes Guilty Gear and is the same guys who bought out SEGA of JAPAN, SEGA OF AMERICA, SEGA of Europe. That's one reason why Sega stopped making DCs in 2001. Also the piracy has been apparent that the GD-ROMS could be copied. I learned today that GD-ROMS were available for the PC for a short time period thus DC games could be backup to disc images and presto you've gotten yourself a illegal DC game. Chankast makes Dreamcast emulation possible on the PC. In 1999, there were rumors that Xbox was supposed to be backwards compatible with Dreamcast discs, but the rumors were misinterpreted, and Sega was developing games for Xbox.

I feel very aggravated see there are some 3 very high anticipated games coming out on October 25th including Grand Thief Auto San Andreas, re-release of Fatal Frame 2 (the prequel is extremely hard to find now), and Dead or Alive Ultimate. Out of the 3, Fatal Frame will be sold in the least copies. Grand Thief Auto and DoA will sell by the millions so there will always be a used copy available. DOA Extreme Beach Volleyball clearly has a graphics engine that makes every other engine outdated. I suspect the price to be reduced to 20 dollars within February 2005 - March 2005 time period. Anyways, DOA Ultimate looks awesome and will probably be playing the same way as DOA 3 back in 2001. DOA: Ultimate combines Xbox versions of Dead or Alive and Dead or Alive 2: Hardcore and allows all the characters of both games to be played in all the stages first appearing in those games. In fact, I own DOA 2 for Dreamcast, and it's one of the best Dreamcast games that came out in my opinion. The second best 3D fighter that came out for the system at least - next to Soul Caliber. Lots of propaganda like bouncing boobies, female fighters showing more skin than usual, and realistic body movement. Those standard intros and extros by each DOA fighter either victory poses or defeat both of which are great additions.

Other news is I finally played a game I bought last year, Shenmue 2. Shenmue is mostly RPG at it's roots, but also has Virtua Fighter moves built into it. Your weapons are your body unlike swords, axes, mauls, polearms, or magic in dungeons and dragons RPGs the USA is known for. It looked great, played great, but somehow I got Shenmue's back pack stolen within the first 30 minutes. The thieves took it from Shenmue, and I really didn't have time to look for them, didn't know where to start. Some of you may not remember Shenmue 2 on Dreamcast, but it was one of Dreamcast's exceptional titles. Shenmue 2's version of Hong Kong is absolutely huge, and those guys could have been anywhere - that was when I turned my Xbox off.

I remember when the PC RPG universe exploded after Diablo 2 came out. Before 2000, there were few RPGs to buy, now there are 2 new releases every month. No doubt I'm getting Half-life 2 a few days after the launch date, November 16th.

Xenon Hardware Overview

By Pete Isensee, Development Lead, Xbox Advanced Technology Group

This documentation is an early release of the final documentation, which may be changed substantially prior to final commercial release, and is confidential and proprietary information of MS Corporation. It is disclosed pursuant to a nondisclosure agreement between the recipient and MS.

"Xenon" is the code name for the successor to the Xbox® game console from MS. Xenon is expected to launch in 2005. This white paper is designed to provide a brief overview of the primary hardware features of the console from a game developer's standpoint.

Caveats

In some cases, sizes, speeds, and other details of the Xenon console have not been finalized. Values not yet finalized are identified with a "+" sign, indicating that the numbers may be larger than indicated here. At the time of this writing, the final console is many months from entering production. Based on our experience with Xbox, it's likely that some of this information will change slightly for the final console.

For additional information on various hardware components, see the other relevant white papers.

Hardware Goals

Xenon was designed with the following goals in mind:

- Focus on innovation in silicon, particularly features that game developers need. Although all Xenon hardware components are technologically advanced, the hardware engineering effort has concentrated on digital performance in the CPU and GPU.
- Maximize general purpose processing performance rather than fixed-function hardware. This focus on general purpose processing puts the power into the Xenon software libraries and tools. Rather than being hamstrung by particular hardware designs, software libraries can support the latest and most efficient techniques.
- Eliminate the performance issues of the past. On Xbox, the primary bottlenecks were memory and CPU bandwidth. Xenon does not have these limitations.

Basic Hardware Specifications

Xenon is powered by a 3.5+ GHz IBM PowerPC processor and a 500+ MHz ATI graphics processor. Xenon has 256+ MB of unified memory. Xenon runs a custom operating system based on MS® Windows NT®, similar to the Xbox operating system. The graphics interface is a superset of MS® Direct3D® version 9.0.

CPU

The Xenon CPU is a custom processor based on PowerPC technology. The CPU includes three independent processors (cores) on a single die. Each core runs at 3.5+ GHz. The Xenon CPU can issue two instructions per clock cycle per core. At peak performance, Xenon can issue 21 billion instructions per second.

The Xenon CPU was designed by IBM in close consultation with the Xbox team, leading to a number of revolutionary additions, including a dot product instruction for extremely fast vector math and custom security features built directly into the silicon to prevent piracy and hacking.

Each core has two symmetric hardware threads (SMT), for a total of six hardware threads available to games. Not only does the Xenon CPU include the standard set of PowerPC integer and floating-point registers (one set per hardware thread), the Xenon CPU also includes 128 vector (VMX) registers per hardware thread. This astounding number of registers can drastically improve the speed of common mathematical operations.

Each of the three cores includes a 32-KB L1 instruction cache and a 32-KB L1 data cache. The three cores share a 1-MB L2 cache. The L2 cache can be locked down in segments to improve performance. The L2 cache also has the very unusual feature of being directly readable from the GPU, which allows the GPU to consume geometry and texture data from L2 and main memory simultaneously.

Xenon CPU instructions are exposed to games through compiler intrinsics, allowing developers to access the power of the chip using C language notation.

GPU

The Xenon GPU is a custom 500+ MHz graphics processor from ATI. The shader core has 48 Arithmetic Logic Units (ALUs) that can execute 64 simultaneous threads on groups of 64 vertices or pixels. ALUs are automatically and dynamically assigned to either pixel or vertex processing depending on load. The ALUs can each perform one vector and one scalar operation per clock cycle, for a total of 96 shader operations per clock cycle. Texture loads can be done in parallel to ALU operations. At peak performance, the GPU can issue 48 billion shader operations per second.

The GPU has a peak pixel fill rate of 4+ gigapixels/sec (16 gigasamples/sec with 4× antialiasing). The peak vertex rate is 500+ million vertices/sec. The peak triangle rate is 500+ million triangles/sec. The interesting point about all of these values is that they’re not just theoretical—they are attainable with nontrivial shaders.

Xenon is designed for high-definition output. Included directly on the GPU die is 10+ MB of fast embedded dynamic RAM (EDRAM). A 720p frame buffer fits very nicely here. Larger frame buffers are also possible because of hardware-accelerated partitioning and predicated rendering that has little cost other than additional vertex processing. Along with the extremely fast EDRAM, the GPU also includes hardware instructions for alpha blending, z-test, and antialiasing.

The Xenon graphics architecture is a unique design that implements a superset of Direct3D version 9.0. It includes a number of important extensions, including additional compressed texture formats and a flexible tessellation engine. Xenon not only supports high-level shading language (HLSL) model 3.0 for vertex and pixel shaders but also includes advanced shader features well beyond model 3.0. For instance, shaders use 32-bit IEEE floating-point math throughout. Vertex shaders can fetch from textures, and pixel shaders can fetch from vertex streams. Xenon shaders also have the unique ability to directly access main memory, allowing techniques that have never before been possible.

As with Xbox, Xenon will support precompiled push buffers (“command buffers” in Xenon terminology), but to a much greater extent than the Xbox console does. The Xbox team is exposing and documenting the command buffer format so that games are able to harness the GPU much more effectively.

In addition to an extremely powerful GPU, Xenon also includes a very high-quality resize filter. This filter allows consumers to choose whatever output mode they desire. Xenon automatically scales the game's output buffer to the consumer-chosen resolution.

Memory and Bandwidth

Xenon has 256+ MB of unified memory, equally accessible to both the GPU and CPU. The main memory controller resides on the GPU (the same as in the Xbox architecture). It has 22.4+ GB/sec aggregate bandwidth to RAM, distributed between reads and writes. Aggregate means that the bandwidth may be used for all reading or all writing or any combination of the two. Translated into game performance, the GPU can consume a 512×512×32-bpp texture in only 47 microseconds.

The front side bus (FSB) bandwidth peak is 10.8 GB/sec for reads and 10.8 GB/sec for writes, over 20 times faster than for Xbox. Note that the 22.4+ GB/sec main memory bandwidth is shared between the CPU and GPU. If, for example, the CPU is using 2 GB/sec for reading and 1 GB/sec for writing on the FSB, the GPU has 19.4+ GB/sec available for accessing RAM.

Eight pixels (where each pixel is color plus z = 8 bytes) can be sent to the EDRAM every GPU clock cycle, for an EDRAM write bandwidth of 32 GB/sec. Each of these pixels can be expanded through multisampling to 4 samples, for up to 32 multisampled pixel samples per clock cycle. With alpha blending, z-test, and z-write enabled, this is equivalent to having 256 GB/sec of effective bandwidth! The important thing is that frame buffer bandwidth will never slow down the Xenon GPU.

Audio

The Xenon CPU is a superb processor for audio, particularly with its massive mathematical horsepower and vector register set. The Xenon CPU can process and encode hundreds of audio channels with sophisticated per-voice and global effects, all while using a fraction of the power of a single CPU core.

The Xenon system south bridge also contains a key hardware component for audio—XMA decompression. XMA is the native Xenon compressed audio format, based on the WMA Pro architecture. XMA provides sound quality higher than ADPCM at even better compression ratios, typically 6:1–12:1. The south bridge contains a full silicon implementation of the XMA decompression algorithm, including support for multichannel XMA sources. XMA is processed by the south bridge into standard PCM format in RAM. All other sound processing (sample rate conversion, filtering, effects, mixing, and multispeaker encoding) happens on the Xenon CPU.

The lowest-level Xenon audio software layer is XAudio, a new API designed for optimal digital signal processing. The Xbox Audio Creation Tool (XACT) API from Xbox is also supported, along with new features such as conditional events, improved parameter control, and a more flexible 3D audio model.

Input/Output

As with Xbox, Xenon is designed to be a multiplayer console. It has built-in networking support including an Ethernet 10/100-BaseT port. It supports up to four controllers. From an audio/video standpoint, Xenon will support all the same formats as Xbox, including multiple high-definition formats up through 1080i, plus VGA output.

In order to provide greater flexibility and support a wider variety of attached devices, the Xenon console includes standard USB 2.0 ports. This feature allows the console to potentially host storage devices, cameras, microphones, and other devices.

Storage

The Xenon console is designed around a larger world view of storage than Xbox was. Games will have access to a variety of storage devices, including connected devices (memory units, USB storage) and remote devices (networked PCs, Xbox Live™). At the time of this writing, the decision to include a built-in hard disk in every Xenon console has not been made. If a hard disk is not included in every console, it will certainly be available as an integrated add-on component.

Xenon supports up to two attached memory units (MUs). MUs are connected directly to the console, not to controllers as on Xbox. The initial size of the MUs is 64 MB, although larger MUs may be available in the future. MU throughput is expected to be around 8 MB/sec for reads and 1 MB/sec for writes.

The Xenon game disc drive is a 12× DVD, with an expected outer edge throughput of 16+ MB/sec. Latency is expected to be in the neighborhood of 100 ms. The media format will be similar to Xbox, with approximately 6 GB of usable space on the disk. As on Xbox, media will be stored on a single side in two 3 GB layers.

Industrial Design

The Xenon industrial design process is well under way, but the final look of the box has not been determined. The Xenon console will be smaller than the Xbox console.

The standard Xenon controller will have a look and feel similar to the Xbox controller. The primary changes are the removal of the Black and White buttons and the addition of shoulder buttons. The triggers, thumbsticks, D-pad, and primary buttons are essentially unchanged. The controller will support vibration.

Xenon Development Kit

The Xenon development environment follows the same model as for Xbox. Game development occurs on the PC. The resulting executable image is loaded by the Xenon development kit and remotely debugged on the PC. MS® Visual Studio® version 7.1 continues as the development environment for Xenon.

The Xenon compiler is based on a custom PowerPC back end and the latest MS® Visual C++® front end. The back end uses technology developed at MS for Windows NT on PowerPC. The Xenon software group includes a dedicated team of compiler engineers updating the compiler to support Xenon-specific CPU extensions. This team is also heavily focused on optimization work.

The Xenon development kit will include accurate DVD emulation technology to allow developers to very precisely gauge the effects of the retail console disc drive.

Miscellaneous Xenon Hardware Notes

Some additional notes:

- Xenon is a big-endian system. Both the CPU and GPU process memory in big-endian mode. Games ported from little-endian systems such as the Xbox or PC need to account for this in their game asset pipeline.
- Tapping into the power of the CPU is a daunting task. Writing multithreaded game engines is not trivial. Xenon system software is designed to take advantage of this processing power wherever possible. The Xbox Advanced Technology Group (ATG) is also exploring a variety of techniques for offloading graphics work to the CPU.
- People often ask if Xenon can be backward compatible with Xbox. Although the architecture of the two consoles is quite different, Xenon has the processing power to emulate Xbox. Whether Xenon will be backward compatible involves a variety of factors, not the least of which is the massive development and testing effort required to allow Xbox games run on Xenon.

A few Super Mario clones | Morrowind Mods I like (2004-10-27 14:39)

Welcome back to the ultimate Modblog gaming site. Today, you've all asked me, but here I go with the latest Super Mario Freeware on the Internet today. Of course, the ultimate Super Mario game didn't appear on PC by chance...but I can say it found itself on my PC. My favorite is still emulating Super Mario 64. That's right, it's far better than any of these 2D clones. However, second place can be pretty difficult to judge. There are so many versions.

Here are some clones I found:

Super Mario Forever 2.16 – I know the name is kind of stupid, but it's based on the SNES upgrade in Super Mario All Stars of Super Mario 3. The only thing is it's easily the best freeware game with Mario in it. I beat it and it's easily the better freeware ones you can download. Polish developers made this game. The levels get more interesting as the game progresses. I recommend this game.

Graphics 10/10 (excellent)

Gameplay 9/10 (uses near perfect platform mechanics)

Sound 10/10 (he got the best Mario fan-made remixes on the net and put it in the game)

Original 6/10 (not too original, but it's a Mario game)

Download Size 18 MB (very large for a game starring Mario)

Super Mario Forever 2.16

Super Mario XP 1.3 – I've known this one for about a year now. It's a brilliant mix of Mario, mushroom world and Castlevania. For one, mushroom world never looked so dark. The graphics are rendered after SMB1 for NES. This is the only mature Mario of the bunch. Craving a Mario game with blood? You got it. Mario explodes when he dies – literally. Score 8.0/10

Graphics 6/10 (great)

Gameplay 8/10 (above average)

Sound 9/10 (great Mario remixes)

Original 6/10 (not too original, but it's a Mario game)

Download Size 5 MB (great size for the features)

Super Mario XP

Super Mario Worlds – basically a new game based on Super Mario All Stars graphics. It's okay, but I like Super Mario Forever much more.

Graphics 8.5/10 (great)

Gameplay 8/10 (above average)

Sound 9/10 (great Mario remixes)

Original 6/10 (not too original, but it's a Mario game)

Download Size 5 MB (great size for the features)

Super Mario Kamek's Revenge 2.6 – a playable, but slow version of any Super Mario game. This game is probably not worth your time. I find it funny that this game is so bad after version 2.6. Haha!

Graphics 5/10 (just bad)

Gameplay 7/10 (has potential)

Sound 8/10 (has potential)

Original 6/10 (not too original, but it's a Mario game)

Download Size 1.5 MB (tiny)

South Park Mario Enhanced 1.0 – Probably the oldest of all the freeware games. South Park Mario replaces Mario with Kenny, a South Park character, but everything else from Super Mario Bros. stays the same. Worst of all - it's shareware! You're better off finding a NES emulator and playing the rom. First version came out in 1999. South Park Mario Enhanced 1.0 Download page

South Park Mario 2 – Sequel to South Park Mario. This version has Kenny star in Super Mario Bros 2. Unlike the original, Kenny is the only playable character. Super Mario Bros 2 was okay, I just didn't like it as much as the original.

If Mario doesn't excite you, I advise you to check out the new fan based improvements for the forgotten RPG, Morrowind. I'm impressed at the new face models. It looks like this designer succeeded in making faces that look a lot better with lower polygon count than the original ones. Morrowind Facial Improvements. The surprise is with all the upgrades, Morrowind may look as pretty as Elder Scrolls IV: Oblivion coming out next year. Khalazza Productions has a great update texture zip file. It updates all the existing textures in the game except for characters.

I am going to re-install Morrowind and apply all upgrades I downloaded within the last 2 years tonight. True, Morrowind is a slightly out-dated RPG, but it still looks halfway decent on my computer. I like to mug people at night and be a thief. I don't like to kill people because then I will have the local vendetta after me for the rest of the game. I even played with cheat codes, because I enjoy being invincible. I do play mortal once in a while....after my characters HP level is 200. I got to a point where half the time I played an assassin wanted to kill me. I think there is a faq on Gamefaqs.com that tells gamers how to make your character extremely intelligent, high charisma, high wisdom and 5 bonus skills at the start of the game.

[One day later] I installed Morrowind and the expansion, Tribunal. The game is huge and really does support better graphics than the Xbox version, Morrowind Game of the Year Edition. Since I wanted to see how far I get without cheating, I just pick knight and pick any old symbol. I save my game once in town. Then I try to hit someone with a dagger and see if I could swim away. The guard's sword had "knockback" and that kept me from going anywhere. Three hits with that thing and I was died. I can not get anywhere without a good sword. I must get to the trading city of Balmona so I can join a guild. Balmona is the best city in the game. It is best to keep off the trail and stay clear of enemies. I join the fighter's guild there and do some quests. The last one I barely survived in. You'd have to play the game to know what I'm talking about here. I'm kind of melee guy. No magic, no intelligence, just a sword and willpower to be brave (and pretty stupid at times) Now I could get armor, but I'm already died if I don't have a long sword. So I am saving up for that. Putting all my money towards it. The money cheat is tempting but I will not cheap this time. The world looks pretty. The faces are ugly by today's standards, but I've improved it by downloading all the plugins containing improved faces from that website listed above. It really does the trick. At home I was looking for the texture service pack that Khalazza Productions made. I have the outdated 2.1 version somewhere on my November 2003 data CD. It crashed last time so I'll have to scan the file for viruses if I do find it. It really does upgrade the textures. Most game developers are finding out that textures matter much more than polygons. If you go to that first link two paragraphs above, you can see how the artist reduced polygons in the face while vastly improving the textures. Morrowind has a prettier graphics engine than Neverwinter Nights and also Morrowind is both a 3rd person and first person RPG and I like first person view. TAB alternates between the views. Unfortunately, I can't get the game to recognize the new face models I added to the directory. My guess is that the files only support the retail version of Morrowind. The Tribunal installation patches Morrowind to version 1.3.

I'll post a new entry in 4 more days after I think of something cool. Until then - I'll frag in UT2004. C-ya. Birthday's on Monday! It's going to be interesting what gifts I get. I'm hoping for a new iPod or cd player for my truck or maybe more memory so I can upgrade that backup PC to 1GB!

6.11 November

I'm officially 20! (2004-11-01 15:40)

Woke up at 11 am and my cousin had his confirmation which I'd skipped. I slept in for a long time until 12:30. Then I went down in my 'other' room and did the usual. Then I stayed up until 1am watching John Carpenter's The Thing, Halloween, and Van Heising. I was very surprised that Mom wanted 4 movies instead of one. Mom also bought got Independence Day and The Exorcist. I picked Independence Day because I liked that movie. The Thing remake was probably the scariest movie ever made, but when you'd played all 5 Resident Evil games - you're a little more used to the gore thus being less scared when certain scenes pop up. The scariest scene had to be at the beginning when the mutant husky was really an alien spider, and (like Alien) it came out of the dog's body in a gory way - testacies, blood, mutant guts. Near the end of the film, there was a head within head scene - they've been doing that forever. It's not very original now-a-days although this film has been made 20 years ago and didn't keep it from scaring me at the beginning - before I was expecting testicles to shoot out of the dog's body and the dog to turn into a monster... The other John Carpenter film, Halloween, was less scary. Van Heising is as much a fantasy as a horror film - did not anticipate and it was PG-13 so nothing about it was scary unlike Halloween and The Thing.

What changed between last year and this year? Well, I have a more powerful pc, new Xbox, a slightly used PS2, a slightly used Genesis, slightly used SNES, slightly used NES and more importantly added approximately 100 games in my collection. During this time, I haven't bought 1 music album. I successfully completed 4 college courses towards my degree in "CNAIA Industrial Networking". I kept the same number of friends for 2 years - no more, no less. My MP3 collection grown to 11 Gigabytes! The MP3 player I got 2 years ago recorded Music Choice stations off DirecTV and contributed about 8 % of that. Most importantly I am the happiest I ever was in 2 years.

My black cat got sick and started puking up mucus on Saturday. Onyx is 16 years old. The vet's office was closed. I was hoping that it wasn't his last days with us. Our dog, Ruby, is 10 and she's got arthritis in her hip and it's hard to go up and down the stairs. I just shoved down a puke pill down the cat's throat, and hoping it makes him feel better. Animals die sooner or later....although Onyx was the first cat our family had which wasn't mean. Boo was an angry cat with a temper that hissed at Mom and Dad. Never remember him since I was 2 at the time. My family doesn't miss him one bit. I don't remember him at all because he died in 1986. I'm 20 today and that cat's still hanging around - amazing isn't it? I was trying to get Iris to be a lap cat, but she's still too anxious. Her brother, Ambrious, is a much better lap cat. He plays with his water dish and splashes water all over. He's also very hungry cat - stealing food at the first opportunity. That really pisses my mom off. The two kittens got "fixed" today. They are always together and Iris more than likely would have kittens soon. Don't tell me how we got Ambrious....his name should have been Garfield. LOL

I bought a Gameboy Player for the Gamecube two days ago. I have 5 GBA games and I don't play them, so it adds GBA functionality to the Gamecube. I thought it was a emulator too, but it's actual Gameboy Advance hardware that uses Gamecube's RCA input adapter and Gamecube controller to play. I almost regret buying it, though I wish I had found my copy of Mario Kart Super Circuit – that was my favorite GBA game. Would have had been a blast to play on the TV. Mario Kart Super Circuit had all the Super Mario Kart tracks after I've beaten all the tricks on all settings in 1st place. It's fun shooting Nintendo characters with shells. I need to get a new RCA adapter since the old one is showing lines and it would be nice to get rid of them.

Nintendo Dual Screen comes out at the end of this month. No doubt in my mind, Nintendo will soon release a Gamecube peripheral that replaces the Gameboy Player. Perhaps the new peripheral will be called DS player? It's confirmed that DS will be backwards compatible with GBA games, but not GBC games. In a sense, Nintendo has 6 products out: Gamecube, Dual Screen, GBA, GBA SP, Gameboy Player, and those new Pokemon Game & Watches. So I have 4 of the 6. Shall I buy a Dual screen or not? Nope. However, I might buy a DS Player when it comes out for Gamecube.

You know, I can't really seem to figure out how to make my blog more interesting. My blog is very opinionated I know. I don't see my blog as being so negative. Every reader should enjoy reading videogames. It's not only a kid's play thing like it used to be so come on. Remember back on those three "Generations 1985 – 2001" posts. I mean I wrote 22 pages in word for that. Part 1 is a refined version of my "Console Wars" page. Those did very well getting over 140 views each.

- 12.) "Had my PSone Emulator working | with Bios"

At 8:30 pm, my dad finally got home and I got $220 spending cash in an envelope. I don't know what I want to spend it on though. I am going to try to stay away from videogames. It would be enough to buy a Nintendo DS. I probably will wait and see if my PS2 is going break so than I can buy a new one right away! I much rather use the money next year on a next generation console.

Play NES or SNES games on N64? It's possible! (2004-11-03 15:41)

New Nintendo Spokesman | Debuted E3 2004 | crowd loved him?

Here is Nintendo's new superstar I just found out today.....his name is Reginald Fils-Aime or "Reggie" and he's Nintendo of America's new male figure that shows that Nintendo is listening to what the gamers want, not what 3rd party developers are willing to put on Gamecube, and adds to that grown-up feeling Nintendo only recently showed at their press conferences. Anyways, at this year's E3 2004, Reggie was the main reason Nintendo was a hit with some help of the unrevealing of their new handheld. The truth is Gamecube is lagging behind the Playstation 2 at a 3-1 ratio. Personally - I don't regret buying any of current generation consoles. One reason is Xbox, GCN, PS2 have exceptional games. Xbox has Halo, Gamecube has Zelda: Wind Waker and PS2 has a couple. They also have a share of top selling games gone multiplatform. A good one is Metal Gear Solid 2 which has gone multi-platform even though it is most successful on Sony's console.

Today's conversation is about the Tri-Star 64, but first I had to mention how I love my new Gameboy Player! It's been 4 days since I had a Gameboy Player and it has brought life into my Gameboy cartridges once again. I have two RPGs for GBA which I can play on my TV and there is no visible difference between Fire Emblem Advance and the SNES version of Chrono Trigger. Fire Emblems also benefits by having 32-bit graphics instead of 16-bit. I remember back in December 2003 when Gameboy Player was 50 dollars and SP was 100 dollars. I had to have a backlit screen, but I feel stupid now because after I bought a Gameboy Player I can't tell you how much better playing with a joystick feels. I am one of those gamers who can not play games on the go and always play at home. Nintendo sells more games for Gameboy Advance than Sony sells PS2 games. In other words I am surprised that many people, whether age 8 or 28, still trust their old school games developed on a Nintendo platform. You know what this means, don't you? This means there is a total of 2000 Gameboy games that can be played on TV. Already hate the Gamecube controller? Fear not! With the Gameboy Link Cable, the Gameboy Player allows you to use your GBA to control the game. Two Gameboy Advance link cables are sold new for $12 US at department stores, and used at Game Stop or Toyriific for only $7! Then again, some videogames cost $20, but if you really hate the Gamecube controller it's a very small price to pay - yea know?

So how could Gameboy games be played on TV before July 2003? Well - IGN.com answered this complex question for me! Intelligent Systems makes an adapter that connects GBA to a RCA or SVGA external source. The 3rd party peripheral cost more than 400 dollars. Gameboy Player came along and cost 50 dollars last year.... Now that is the solution for Gameboy owners and developers a like. It's about 450 % cheaper.

What's more interesting is something called the Tri-Star 64 allowing someone to play NES or SNES games on N64? Neat-O! I even know how Tri-star came to be....Tristar is what Nintendo called the 3 triangle symbol in Legend of Zelda and Legend of Zelda Ocarina of Time. I also believe there is a Tri-Star somewhere in Legend of Zelda - The Wind Waker. I had no idea it was possible until a few hours ago. It could be possible. Nintendo should have sold a N64 that had the ability to play SNES and NES games. Instead they've released something already compatible with older versions - Gameboy Advance. By taking this route - Nintendo could sell games on newly released videogames. Like everything else the company that made the add-on got sued for not legally obtaining the rights to play copyrighted software specifically developed for N64. What's next - a 3rd party Nintendo 64 peripheral for Gamecube?

Here is a short FAQ I copied off this link explaining how to use the TriStar 64:

- 1) Like the original Tri-Star, it's mostly plastic.
- 2) It needs an external power source (not included); a Sega Master System power supply works great. The box says "DC in" on the plug picture, so that excludes the NES power supply. The SNES and Genesis ones do not fit.
- 3) It has 3 slots: one for the N64, one for the SNES/Super Famicom and one for the Famicom. You need a 60-72 pin converter to play NES games on it. The converter is installed such that its front faces the front of the N64, but NES carts are inserted towards the back of the console.
- 4) It's composite only. No S-video here.
- 5) Some games don't work. Famicom Dragonsquest is one (it works on the original Tri-Star, natch).
- 6) The picture quality is fair/good, at best.
- 7) The silly thing will not work if an N64 cart is not plugged into the N64 slot.

Like UFO's CD64 I talked about in another post, Tristar 64 is a one of those weird things that came out during the 32/64-bit generation. Nintendo has a long history of getting "weird" peripherals. It looks like the user has to manually take the top cover off his/her N64 and place the new cover along with the hardware attachments to it. It says how far intelligent programmers went to get pass the NES5 encryption, and the SNES encryption to recreate hardware that runs original software of two older consoles. I strongly agree that console emulation took the next step and brought the old games to the majority of Internet users. It's highly preferred over playing the original cartridges on the original systems and has no legal entanglements. Whoever did this would have been better off just creating a stand-alone console that did both with RCA connections and controllers. One thing is clear – this company did not want Nintendo involved when they've released this product.

Today I had a discussion about the future at WITC. The school will allow me to take part of their program for a third time if I take part in their job program. If I work for an employer who is in the computer industry than I get to stay at WITC even if I don't succeed in getting 70 % in both classes. The weird thing about it is I fail most of my first CCNA tests, but I get 80 % or higher on all my retakes. It takes a man to go through with the school's alternative program with will happen. My last retake was a 93 % - well above the norm, but the two averages to about a 67 %.

Tomorrow I'm getting Grand Theft Auto San Andreas. I feel like I'm getting the game because everyone else is getting it. Other then that I want to get 2 GBA games, Metroid Fusion and Metroid Zero Mission. Then Half-life 2 and Halo 2 are coming out the same day, November 16th. I don't know what I'm going to do? Buy all of them. HL2 is a must have – Halo 2 can wait a month or two. I won't have a chance to play one game more than 3 hours a week and maybe 6 hours on the weekend. I hear Halo 2 has better textures than Halo and reduced polygon count.

On a personal note – there hasn't been any updated next generation console news so my blog has been same old, same old. I do my best to keep it interesting. Come back soon.

I bought GTA San Andreas bought yesterday! (2004-11-06 15:42)

Yep! I finally got the 5th Grand Theft Auto game for PS2 two days ago. Its full name doesn't need introducing. I haven't played it yet though. It's supposed to surpass GTA: Vice City in all levels including city size. I used my birthday money on it. This makes 53 PS2 game cases. The 53rd game I bought yesterday. No one can come over so I can have a partner to share it with. I am all alone in my room. Then you ask, "Why don't you do something else?" It's very hard too if there isn't anybody around here that you'd really know after high school which makes life in the basement a little crazier.

You control mouse "In Air"

I found out some interesting news everyone about next generation of mice. Gyratron has this patented technology with mice that you hold and move, not move on the desk. The user holds the mouse and it uses wireless technology (radio frequency) to transmit the signal off the TV back to it so the pointer on the screen moves as much as how far you move the "dual-axis consumer gyroscope." Yes, it's a mouse "in air™" – also called a gyroscope. Now Nintendo is going to use some type of gyroscope in the controller for the "NES5" or Nintendo Revolution. The NES4 was Nintendo Dolphin and soon changed its name to Nintendo Gamecube. I could picture a gyroscope being used in place of one joystick in my hand, but all controllers with the current consoles have 2. It's extremely hard to picture it as a game controller. The "Ultra GT Mouse" manufactured by Gyratron uses a low-cost Gyroscope called the "MicroGyro 100", and retails for 80 dollars. That's cheap for this technology, but game controllers shouldn't be any more than 30 dollars.

Here are some names I thought up for Revolution

Game-sphere
 Gamecube 2 or GC2 or Cube2
 Virtual-Sphere
 Nintendo 256 or N256
 Nintendo Dolphin? AKA also Gamecube's code name
 Nintendo isphere

This just in Revolution games will use Blu-ray mini-discs, but will also feature a normal dvd drive. This feature came straight out of the Panasonic Q which is a DVD/videogame machine in Japan that plays all Gamecube software.

If you haven't noticed – there is basically the same stuff on all message boards that have the same topic – little originality. Few times – you'll get something that hasn't been said before. It's really not my thing. And if the content is more right than someone else, it doesn't take long for the new true content to hit other forums. I only added one comment on IGN Boards, which has some of the largest gaming boards on the Internet, next to Gamespy.com and Gamefaqs.com.

I had this hilarious conversation on IRC chat at ICQ.com. At first no ones talking okay because nobody was driving the conversation until I come along.

No one is talking about games on the #games channel until:

I start saying, "Xbox sucks"

Then someone replies, "No it doesn't."

Then I say, "Yes it does"

Then someone says Xbox has the best graphics.

I say, "No it doesn't."

Then, I start saying, "Microsoft sucks"

Then someone says, "I like Microsoft"

Then I say "Windows 3.1 sucks. Windows 95 sucks. Windows 98 sucks. Windows 2000 sucks. Windows XP sucks" so Microsoft sucks.

They tell me to shut up.

Then I bring out the big guns and say, "PS2 rules because it has San Andreas and Devil May Cry and Gran Turismo 3!"

Then someone says, "I agree with you - "Xbox sucks"

Then I say, "Good"

The conversation than died.

This discussion turned out positive because I truly made the choices before in earlier forums, and I know what I'm talking about - plus most gamers who read the forums knows San Andreas is the most highly anticipated game for PS2. I was thinking that the game is too anticipated, but it's hyped up because it's nearly perfect on every level. I can't believe that people want to run a small gang in the early 90s. The game soundtrack has real artists like 2Pac, Guns and Roses, Aerosmith, Coolio. 2Pac's most popular track was "Changes" which is in the game. I am not a big rap fan, but in high school a lot of people loved 2PAC. My old friend, Chuck, liked him too. He was shot down by a moving car while walking on the street in real life in 1996. The game manual has a lot of naughty stuff in it too.

I just got Guilty Gear X CD at Game Stop yesterday. Rip off yes, but where around here am I going to have another chance at owning Guilty Gear X? I sort-a solved the problem by printing out the front and back covers from a website. At, Gamestop, the store person said it was very hard to come by. Guilty Gear X2 is even harder to come by. The reason why is the game is very nice high resolution 2D fighter with solid game play mechanics. The Xbox version was released mid-September and is by far the most abundant version of Guilty Gear X2. Guilty Gear X series has the best graphics of any 2D fighter out which is why it stands out. The textures are crisp unlike 32-bit version of Street Fighter or King of Fighters. The DC version of Guilty Gear X also was above the rest - prettier than Street Fighter Alpha 3 on Dreamcast. The Dreamcast version of the Guilty Gear X is harder to find than the PS2 version. I own the PS2 version. I am sure that my next PS2 game will be Guilty Gear Isuka.

Do you like my new logo? Vote the poll (2004-11-09 15:43)

I was afraid it's too big. Samus is acting like "Superman". I thought it looked cool but that's just me. This is to celebrate the release of Metroid Prime 2 Echoes coming out on November 15, 2004.

I downloaded Paint Shop Pro 9 and it was well worth the 98MB download. The user interface looks exactly the same as PSP 8.0, but graphics codecs compress PNG, JPEG2000, GIF better than they did in PSP 8.0. I know because I did a test on some of other bloggers logos. The results were from 5KB - 12 KB difference. I have enough skill to use the magic wand and crop images out of desktop wallpaper and such to make logos such the one above and the one I just made.

I bought Halo 2 today | Halo for Mac? (2004-11-10 15:44)

Oh my god... I just found out that Halo was out for MAC and it's published by Apple! Halo is on a non-Microsoft platform. That's amazing. It can run on MAC OS 9 and 10. But Microsoft played the devil's avocet when it came to giving Halo back to Mac. As for Halo 2...read below.

Today I just got a piece of history. A very, very, very small piece. Halo 2 sold 500 games at the Woodbury Game Stop the first day in preorders. It is a very profitable game. It's by far the best selling videogame this year. Halo 2 has only been out for 2 days and already it sold 500,000 copies. That means in a week it will sell over a million. I found out that Halo 2 is much, much more anticipated than Metroid Prime 2: Echoes. I found out - it's not really people dislike Samus. Some believe including me that Master Chief's arch-nemesis is Samus Aran and vice versa. Game quality is hardly an issue here when comparing Halo 2 and Metroid Prime 2. Would you rather play as a marine that saves humanity or a bounty hunter that saves humanity? Some say Halo was better because it had multiplayer. Well boys and girls...Metroid Prime 2 has death match, capture the flag, team deathmatch, sniper area and it's online. Nintendo did much better than you'd expect from a first attempt. They tried to put the "Goldeneye" into "Prime 2" and give Samus a fighting chance at sales.

By the way I found this paragraph really funny.

"Mere weeks after E3 rumors were quickly circulating around the Halo enthusiast community that the unthinkable had happened and Microsoft had purchased Bungie. Though this wasn't that much of a surprise as Microsoft had the spare cash and had been waiting in the wings looking for something to spend this cash they'd found behind their sofa to help the launch of their furniture piece console, the X-Box." - Gamegossip.com

We all knew Microsoft wanted to keep the best games for PC (x86 to you geeks out there). I think they felt sorry about MAC gamers, after all some MAC gamers are also loyal Xbox fans so they gave them back the game. Somehow, Apple (also called MACsoft) got the go-ahead to publish Halo on their platform. I also find it ironic that Microsoft is using the powerful PowerPC platform, the Xenon. Hmmm, there might be a connection with this. Bill Gates said, "We'll trade you Halo for use of your PowerPC technology on Xenon?" In my opinion Apple had nothing to loose....after all the Xenon will not have an Apple logo on it? Who would care? For all I know there could be Apple technology under that black case of the Xbox. The only reason I know Xbox is in fact x86 is I happen to know it's powered by a Pentium 3. Pentium 3s aren't used in PowerPCs.

Retro Studios

Developer of Metroid Prime is Retro Studios - a fully funded 2nd party developer of Nintendo. It's probably the single largest Nintendo faction in the United States in terms of employees besides Nintendo of America. Retro is located in Austin, Texas. Over 200 employees worked on Metroid Prime 2. The founder of Retro, Jeff Spangenberg, was the founder of the developer who made Turok: Dinosaur Hunter for Nintendo 64. Turok 2 got a 9.2 out of 10 when IGN.com reviewed the game. It was also a favored version over the PC game of the same name. Last year he left Retro Studios to form Topheavy Studios.

Bungie

Bungie is a new developer whose first game was Halo. What most of you don't know is Bungie was making Halo for Macintosh and the game was going to be published by Apple. On June 9th 2000, Bungie became a 2nd party developer of Microsoft Game Studios and developed Halo for PC and Xbox. Like Retro Studios, their project sold so well that they have the ability to work to develop on game and be able to pay all the employees from the sales. Remember, Halo is not a Microsoft trademark - it is a Bungie trademark. Obviously Halo 2 online feature will add to the replay value 10 fold. Although the PC version of Halo had online multiplayer and it sold less than the Xbox version. Go-figure. Remember the PC version? The drag was lag in the PC Halo multiplayer via Internet. Halo was released for MAC under Microsoft Game Studios (now ironic). It was a much better LAN game. Halo for PC seemed a bit rushed. I mean when the PC version came out - everyone bought the Xbox version or bought an Xbox too play the Xbox version. I feel I was the only one who bought Halo twice. Including today I spent a total of 150 dollars on all games. Now Halo for PC is only 20 bucks....if you can find it.

Gearbox Software

Gearbox received their fame by being the co-developing the PC and MAC version of Halo. The graphics are better than Xboxes. The PC version had good reviews - mostly in the 8.5 - 9.5 range according to many Internet gaming sites. Now their next project is making Brothers of Arms which is really "Band of Brothers: The Game". Brothers of Arms is coming out for PC/Gamecube/PS2/Xbox.

Under the hood of Gamecube (2004-11-11 15:45)

Okay, we already know that this costs 100 dollars retail price right? I imagine it costs Nintendo 60 - 70 dollars more than 100 dollars. The profit is made on Games. Now if PS2 could ever look this good. Nintendo used every popular way to fit everything into a small box. So I did see a cooling fan on the right side checkered opening on the Gamecube. Xbox, PS2, and Dreamcast also have one. One thing I know from building PCs....you can extend the life of your hardware a lot by adding a system fan. Nintendo wanted to ensure that the Gamecube wouldn't overheat thus not freeze like Playstation. The guy who wrote the page admired the flip-top mini-disc drive! It looks like Gamecube was inspired by Dreamcast and that makes me wonder how much Dreamcast inspiration went into Gamecube? A lot. Nintendo's R & D3 also knew how they could exercise the graphics to the limit for 200 dollars. When Nintendo chose IBM and gave the silicon manufacture giant one billion dollars to make a 485 MHz CPU - they've got something pretty darn nice in return although that's not all..... they've brought Panasonic, ATI/ArtX and the less famous Factor 5 into the picture too to create "Project Dolphin". Remember, Gamecube was $179 at launch and the rest would be made up by selling software. We all found out what the expansion port was used for!

Now the second part is a little difficult. Nintendo makes a special Gamecube called the "NPDP Gamecube" In place of the minidisc drive is a cartridge which developers can put their data on. It is rewritable too. This gamecube also comes with 48MB of RAM instead of the normal 24 MB. I think I heard on the site that the NPDP cartridge can hold 4 1.8 GB normal disc images. This is essentially only a developer's kit in case you were wondering.

I finally found a picture of the Gameboy Player made by Intellegent Systems, a 2nd party of Nintendo. It allows Gameboy Advance to be played on the TV. This one is made for Nintendo 64.

Interesting "Sega Xenon" Rumors (2004-11-12 15:45)

X X X

I read some rumors that Microsoft was going to buy Sega so that Microsoft Xenon could sell in countries where Xbox is 1 %. Sega actually did better in these parts of the world than Microsoft did. These countries are also heavily pirate software areas of the world and it's hard to copy games for Xbox unlike Playstation 2. The idea is Sega will have their logo on the next generation console where Xbox wouldn't have a chance of selling. It goes way back when Atari was about to manufacture the NES under the name of "Atari Famicom" here in the US, but they didn't want too so it became the Nintendo Entertainment System. Big mistake for Atari. LOL Atari Jaguar was a big flop. No one remembers Jaguar. I've seen one though up close and touched the packaging box. :)

Sega was bought out by Sammy Corp of Japan as of 2003. Sammy makes a lot of arcade games. The most noticeable is Guilty Gear X. It's odd because although they are together, Sammy allows Sega to release all the North American and European games under SEGA. Microsoft would either have to buy Sammy Corporation or give them an offer they couldn't refuse.

I have a feeling that when Sega wanted to survive and went 3rd party - there might be a possibility that Nintendo will also go 3rd party and when they do - Microsoft can give them an offer again. Keep in mind - Sega wasn't making a profit and went bankrupt - declaring bankruptcy. Sammy bought out Sega one year after 'software only Sega' was officially started. Media companies merge all the time. Think AOL/Time Warner or Squaresoft and Enix.

Sega officially announcing the "SEGA Xbox Xenon" has a nice ring to it.with 80 % of the software revenues going to Microsoft. It would be nice if we saw Virtua Fighter 5 or 6 on Xbox Xenon.

Lets say it were true. Microsoft contracts with Sammy Corp so it can be labeled Sega Xbox Xenon in Asia, Japan, Africa, and South America. Microsoft Xbox Xenon in North America, Europe, and Australia. All the little islands are contracted under the correct regions. It could go a step further calling the Sega versions "Dreamcast 2s" with an addition of a second laser in the dvd drive so it could read Dreamcast games. Dreamcast games are GDROMS but I techicially there could be dual lazars where one would read GDs and the other reads HD-DVDs, DVDs, CDs. I don't now if Dreamcast can be emulated or not. Chankast is supposed to do this on Windows XP so I guess it is possible. This way there would be nothing besides the software and the GD-ROM laser which would mechanically move 5 degrees that would be added to the Microsoft Xenon so it would be backwards compatible with Dreamcast games.

Check out <http://Chanka.org> and see what I mean.

Microsoft buying Sega is really dumb. Sega already made good games on Xbox. If Microsoft want's a particular game that badly, they can publish it. It's a hell a lot cheaper than buying Sega as a whole.

May I add one more thing about this.... IT WILL NOT HAPPEN!!! EVER!!!!

Official Half-life 2 Site

IGNPC's four page Preview

Half-life 2 comes out at midnight tonight at Wal-Mart and I'll be there when it is. I called ahead and know that there are copies in back-storage. I've been waiting all year for this one. HL2 the best selling PC game ever. Wasn't the last one Diablo 2, my favorite game or was it The Sims - one of the two? It's the highly anticipated first person shooter which is the sequel to the Half-life expansion Blue Shift. Half-life 2 is coming in DVD form with enhanced versions of Half-life and Counter Strike. IGN.com said that the game shipped today. I'm skipping out on Metriod Prime 2 for god's sake so I could afford this ONE game. Sorry - Samus, but Gordon Freeman on my computer is much more important. I stuck a note on my monitor so I wouldn't forget. With Half-life: Source packaged in – this package will not be short. Only problem is although the multi-play is FREE, I have a 56K modem. I mean I'll try it out to see how well it plays over my slow connection – I doubt I will have a playable game. These games probably need a lot of bandwidth since there is a lot of action going on. I am expecting the retail version to be playable, but somewhat buggy. Valve will not be releasing patches like it was for Half-life. The full 1.0 - 1.11 patch for Half-life was a whopping 110 Megabytes – that is a lot larger than what it shall be now. Valve completed the game over 2 months ago. Valve should have a patch ready this week. I heard Valve gave select beta testers the retail version and the first patch. Back 6 months ago when Valve confirmed an Internet Link of the retail version – I looked on the pear2pear unities and shockingly, Half-life 2 was on them. The beta was leaked on Emule and Overnet.

I feel that Half-life 2 will have succeeded where ID Software failed in Doom 3. Quake 3 was great. Return to Castle Wolfenstein was great. Doom 3 wasn't so great. It was good - but not very good. Doom II is so old - like 1994 so it's 10 years older. I was 9 when Doom II came out. I was 19 when Doom 3 came out. Doom 3 has more Quake II in it than Doom II. Meanwhile - while I own Quake 3 and Doom 3 - I am not very clear on how Doom 3 could possibly be bad. I am a casual gamer - one whom plays periodically. Half-life 2 will probably play much tighter than Doom 3. Its difficulty will exceed Doom 3. Monsters hiding in the dark to feed on an un-expecting pray (me) will be twice as bad. Not to say Doom 3 on hard wasn't that way. Hard in Half-life 2 will bring Hard to a new meaning. Hardcore First person shooter fans will be stuck on normal in HL2 from what I hear on the forums.

I heard Valve favored ATI in development. That means my Radeon 9800 XT will be able to show most of the effects that Valve shown at E3 (Electronic Entertainment Expo). I don't think I'll be able to show it off at 1600x1200, but I can try to get 1200x968 at 4x anti-analyzing with nSync on the game. Perhaps if I let the software acceleration take over - I can get it up to 1600x1200. My point is my computer was absolutely near top of the line at the end of last year and since then I've added 1 DVD-RW and 1024 MB of SDRAM. I guess you could have spent 1000 dollars on a videocard too. Games wouldn't need that kind of gigaflop performance anyways. My guess is I can do around 20 Gigaflops. Xbox is about 10 but it's max resolution is 1200x768.

I feel bad that I am not one of those people with high-speed Internet. For those who have it – it's part of daily life. I do have access to a T1 line though. Kazaa Lite is a big problem for WITC. The technicians have problems of the servers maxing out at 1:30 AM once in a while. I found out a few months ago that Overnet works well on it. Overnet uses the eDonkey 2000 servers. It's mostly made up of Class C IP addresses though some are class B IP addresses. It's possible to get some of the smaller downloads through Overnet.

Class A - 1 - 126

127 - looping address

Class B - 128 - 191

Class C - 192 - 268

Class D - 269 and above (more private use)

My ISP looks like a Class A address. It starts with 69.58.xxx.xx. That's probably because they service DSL to 100s of subscribers around my county.

This game will never be forgotten. - Until Half-life 3 comes out.... This game will never be forgotten. - Until Half-life 3 comes out and maybe then - because Half-life 3 will have upgrade versions of Half-life 1 and 2 packaged with it....

"Half-life 2 aftermath" (2004-11-16 15:47)

I have bought this game and later today after school I will play to give a review. At Wal-mart there was a shelf full of 3 box art (same game) One was Gordan Freeman. Another was the girl, and the 3rd was "The Old Guy"

I waited a long time to get this game. There is also a Platium edition where you get Half-life 1 - Source. Counter Strike - Source, Half-life 2, and a free T-shirt for 70 dollars. Best Buy has that deal. Actually I drove into Hudson and there were few cars out. I didn't hit any deer when I got back. You also see my "legal" copy of Halo 2! It is unopened. I didnt' buy it the first day like Half-life 2, like I said I got it at Game Stop the day after the store sold 500 copies the first day.

Shall I play the PC game or the Xbox game....decisions.....hmm.....

NASA breaks the world speed record - again (2004-11-18 15:48)

NASA builds an aircraft that brakes world speed record. One aircraft that is famous for being 10 years ahead of it's time is the SR-71 Blackbird which broke the last speed record of 3 MACH. The X43 is an unmanned rocket plane. Once the jet fuel was depleted, the aircraft crashed in the Pacific Ocean like it was suppose to. The future of this would be one that could land and be reusable. The SR-71 was great because it could be used as a reconnaissance plane. It is the successor of the U2 space craft which flown in the 60s for reconnaissance pictures over Russia in the cold war. It could fly so high that Russian SAMS could not shoot it down, but effectually the SAMS did. It must have scared the heck out of the Soviets. The U2 spy plane is still in service for NASA. It is the 2nd longest airplane in service except for the B52 Bomber. The SR-71 Blackhawk was in service for a long time too. Anyways, that super sonic aircraft that broke the world speed record was the X-43 (rocket plane) at Mach 7. NASA is also building the X-43A which is supposed to go MACH 10.

More information

Above Top Secret

Here are some other strange American Aircraft and a paragraph about each

U2 Spy Plane

Famous for taking pictures of military zones in Russia. It had the ability to fly high and around the world. It's interesting that it's the 2nd longest commissioned plane in the world. Most facts about the plane is top secret. It does have the longest wings I've ever seen. It first went into service in 1951 (at the beginning of the cold war) when presently it survives to still be commissioned to this day. Upgraded of course with latest safety features and ejection seat. . It top speed is 478 miles per hour or MACH 0.58. Maximum altitude is 70,000 feet. That is the main purpose of the aircraft. Great for use in hurricane surveys. It can fly well above the hurricane to take pictures of wind speed which way it's going. I wouldn't doubt the United States Weather Service used this plane for this purpose. The wing span is very long 105 feet. You must have long wings to keep the plane from stalling at high altitude.

The U2 Spy Plane has one the highest mission completion rates in the U.S. Air Force despite the fact that the aircraft is the most difficult to fly due to its unusually challenging takeoff and landing characteristics. Due to its high-altitude mission, the pilot must wear a full pressure suit.

U2 II – SR71 Blackbird

Used in the 70s and 80s for the same exact purposes as U2. One interesting thing about this aircraft is it broke the world speed record in the 1980s. It could also go Mach 3 and used early stealth. The blackbird wasn't used for any military purposes except in Operation Desert Storm in 1993. The US Government only unclassified that Stealth bombers were used in Operation Desert Storm, however, didn't say if there was a reconnaissance plane involved or not. To some people – it remains the greatest aircraft ever made. The plane was very expensive (mostly because it had older technology that newer technology could do at a fraction of the cost.)

U2 III – Project: Aurora

A government project that is supposed to be in service presently in place of the SR71 Blackbird. There is no information that it does exist. Rumors are that it can go Mach 3 – Mach 7 or twice as fast as the Blackbird. Rest is classified. There was an article in Space and Technology Magazine which discussed Aurora in depth, but no one believed it apparently.

he name "Aurora" came about from a 1986 Pentagon Budget document and was slotted to receive a large sum of money. The project is suspected to contain two aircraft: a large SST that is the first stage of a two-stage aircraft/satellite launcher possibly developed following the Challenger explosion in 1986, and a smaller triangular HST that has been even more reported and speculated about. It is said to be the most remarkable flying machine ever built and is seen as the epitome of a century of aerospace development! I originally did this project for FS5 when

I noticed an article in Popular Science in 1993 and later on bought the XR-7 Thunderdart plastic model kit (based on Aurora) by Testers Corp. Testers also made the SR-75 Penetrator model kit which is what my version is somewhat based upon. Since the true designations and confirmed existence are unknown, I used the same numbers as the kits since they make some sense, however those silly names will NOT be used. Since this is the largest project I have ever done, and all previous sims couldn't allow for the planes to be done properly it has taken several years of spare time to get to this point, therefore I have broken it down into several parts. The two main sections will deal with each aircraft:

Rayging Blue & Idinaloq: Excellent freeware games (2004-11-19 15:49)

Today is the first full day of Thanksgiving Break. I went to WITC around 2PM so that I could get some extra credit. Anyways I wanted to download some interesting shooting games that I found about at Gamehippo.com. I have been interested in Radiant Silvergun and Radiant Silvergun 2: Ikaruga that I wanted more of it. I played a freeware game long time ago called Dieslave. It is very similar to Ikaruga. You can see Radiant Silvergun 2 under Gamecube at my game collection entry. It is a 2D shooter

I found some pretty cool Japanese freeware games that do this as well The most awesome is a hard to find zip file - I found it though. It took me 40 minutes.

First I like to mention Rayging Blue. It supports as good of graphics as Radiant Silvergun. There is no option to raise to resolution. It supports loads of intense action . It comes with more than 3 levels. A midi soundtrack that is above average and control is simple. You use the arrows to control the ship and the Z and X button to use the primary and secondary weapon you obtain by collecting power ups that you get by shooting enemies.

I think the graphics are very good for a freeware game of this type. Easily a 32-bit game. Not a 16-bit game. The techno in the game takes some getting use too.

Graphics 9 (as good as it gets with a freeware game these days)

Gameplay 9.5

One last thing....Rayging Blue II is confirmed to be released in January 2005 and this address will have it when it is. Find this game at <http://www.nifty.com/download/win/game/shoot/>

The second is Idinaloq. It's developer is much like Treasure and it's name is Namikaze Project. The game was released in 2000 as shareware, however, now the game is free. It comes with an optional MPEG intro video and ending video (credits) I could not get the game to work if the movie was placed in the Mov folder in the game folder. The game is low-res 3D. The game has more detail than other freeware titles that do the same thing. This game looks 32-bit too. played it – it plays good. It looks slightly better than Rayging Blue Download address:

I do not think this is shall be compared to a retail game. This game doesn't have the level of quality of graphics or the game play. The sound is a little tricky. It averages about the same as a typical SNES RPG.

Graphics 8.5

Sound 8

Gameplay 9.5

Replay Value 7

Find this game at http://www.gamehippo.com/download1/download1_707.shtml

I also have even stranger Japanese games. One is called Embodiment of Scarlet Devil. The other is Perfect Cherry Blossom. Both are so damn weird, that I won't play them. Both games are translated into English from Japanese. Game play is at the level of Rayging Blue in terms of fun. It is made by Shanghai Alice, a shareware independent developer. If you're absolutely obsessed with shooting games – download these two.

To download these games:

- 1.) Go to Google.com
- 2.) Type in Shanghai Alice
- 3.) hit the top link but translate it with the translate option.

I.Q.B. ver. 2.0.8 update | More VG Pictures! (2004-11-21 15:50)

My latest compiled html of Ian's Quintessential Blog is online. In this version, I made a new logo featuring Link and that girl from Final Fantasy 12 which I also had in Renegade Viking's Webpage 7.0. I fixed some color links. In 2.0.9 I will make small pings and force the fonts to get bigger. I can make them small enough where each png linking to a hyperlink is only 0.5 KB. That should be small enough for fast loading.

The past week I've been scanning Catharton boards for a good conversation. There are others like me who just want to talk about videogames and videogame systems. It's great because they don't exclude anyone. The Administrator talks to me a lot and I wonder if this is his primary hobby. I have 80 posts on there and he has 18,500 posts. There is a slight difference there. He's very educated about videogame culture. I learned he lives in Britain. He told me I had a brilliant avatar. He really is determined to promote his message board to other gamers around the world.

Few Internet updates are as follows.

1. I did update my videogame post. The number has now reached 340 games.
2. I.Q.B has now reached version 2.0.8. I changed the logo again. Updated some links. I took snap shots of my PC and GBA videogames. Plus after I come back from the game store – take a picture of some PS2/Xbox games as well. It's been a month already.
3. added a few more "Gaming Links" to this blog, the newest is Catharton

I've been playing Star Ocean 3: Till the End of Time on Friday night into Saturday morning. I think I'm into chapter 2. There are about 6 chapters in the game. It's fun to cheat via Action Replay, but cheating takes the fun out of spending 1 minute on every battle. With the level enhancing cheat – I can whoop ass in 25 seconds. I repeatedly hit the X button and the circle button to attack. The bonuses I get from the game add to my character's damage.

Metriod Prime 2 Echoesis out and I plan to get it. My point is from owners prospective – Metriod Prime 2 Echoes reached the same score as Legend of Zelda the Wind Waker. Games just can not buy friends. Friends do not show up at my doorstep. My friend went deer hunting today. Humph. No fun at-tal. The story is about continues exactly after the first one finished. Samus is put into a planet with two alternate dimensions. The world is caught into a struggle between good and evil. At this point – the evil side is winning. The alternate dimension is where you get obtain weapons that do damage to evil characters in the good dimension. It looks great – I am going to get it.

I read Metal Gear Solid 3 Snake Eater for the first time and realized that it beat Metroid Prime 2 by one stinking point! However, MGS3 uses the PS2's hardware to the limit while Metroid Prime 2 only got 9/10 in the visual department. I am hoping that the 9.0 of Metroid Prime two years ago isn't the same quality as Metroid Prime 2. The site did say that Metriod Prime 2 has better texturing than Metroid Prime which is a big deal because no game can match the prequel's quality of textures. It sounds cool because it has multiplayer in it. Maybe if Nintendo asks real nice – Konami will port Metal Gear Solid 3 to Gamecube. They've got Konami to port MGS and MGS2 to Gamecube didn't they? That would be beeping awesome if they had. I already know Konami is in the works of a PC version. MGS2 was strange because it came too all platforms including PC and MAC.

Though I am more a Samus fan than a Solid Snake fan so it'd be easy for me to spend my dollars on a Samus game. I swear – why do all the highly anticipated games come out within 1 week of each other? I don't know – it beats the hell outta me. I only got done with half way through Half-life 2. I haven't opened Halo 2 yet.

Here is how IGN.com scores the games from greatest to least:

GTA San Andreas – 9.9 out of 10 [status: bought]
Half-life 2 – 9.7 out of 10 [status: bought]
Halo 2 – 9.7 out of 10 [status: bought]

Metal Gear Solid 3 - 9.6 out of 10 [status: anticipation high]

Metroid Prime 2 - 9.5 out of 10 [status: anticipation high]

This is Ian signing out.

History of Ownership:

Playstation:

I believe the reason I waited until 2002 to get a Sony PSone is that I was a loyal Nintendo fan. I bought a Nintendo 64, Dreamcast and Gamecube, and GBA before the PSone. I wanted the RPGs! I wanted to own all the Final Fantasys out for it! When I got 3/4s of the Final Fantasy games, I bought some other RPGs like Chrono Cross and Vagrant Story. Then I collected Castlevania Symphony of the Night because I hear that game was very well designed.

I finished Legend of Dragoon, Chrono Cross and Final Fantasy 8 before I really didn't play it any longer. Now there are so many RPGs out for PS2 including Final Fantasy X (the reason why I bought a PS2). You can see my history of owning PS2 in that post. PSone was actually I rush to get as many good games for it at 11 to 30 dollars each. The most I ever paid for a PSone game was Final Fantasy Chronicles which was 50 dollars in 2002.

Nintendo 64: First console of the videogame legacy

Nintendo 64 was what started my interest in 3D games or Nintendo games for that matter. When I got a N64 Super Mario 64 was still wanted. A year after it's release – N64 games were 70 dollars! I bought Super Mario 64 for that amount. I also had Mario Kart 64 which soon to be the most played N64 game I had. Around the 6 or 7th game I got my first first person shooter and that game was Goldeneye. I must have had heard rumors in elementary school that Goldeneye was a great title to own. I heard right! It's one of RAREWARE's most famous games. My cousin and I played a lot of this game. Through out 1998 and 1999 I was a fan of the two Extreme G games. The fast paced action along with the techno in the game made the game cool. Remember, 64-bit graphics was really awesome in 1998. In 2000, my cousin and I played a Perfect Dark along with multiplayer Dreamcast games.

The first console capable of high resolution graphics. I remember that Dreamcast on 9.9.99 was the only console capable of high resolution 3D in my house. I made a website on Gamecube and Dreamcast called NDX Productions. NDX stands for Nintendo Dolphin Xtreme News Page. I was about 14 years old at the time. I was pretty amazed at the Sonic Adventure game which I downloaded in Quicktime. I played Sonic Adventure and completed all the character's story. My second game was Air Force Delta – a flight simulator that was very good. My 3rd game for Dreamcast was Speed Devils. My cousin and I played this game a lot. I was very fun. Then sometime last year Speed Devils stopped working because it has a big scratch in it. GDs are strange because you can't bring in the game and remove the scratch. Dreamcast was a big leap forward because for once I had CD quality sound in my TV. PS gamers have already gone through this stage, but it took me until 1999 to hear what digital game CD quality audio sounds like. I was just amazed in 1999 at the quality of music. Again I went from the midi sounding N64 to the CD quality audio Dreamcast. I will never hear something that amazing again. Sound will not improve – to the human ear – Dreamcast sounds exactly like an Gamecube or Xbox sound wise.

I got into RPGs with Grandia 2. I completed Grandia 2 in 2000. It was an amazing experience. I have played RPGs before on PC like Diablo 2, but this was much higher resolution than Diablo 2. Dreamcast had a web browser and I downloaded game saves off Planetweb.com. With Action Replays allowing you to download updates via broadband connection – there is no need for a web browser. Although I wouldn't be surprised if the British game code cracker Dattel (makers of Action Replay) won't add it into Action Replay Evo Edition 2.0. I also enjoyed Soul Caliber in 1999 and was my first 3D fighting game and certainly wasn't my last. That was very highly detailed game. It wowed me in 1999. I stopped supporting Dreamcast early this year. My last game is Record of Lacross War. RoLW is a Diablo clone. Today I don't play Dreamcast as much – but now I have 3 Dreamcasts. It is fun to know I supported Sega in it's final years. Sega still exists – but it's not the same. We were all confused why Sega wouldn't speak after E3 2001. Little did I know – they became a 3rd party developer. I mean I heard the rumors, but I was shocked at first when I had read Sega's statement at IGN. I was hoping for a Dreamcast 2. I underestimated the big hit at Sega due to piracy. Now Sega is now "Sega Sammy Corporation".

I create a comment each time I like a post on a site or if I have something to valuable to contribute to the conversation. Usually it is triggered by the fire communicated in the post I read. And after this article "PSone/N64/Dreamcast Collections". I was actually excited enough to post a comment :) I do have 2 questions for you if it's okay. Could it be simply me or do a few of these remarks come across like coming from brain dead folks? :-P And, if you are writing at additional online social sites, I would like to keep up with you.
